THE WILL OF QUEBEC

(From Today's Mail and Empire.)

So, the anti-conscriptionist Liberals are still a separate political sect. The Convention called under their auspices elected as the leader of the "National Liberal Party" one of the most pronounced of their adherents. Under such a leader the politicians who held to Sir Wilfrid Laurier will remain a peculiar group, between whom and the Liberal-Unionists there can be no rapprochement. The line of demarcation remains as fixed and impassable as it was in 1917. Mr. King, who was beaten as a Laurier and anti-conscription candidate in North York in the general election, can draw from this Province no allies of the present Opposition. The plans of the engineers of the Convention came to naught. It is the will of Quebec that rules the Opposition.

DOG ORDERED SHOT

Strange Dog Which Has Followed Wagons to be Shot in Two Days.

Wm. McClennan appeared in police court this morning charged with having a dog in his possession without a license for it.

McClennan pleaded not guilty. He swore the dog did not belong to him but started following the wagons leaving the gravel pit some time ago. He gave the dog away a couple of time but it returned to him. He was afraid to shoot the dog until he found its owner. Magistrate Dumble ordered the dog to be shot in two days and taken to the Incinerator. If the dog is still alive in two days a fine will be imposed. McClennan was given the right to shoot the dog.

AS THEY PASS BY

One day last week two well-known members of the Cobourg Motor League motored to Belleville. On the return trip, owing to a slight accident their car stalled on the road. In order to ascertain whether their crest of the Ontario Motor League stood for fraternity they decided to count the number of autos that passed them. Some fifty cars whizzed by but only two, both of which were driven by women, stopped to inquire if they could be of any assistance.

IN MEMORIAM

BLAKER—In Loving memory of Pte. Joshua Blaker, late of the 93rd Battalion, killed in action, August 8th, 1918.

I cannot say, and I will not say,
That he is dead—he is just away!
With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand
He has wandered into an unknown land,
And left us dreaming how very fair
It needs must be since he lingers there.
And you, oh you, who in loneliness yearn
For the old-time step and the glad return,
Think of him faring on, as dear
In the love of there as the love of here
Think of him still as the same, I say.
He is not dead—he is just away.

—From Wife and Baby Winnifred.

COUNCIL'S ACTION MUCH CRITICIZED

Many Say Returned Soldier Should Have Had Cost Accountant's Post on the Bridge.

BOTH QUALIFIED FOR POSITION

But Aldermen Violated Own Resolution in Favor of Defenders of Home and Country.

Council's action in not giving a returned soldier the position of cost account on the Hunter street bridge construction is severely critized in some quarters—not in objection to Mr. Alex. Elliott, the successful applicant, but on principle. The vote for Mr. Geo. Perks and Mr. Elliott stood a tie of four each on two showing of hands, but a third count switched three affirmative in the latter's favor. But a goodly section of the community contends that Perks, being a returned soldier, should have had the preference were he qualified for the position, which it seems he is. Such preference was promised the boys when they went overseas, it is argued, and that pledged should be redeemed on their return.

It must be remembered that the appointment of cost accountant was made by the Board of Works and embodied in its report to Council, which body adopted the report. There were no yeas and nays taken, and thus no record kept of how each alderman voted. It was not thought necessary. Five names were voted on in the Board of Works, the lowest dropping out each vote until but Elliott and Perks remained. Each of these men polled 4 votes each count until the final one, when three applied their lost votes in favor of Mr. Elliott. The method of procedure was correct and parliamentary on this occasion although the same cannot be said of all transactions by the city Council.

There is no doubt that long association with Mr. Elliott—a thoroughly capably man—gave him the advantage with some aldermen even before the position was advertised, which is natural the way human nature runs; and it is equally certain from expressed opinions before inserting the advertisement that the aldermen in general had little hope of getting a returned man qualified for this position. But it is equally plain that, unfortunately, in this appointment [illegible] as violated its own resolution that a returned soldier should be given preference whenever qualified for whatever is going in the gift of the city.

An outstanding feature in this whole transaction is that the call for a returned soldier was pretty general by the aldermen when considering the need for both an inspector of pavement work and an accountant at the bridge. However, a returned fighting man got the former position while a returned qualified volunteer was less fortunate in applying for the latter post.

FIRE PROTECTION FOR NEW SCHOOL

Council Will Ask That a 12 Inch Main Be Extended Along the Monaghan Road.

PLAN OF THE UTILITIES COM.

Use Five Inch Mains Contingent to Site at Present With Two More Hydrants.

A communciation from the School Board asks that the following recommendations of Superintendent Dobbin of the Utilities Commission as to fire protection for the new Southwest Ward school be carried out by the city:

At present there are the following mains available in the vicinity:

A 5-inch main in Patterson street, coming to a dead line on the east line of the Monaghan Road, and a 5-inch main on Sherbrooke street, ending at an hydrant on the northeast corner of Monaghan Road.

It is the intention of the Utilities Commission to extend a 12-inch main on Monaghan Road, from the corner of King to Chamberlain street. Until this work is completed the fire pressure in vicinity of the new school will not be of the best; but as long as the present high cost of connecting water mains continues, the commissioners are not likely to proceed with the installation.

For the present the best arrangement would be to extend the 5-inch main on Sherbrooke street westerly about 300 feet and set a hydrant in line with the west line of the building. Also another hydrant should be placed at the end of the Patterson street main.

The above two hydrants, together with one at present at the corner of Sherbrooke street and Monaghan Road, would give a fair measure of fire protection for the new school. When the 12-inch main is extended along the Monaghan Road a hydrant could be set opposite the school.

This matter was discussed by the Fire, Water and Light Committee last night.

Not Very Effective.

Chief Grange said five-inch mains would not be effective. If anything happened at this point there would be no fire pressure to any account. Continue the 12-inch main on Monaghan Road now, be urged, at all costs.

Ald. Garside and Ald. Taylor moved that the Utilities Commission be requested to continue the 12-inch main on the Monaghan Road as soon as possible.

SERGT. BLADE MAY CONTINUE TO RUN SIDE LINES IN OFF HOURS

A letter was read from the Peterborough branch of the G.W.V..A, in which they protested against Sergt. Blade engaging in washing and drivin autos and selling insurance in his off hours. They claimed that a civic employee should be forbidden to work during his off hours, so as to protect the working man. The commission did not see that it was in their power to dictate to their employees what they could or could not do during the hours they were not working for the city.

Silent Policemen.

It was decided that the Mayor should have a special constable sworn in to regulate the traffic on Hunter street where the construction of the bridge interferes with traffic.

The use of silent policemen, which are used in many cities, was approved of and Chief Thompson was requested to send for quotations for them.

The Safety of Pedestrians.

The commission gave their consent to Chief Thompson to mark off darer zones at the corners where street cars most frequently stand especially the intersection of Charlotte and George streets. These zones will be indicated by lines drawn six feet from the rear of a street car standing at the corner. While the car is taking on or letting off passengers no automobile may cross this line. This will prevent a great deal of confusion for passengers getting off and on the street cars.

ARCHDUKE JOSEPH DECLARES HE WILL EXECUTE FULLY TERMS OF ARMISTICE

Asks Authority to Send Delegates to Paris—Will Select Assembly to Re-Organize Labor With View to Increased Production—Italy Suspicious of Move to Restore Hapsburg Empire.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, August 9.—At today's session of the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference consideration was given to a message from Archduke Joseph, head of the new Hungarian Government, announcing the intention of his regime to execute the terms of the armistice and asking recognition and authorization to send delegates to Paris.

Outlines Policy.

A message received from the archduke outlines the policy of the new government, and says it will call a properly selected constitutional assembly to reorganize labor with a view to increasing production.

This Paper Suspicious.

Rome, Friday. — Commenting on the situation in Hungary, the Popolo Romano suggests the possibility that Archduke Joseph is aiming to restore the Hapsburg monarchy and again join Vienna and Budapest.

The annexation of Croatia and Slavonia may follow, the newspaper says, as these two regions are more bitter against the Serbians than against the Italians. "The Hapsburg empire having lost only Galicia and Bohemia, then would consider Fiume as its natural outlet. That is why Fiume was refused us."

Keep Eye on Trieste.

"We must keep an eye on Trieste also, the last disorder there having assumed the character of a political plot organized by pro-Austrian elements."

Entente in Accord.

Geneva, August 9.—The Inter-Allied mission at Budapest, after a conference with Archduke Joseph and Premier Friederich, has forwarded to Clemenceau a report to the effect that the Entente representatives are in full accord with the new Hungarian government, according to a Vienna despatch received here.

What Is The Truth About Coal?

In an advertisement imploring the public to buy their coal now, published recently in various daily newspapers over the name of the National Coal Association Commercial Bank building, Washington D. C., appears the very disquieting statement:

Coal shortage coming—U. S. Fuel Administration.

Labor shortage pending—says U S Secretary of Labor.

This apparently very earnest and conscientious appeal continues:

Listen to and heed what your Government officials say. We are telling you the coal situation as we know it. Moreover, every thing we are saying is based upon the officials statements of the highest Government authorities.

Forty thousand foreign-born miners are returning to Europe. There is virtually no immigration; consequently the men cannot be replaced. Their departure alone means a reduction of forty million tons in the coal output of the year—twenty million tons for the remainder of 1919.

Government chiefs have issued warnings to buy coal now, Harry A. Garfield, United States Fuel Administrator, warns:

Buy now—in August or Autumn will be too late. A big coal shortage is coming.

Director General Hines, of the United States Railroad Administration, warns the coal consumer that unless he buys coal this summer he is going to find it difficult to get it this fall and winter.

Secretary of Labor, Wilson says —Those who postpone buying coal in the hope of lower prices are speculating in the future misfortunes of the nation.

In the New York Evening World of July 7 and 8, 1919, were two articles on the coal situation, purporting to be specials from a staff correspondent, that, if authentic, make Ananias look like a piker when compared with this philanthropic National Coal Association. The following are some of the statements appearing in the Evening World:

Cleverly placed publicity by the coal interests declares that coal will be very scarce and the public must quickly buy or suffer the terrible consequences because of labor shortage and like reasons.

As a matter of fact there are now in millions of tons of coal ready for the public to buy. In one section.

TOGETHER IN LIFE UNITED IN DEATH

MR AND MRS. JOHN C. BELL

MANY FRIENDS ATTEND OBSEQUIES OF ESTEEMED COUPLE.

A Toronto paper has the following account of the funeral of Mr. and Mrs. John Caddy Bell, the aged Peterborough couple who were killed by a train at Riverdale Park in Toronto last Tuesday evening:

Tender rays of sunlight filtered into the room at 2390 Gerrard street east, where Mr. and Mrs. John Caddy Bell, victims of Tuesday night's level crossing tragedy, lay in their last long sleep.

The sunlight fell softly on the peaceful old faces and gently silvered the thin grey locks. Together the couple had traced the primrose path of youth, together they had faced the sunshine and shadow of 54 years of married life, and it seemed fitting that they should embark toge-

TROUBLE OVER AN INJURED HORSE

HIRED TO BOARD OF WORKS THE ANIMAL IS NOW INCAPACIATED.

The black horse belonging to the Board of Works and stabled at the Fire Hall, took sick and was sent to pasture.

Herbert Hamlon then rented his rose to the Board of Works for 50c a day and its board.

On July 23, by his permission the fire department used the animal to cart 1500 feet of hose down to the Exhibition grounds to fill a tank for Polack Bros. show.

Since that time the horse has been laid up, its leg badly swollen and quite lame, and now Hamlon is claiming damages. The horse in the meantime is living at the city's expense for keep and veterinary attendance, and the Board of Works and Fire, Water and Light Committee are in a dilemma as to responsibility for the animal's condition.

Fire Chief Grange told the Fire, Water and Light Committee last night that the cause of the horse's condition could not be traced to negligence to his men either in the stable or when used on July 23. The horse, when rented, he said, had just come off the grass, and might have been overfed. Hamlon had access to the feed.

The Chairmen of the two civic departments affected by this incident will look into the matter and report.

HUNTING FOR SUB FIRE STATION NOW

ADEQUATE PROTECTION MUST BE PROVIDED EAST CITY.

Civic officials are today hunting up options on property for a sub-fire station in East City— maybe of a permanent nature.

This fire protection is coming to residents across the water at any rate during the construction of the new bridge, and must be provided at once.

The Fire, Water and Light Comherents of King. The supporters of premises on Hunter street in view Here there is good ground floor space plenty of ground, and first class stabling and loft facilities. This lot has a 42 foot front.

Fire Chief Grange pointed out that in selecting temporary accommodation it would never do to have men, horses and apparatus quartered at different spots.

Traffic Director

His Worship last evening pointed out that a traffic director is needed when construction work on the new bridge is in progress; and provision in this regard will probably be forthcoming.

EIGHT GREAT WELCOME ARCHES READY FOR RECEPTION OF PRINCE AT ST. JOHNS

Special Precautions Against Icebergs in Route of Royal Visitors.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

St. John's, Nfld., Aug. 9.—Special precautions against the possible presence of ice floes and bergs in the path of battle ship "Renown" bringing the Price of Wales to this colony and Canada were taken today.

It was announced that the cruiser "Dauntless," which preceeded the escorting fleet to arrange for the Prince's reception here, would cruise about the Grand Banks for the purpose of locating ice, and would then proceed to sea to escort the "Renown" to her anchorage in Conception Bay. Several unusually large bergs have been reported in the vicinity of Shipping Lanes during the week.

Preparations for the Royal visitor's reception were being hurried today. The cruiser "Dragon," to which the Prince will be transferred from the "Renown," will enter this harbor Tuesday and will be escorted through long lanes of gailey decked naval and commercial craft. It is planned that the Prince shall land at noon, and after receiving homage from colonial and city officials, ride beneath eight great welcome arches.

SECRET MOVEMENT TO PROMOTE A GENERAL GERMAN RY. STRIKE

Sparticist and Communist Agitators the Leaders it is Charged---Object to Appropriate Power by Stoppage of Transportation---Government Taking Measures to Suppress the Movement

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Berlin (Friday), Aug. 8.—The Government announces the discovery of an extensive secret strike movement, which, if successful, will lead to a general railroad strike in central and perhaps all of Germany, on Sept 1.

Sparticists and Communist agitators are charged with being leaders of this movement which the Government is using every means to suppress. The discovery was made just when Germany thought itself quieting down, while the [illegible] of the world rioted and struck.

The object of the strike leaders is to appropriate power, the first necessity of which is the stoppage of transportation to prevent the distribution of food and coal.

The movement, which is already wide spread, began at Erfurt, where at a huge meeting controlled by Communists, held last night, the strike was decided upon. This action is not understandable, because the Government has not only carried out promises made at the time of the last railroad dispute was settled, but has introduced other preference.

CITY WILL SEEK RELIEF FROM SHARE OF MAINTAINING GATEMEN AT CROSSINGS

Cost Has Assumed Large Proportions—Will Interview Dominion Railway Board

The City's Legal Committee has decided to get after the Dominion Railway Board in an effort to secure relief for the city from sharing a portion of the cost of maintaining flagen at level railway crossings.

Ald. Phelan pointed out last night that the percentage of the city's share for each crossing is not the same—it varies from 10, 15, 25 per cent and one third the total cost. He considered these charges against the town in protection of the public from a danger created by the railways alone, a rank injustice. In earlier days, he said, when gatemen were getting meagre pay and working 12 hours a day; the cost to the city was so small as to escape attention; but nowadays with flagmen earning $3.10 a day of eight hours it is a horse of another color. Besides these men's wages, he declared, the City is charged with a share of the cost of light, heat, water in fact, everything connected with the maintenance of these gate houses and flagmen. Ex-Mayor Kendry, he said, threshed out the matter of the Charlotte, Simcoe and George street crossings with the Railway Board, and secured a relief of any share in their protection upkeep for all time to come. The Council of 1919, he concluded should follow in ex-Mayor Kendry's footsteps.

Enquire Elsewhere

Mayor Duncan thought information sholud be sought from other towns similarto Peterborough as to what their pay; if at all toward the cost of maintaining railway crossings.

On motion of Ald. McIntyre and Morrison this suggestion will be followed, and Chairman Ald. Edgar and Ald Phelan interview the Dominion Railway Board on the matter.

One Man Cars

In reply to a suggestion from the Trades and Labor Council that one man street cars are not altogether safe, and an enquiry as to the legality of their operation, committee decided that one man cars are giving satisfaction and are considered perfectly safe. They also will advise the Trades and Labor body that if they have any complaints they had better forward them to the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario.

Members Present

Ald. Edgar, chairman; Mayor Duncan, Ald. McIntyre, Morrison and Taylor.

ONTARIO LIBERALS ARE DISGRUNTLED

"Quebec Elected King Leader, Let Them Make Him Premier."

Ottawa, Aug. 9.—Quebec and the Laurier Liberals had their triumph when they elected Hon. Mackenzie King, Leader of the Liberal Party. They are leaving Ottawa enthusiastic for their new chieftain but the same cannot be said for the Unionist Liberals, even the Ontario Laurier Liberals, and those members who wanted to see a reunion of the two elements. It was thumbs down for Unionists yesterday and all the prestige of the provincial premiers could not stem the tide. They were all for Felding. Not even the powerful influence of Sir Lomer Gouin could hold Quebec. The young nationalists of the party were determined they would have nothing to do with Fielding. They were enthusiastic for King. They rebeled against their leaders and swung solidly for King.

While the vote was not given out by provinces it is understood that of the last ballot there were 222 Quebec votes for King and 75 for Fielding, so that the new leader secured nearly half the vote which elected him from the French- Canadian province.

There was a bitter feeling engineered by the fight for the leadership particularly between the Ontario supporters of Graham and the adherents of King. The supoprters of Graham blamed some one in the King camp for starting the story that Sir Clifford Sifton was supporting the ex-Minister of Railways. It was a clevel political dodge and undoubtedly lost Graham many votes.

One prominent Graham supporter as he left the hall was heard to mutter, "Quebec elected Mackenzie King, let Quebec elect him Premier." The feeling is now that the next election will be fought on economic grounds.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1919

PATRONIZE HOME TALENT.

NO CITY CAN BE BUILT UP unless there is on the part of the residents a disposition to spend their money at home. The Board of Trade plastered the bill boards of the city with placards urging the people to spend their money with local merchants, and the campaign was one of the best ever undertaken by that public-spirited organization.

Local talent as well as local industry is, however, entitled to some consideration and should be encouraged, just as is the home dealer in groceries and dry goods, and the manufacturer, who is, more than anyone else, free from the danger of subsidized or otherwise assisted competition. When a public entertainment is staged and the patronage of the general public invited, it is only a matter of justice that as far as possible some recognition be extended to local artists, who are well qualified to help in furnishing the program.

Peterborough has three bands, all of them struggling for a corporate existence, all of them competent in their professional line. One of these bands has done more than any other local organization to place Peterborough on the musical map of the country. It has been for years the city's one best asset as an advertising medium, having won honors abroad time after time.

Peterborough has theatrical artists, too, who have won distinction and brought honorable publicity to the city on the stage not only in Canada but in the United States. The citizens are naturally as proud of these artists as they are of some of the leading manufacturing institutions.

When an entertainment of purely civic scope is put on in the city, local talent as far as possible should be secured for the occasion. Why bring in an outside band for example, at heavy expense, while local bands are ignored? Why import for the day vaudeville performers while home-born talent is available? The man who sends his money out of town for merchandise is regarded in some quarters as an enemy to the welfare of the community. Sending money out of town for musical or other experts is equally undesirable while the very best can be secured at home.

No city can flourish on amusement alone, but entertainment is necessary. Still there is a principle involved. The engagement of home talent, however, is emphasised here in the light of current events. Don't preach one policy and then practise another. Be consistent at least.

Of course, the Board of Trade, the champions of home enterprise, are in no sense responsible for the situation here noted. But individual members of that organization are, men who can evidently change their attire with every shift of the breeze.

THE NEW LEADER AND LABOR.

ONE OF THE CHIEF arguments used by the supporters of the new Liberal leader in support of their contention as to his fitness for office is the allegation that Mr. King is a friend of Labor. One of the first local men of note to fall in worshipful attitude before the new leader says that Mr. King's connection with the Rockefeller Foundation gave him an excellent experience and an insight into social problems. Then the local worshipper feels constrained to offer a word of apology for Mr. King's connection with that institution of theorists, probably foreseeing that exception might be taken in the future to the new leader's former association with a man who has wrung hundreds of millions of dollars out of the American and Canadian public, the star monopolist of them all in an age of monopoly. Mr. Rockefeller, it seems, was not directly active in the work of the Foundation. He simply furnished the money, and there you have the explanation.

John D. Rockefeller was willing to spend one of his many millions to learn for his own enlightenment, not for any general good that might result, how it happens that one man can become a multi-millionaire while so many others who spend their lives in his service die in the poor-house. Mr. King was one of the men selected to obtain this information. While he was so employed he was paid for his services out of the tainted money chest of the oil mogul. It really makes very little difference in law or in fact whether Mr. Rockefeller was in daily communication with him or not. The point is that he drew his wages from that magnate.

No practical results have followed the investigation, even in the United States, where it was conducted. No practical results can be hoped for in Canada. The Foundation spun a lot of fine theories and got no further. Mr. King is in the position of the doctor who admits that cancer is a fatal disease, but who, in common with the rest of the members of his profession, is unable to provide a remedy. Labor the civilized world over has been fed to repletion upon academic theories. The humblest member of the labor union that meets twice a month knows just as well as does any college graduate or social economist exactly what is wrong. What he wants is less of theory and more of practice.

Can Mr. King, even if so disposed, give effect to his theories? He is in the wrong position for that task. It has already been established that the labor problem is one with which the various provinces have to deal, except so far as the Federal employes are concerned. General jurisdiction has been claimed for the Industrial Disputes Act on the ground that its operation applies only to public utilities, and even that operation has been found to adversely affect the men, being capable of one-sided application. Labor in Canada will not be hoodwinked. It knows by experience that it has nothing to expect from the Liberal party as a unit or from any velvet-palmed individual with whom social economy is a fad, just as slumming is a pastime with some women in the larger cities of the country.

Pensions for the aged is one of the planks in the new Liberal platform. The plank has been stolen bodily from the Conservative party. Before the war broke out a committee was appointed by Parliament to look into this very question, and of that committee the present Federal member for West Peterborough is chairman. A vast amount of evidence was collected, and the report submitted to Parliament is now a public document.

The war has changed the entire situation. If the Liberal party were returned to power tomorrow they would find the question of pensioning the soldiers and providing for other war expenditures a problem sufficiently overshadowing to prevent the assuming of any further obligations for the immediate present at least.

BY NO MEANS UNANIMOUS.

THE FRENCH DAILIES of Quebec are a unit in approving of the selection of Mackenzie King to the leadership of the Liberal party. Mr. King was evidently the choice of that province, and it was the votes of the French-Canadian delegation that placed him in office.

Not all the newspapers in Ontario find it possible to work up the same degree of enthusiasm as that with which some of the devout in Peterborough hail the new chieftain through the medium of the local organ. For example, the Brantford Expositor, one of the leading provincial Liberal dailies, cannot conceal its disappointment and is constrained to admit something of a shock. It says:

> "The platform adopted by the convention will not excite particular attention because it contains no surprises. The greatest surprise is the choice of the leader. It certainly is something of a shock, but one from which it is easily possible to recover, to find the grandson of that "Arch-rebel," William Lyon Mackenzie, placed at the head of one of the great political parties in Canada.
> "For some reason he has been a favorite with the Quebeckers, but this fact will not prove an asset to him in the rest of the Dominion. Nor will it help to cement the party ranks that he should have been one of the anti-conscriptionist Liberals, and one who suffered defeat in the last general election in the constituency of North York."

THE MAN IN THE GLASS HOUSE.

A SPECIAL DESPATCH from Ottawa to the Toronto Star, dealing with the election of the new Liberal leader, says that no antagonism to Liberal-Unionists, but an attention to the future, forgetting any differences in the past, are expected to be the lines to be followed by Hon. L. Mackenzie King in his leadership. Although he would not speak for publication, it is generally understood here, indeed it is confidently affirmed by those who know his views, that under him there will be no policy of recrimination or antagonism.

Quite so. The man who lives in a glass house is generally ready to enter into a compact with his neighbors that there shall be no promiscuous throwing of stones.

EASY FOR BORDEN AND HEARST.

(Toronto Telegram.)

IF SIR ROBERT BORDEN cannot win against such a leader as Hon. W. L. M. King, and Sir William Hearst cannot win against such a leader as Hartley H. Dewart, K.C., M.P.P., neither the Premier of Canada nor the Premier of Ontario deserve to win.

POSITIONS FOR VETERANS.

THE QUESTION of providing employment for returned soldiers has put more than one municipal council into a hole, but this would not be the case if such councils would pursue a consistent course and abstain from anything like political manoeuvres. Actual practice should be in accord with profession as set forth in high-sounding resolutions preserved in the official records.

There are men too old for military service who were laid off during the war as a matter of economy, men in private employment and in public office. They, too, have been called upon to endure a sacrifice. When former conditions are restored and it comes to a question of filling these places again, the men who originally held them are entitled to some consideration. The veterans themselves, who have all these years been the champions of the cause of the aged and the helpless, would be among the first to agree to this.

The man physically unfit for military service who has held a position formerly occupied by a veteran of the war, cannot object if he is asked to vacate when that veteran returns to resume his duties.

When a new office is created by a city council, there should be no question as to filling it. The soldier, all things being equal as to qualification, should be given first choice. This is a proposition that admits of no argument where the city council has placed itself on record as favoring veterans for civic offices, so long as they are equipped for the position.

TO-DAY'S STORY

"I didn't come to buy. I came to see."

This frank confession was made by a white-haired, kindly soul, who was not averse to a bit of gossip about the auction. She knew every article of furniture in the house and its history. A charming clock was held on high by the energetic auctioneer, standing above the crowd on the veranda. It was not a grandfather clock, nor yet a modern one—a sort of a great-uncle of a timepiece. It started at $6.00 and was run up to $26.00 in a jiffy.

"Done at twenty-six," announced the auctioneer and tossed the clock key to a fur-coated motorist, whose face wore the smile of bland contentment of an auction enthusiast—before he pays his bill.

If Frank Could Know.

"Frank never paid but five dollars for that clock," the kindly soul informed me in a delighted whisper. "I was at Widow Daley's auction where he bought it. And sold for twenty-six! Dear me, I wish Frank could know it," she sighed.

The only flaw in the whole occasion semed to be that Frank could not attend the sale of the belongings he had gathered from so many other auctions.

"He didn't have any kin to will his things to," explained my elderly friend.

A thin woman, whose mouth snapped together like a purse, stood beside a plump one, whose shoulders shook in a jolly fashion when she laughed. A luxurious armchair was put up. It started at twenty dollars and went for sixty.

Didn't Care to "Set."

"I thought you was going to bid on that chair, Mrs. Dolan," sniggered the thin woman.

The stout woman was game.

"I don't care much about settin'," she retorted.

Meantime Rover wandered about among the crowd. He was a brindle dog of the breed that has guarded farms and brought up farmer's children ever since I can remember and before. He had been Frank's dog and he now felt the responsibility of being host. He wormed his way among the legs and skirts that crowded the front porch where the auctioning was going on, a little puzzled and somewhat worried, but always most courteous. Every little while he dropped out into the kitchen, where a caterer was selling coffee and sandwiches behind a counter improvised of the ironing boards and the flour barrel. Rover shared the sandwiches of those who were acquainted with him and wondered why so many people said, "Poor Felow."

The Four-Poster Goes.

"I will now sell the bed in the south room upstairs. We can't bring it out on the veranda, but you've all seen it. Everything on that bed goes just as they are, mattress, bolster and pillows." ("Them mattresses is made out of feather beds. You can't get 'em now," a voice murmured to my ear.) "Start at forty dollars. Forty dollars, any one give fifty; forty dollars bid, make it fifty; thank you sir; fifty dollars bid, make it sixty. Well, don't nod your head madam, if you don't mean it. All done, everybody done—sold to Mr. — sorry, sir, can't get your name no shape. Thank you, Mr. Egan. No madam, it's sold. You must speak quicker next time."

The auctioneer showed his ability when he reached the bookcase. Books were not in his line, but that did not trouble him.

"We'll go ahead on these books. Who'll buy these volumes of—ah—of literature?"

"What are they?" inquired a voice.

"Two volumes ma'am," was the enlightening reply. "Two volumes of this style here."

An auction is a frightfully intimate affair. An oil painting of conventional hills and trees, framed in tarnished and beautiful gilt, hung in the back parlor. It was lifted down and passed out the window to the auctioneer.

"She painted that herself," murmured the woman at my elbow.

"Yes, I bought this comfortable," admits a shrewd housekeper. "It's the only thing that was cheap."

"Some has bought more than they can pay for," commented my new friend with unaccustomed pessimism. But she had been disappointed about a rag rug.

The thin woman with a tight mouth grasped a hat tree which spread iron hooks over her head.

"Great changes take place in this world,' 'she remarked profoundly.

Rover sat on the top step, with a slightly worried and somewhat puzzled expression, thumping his tail politely on the floor as the automobiles carried his home away in pieces.

The man with a swelled head usually wears a small hat.

The Utility Of One-Armed Men

The idea that because a man has lost an arm or part of one, he is, generally speaking, useless for work in any practical line of endeavor, seems to be very prevalent, and is absolutely incorrect.

One-armed men for years are and have been successful farmers, and tests carried out by the Vocational Branch of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment have demonstrated that a man with only a four-inch stump on his right arm fitted with a working arm and suitable appliance, was able to do most of the jobs about a farm, hoeing, digging with both spade and shovel, digging post holes, and buiding wire fences, feeding and taking care of stock, harnessing and driving team pitching hay, planting and transplatig trees and plants, weighing milk cans, loading them on the milk waggon, and driving farm tractors. From a series of tests caried out in the Curative Workshops of the Dominion Orthopaedic Hospital, Toronto, it has been fully demonstrated that arm amputations can do a whole lot of successful work in cabinet making and handling such tools as hammer, saw, chisel, screw driver, and other tools necessary to this kind of work.

One man has developed a passion for carving with a penknife and shows considerable genius and ability, turning out splendid work. In fact it has been amply demonstrated that a man suffering an arm amputation can render himself 100 per cent. efficient in many lines of endeavour.

Of course the man himself, his disposition, his tastes and abilities, must be taken into account together with his grit and determination to get on and make a useful citizen of himself once more.

"I have been greatly delighted," said a visiting chaplain of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, with the general tone and spirit of the returned men in my talks with them about their own and their country's future, and I have made a point of trying to impress upon them the valuable service they can still render to Canada by the two-fold attitude of stern opposition to every form of injustice and the loyal support of constituted authority."

Through such personal contact, in addition to the national service expressed above, the men of the Chaplain Service Branch of the Department are rendering a valuable amount of social service. By frequent visits to those in homes and hospitals they carry cheer to the discouraged, link them up with the outside world and often prove the intermediary between them and various departments of relief and assistance, and in addition are the means of providing many treats and outings which otherwise might be entirely missed but for the reminder of the chaplain on the job that the men are in need of recreation.

As an instance of splendid co-operation, In one unit no less than five denominations joined together under the guidance of the chaplain to provide music and cheer for the hospital patients.

The chaplain stands ready at all times to play the comrade to the man who is returning to civilian life. It may be in the matter of provision for sports; organizing a baseball team; or getting up a concert, but whatever it may be that will bring him into intimate touch with the lives of the men and give an opportunity for service—he is on the job.

PLUMER, THE POLITE

Sir Herbert Plumer, is one of the most brilliant soldiers in the British army. He is the one who took Messines Ridge, "the biggest bang" of the world-war as it has been described.

His military record, in fact, has been one steady run of success. From his service in the Soudan in the early eighties, through the South African war to the day the armistice was signed, he never made a mistake. In the hottest battle he keeps as cool and unruffled as if he were on parade.

Plumer's politeness and extreme tidyness in dress have earned him the nickname of the "Dandy General." He wears a monocle which he is said not to take out of his eye even when he sleeps. His commands are always given with a "please," and he, unlike so many others in responsible positions, never forgets to give praise for any job done well.

During the advance of Mafeking a shell fell close to his horse, causing the animal to kick up a cloud of dust. Colonel Plumer, as he was then, calmly flicked his sleeve and said to his aide-de-camp, "Be so kind as to go to the officer in charge and ask him to be good enough to silence that gun!"

He has had some amusing experiences, and was once nearly killed for being a wizard.

In one of his early expeditions in Africa he was washing his teeth in the river and had used a few drops of eau-de-cologne for the purpose. The scent made the water turn milky, and the natives, not knowing anything about eau-de-cologne, accused him of poisoning the water by breathing on it!

TO PREVENT BOLSHEVISM

"The best material for the making of a Bolshevist is a hungry man. Give sane, Canadian labor a decent chance to live, and it has no more use for this 'red revolutionary' idea than you have," said Silby Barrett, international board member of the United Mine Workers of America, at Halifax.

"Nova Scotia labor is sound," Mr Barrett went on, "but I want to solemnly uniform the Government and people that unless speedy relief is forthcoming, the conditions existing today in some industrial districts in Cape Breton Island are going to lead to—who can say what they might not lead to? The people of Nova Scotia are a peace-loving, hard-working people. Give them work and a fair show and you will never hear a murmur from them. But some of them are being asked to do an impossible thing—they are being asked to live on nothing."

Mr. Barett made these statements in connection with the situation in Sydney mines and Inverness, where he states that some men are working only three days a fortnight, while many steel workers are out of work entirely.

Senator Cummins, chairman of the U. S. Interstate Commerce Commission, says nationalization of railroads would be a step toward Socialism, which could not be taken without ultimate nationalization of all industy.

A CRIPPLE FOR THREE YEARS

Helpless In Bed With Rheumatism Until He Took "FRUIT-A-TIVES".

MR. ALEXANDER MUNRO

R.R. No. 1, Lorne, Ont.

"For over three years, I was confined to bed with Rheumatism. During that time, I had treatment from a number of doctors, and tried nearly everything I saw advertised to cure Rheumatism, without receiving any benefit.

Finally, I decided to try 'Fruit-a-tives'. Before I had used half a box, I noticed an improvement; the pain was not so severe, and the swelling started to go down.

I continued taking this fruit medicine, improving all the time, and now I can walk about two miles and do light chores about the place".

ALEXANDER MUNRO.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. At all dealers or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Pullman Snoozing Impossible With Mabel Normand Aboard

Sleeping in a Pullman car, most people find, is at best a trying ordeal. Imagine anyone attempting to win his way into the arms of Morpheus with Mabel Normand aboard and feeling her usual prankful self! Twenty travel-stained passengers find even a snooze impossible in the comedienne's latest Goldwyn Picture "A Perfect 36," which comes to the Grand Theatre, beginning Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

Miss Normand plays the role of Mabel, a maid-of-all-work in a moderate priced boarding house. The pranks she plays on the landlady brings about her dismissal, and when things look gloomy for Mabel, who of all persons steps into the breach but Sol Manheimer, who manufactures waists in his apartment at the boarding house. His only salesman is called to the army and Manheimer proposed that Mabel takes his place on the road. Mabel, delighted with the opporunity, consents.

Her employer makes reservations for her on a night flyer and for the first time Mabel makes her way into a sleeping car. Everything, of course, is new to her, but that doesn't keep the little madcap from starting a riot of fun and frolic that sends everyone into a frenzy, including the colored porter and the austere Pullman conductor, to whom the passengers spend the night complaining.

Mabel's campaign begins when she spies a fat man who has to be content with an upper berth, coming down the aisle with a step-ladder. Mabel [illegible] gets her feet mixed up with his and he makes an ungraceful flop across the lap of a portly woman while the ladder falls kerplunk on the silk hat of a young bridegroom in the next seat. Mabel is profuse in her apologies and quiet is restored.

No one could blame Mabel for the next in her series of pranks. On her way to the ladies' room Mabel nibbles a pear. She has decided to be good for a little while, but how could anyone, let alone Mabel, be good when a man is snoring at a rate faster than the train is going? So Mabel gets into the other pasenger's good graces by climbing a ladder and throwing the pear into the mouth of the snorer. She effects a cure, for he sleeps more quietly after that.

Then Mabel cuddles into her birth but, unknown to her, her knee rests against the push button. The porter rushes to her side, but the ringing continues, while all the other passengers implore the porter to have the noise stopped. Finally he makes Mabel understand that the Pullman company never intended the push button as a resting spot for knees.

An hour later there is more confusion when Mabel sees the porter make off with her shoes. It is almost daybreak before he convinces Mabel that he took the shoes to shine them and not for his own lady love, as she supposed.

MOVIES IN THE HIGHEST ORDER

The movies at the Grand last night were of the usual niteresting, educational order. Those taking the leading parts in the pictures are ranked very high among American moving picture artists.

The Story.

The story is good and the details are worked out marvellously well. This story is very compact, nothing being shown which might be unnecessary in the story. It is a story of a young girl who grew discontented in her country town. She was left a small amount of money, which appeared very large to her and she headed for the city. She met an actress whom she had met in her home town and was taken in. She could not stand the strange familiarity of the show manager and was driven onto the street. She lost her last loaf of bread on her way home on evening and discovered it on the table of a restaurant where a couple of intoxicated men had carried it for a joke. Tormented by hunger she rushed in after her bread. Her appearance in her wet cheap gowns drenched with rain and disarranged hair has a peculiar strange beauty in this scene. She is recognized by an author who had been inspired to write "Inocent Eyes" by different encounters with her before. He gives the credit of his success to her beauty, tells her so and they both are glad.

"Blackie's Redemption."

Bert Lytell in "Blackie's Redemption" plays upon the emotions of the audience. The story is exceedingly interesting and at the same time it has a certain educational and moral value. The acting in this picture is of the highest degree of proficiency.

The story in itself is well worth reading and remembering and when shown on the screen has a special attraction. Blackie is a very clever crook who is to be married and has promised to live in the straight and narrow path. While they were eating the farewell supper detectives entered on the trace of the authors of a jewel robbery. The count, a crook, among the crooks, slipped the jewel into Blackie's pocket. Blackie was sent up for twenty years for a crime he had not committed on the eve of his wedding day. While in prison he ate lime to get into the hospital. He escaped from his hospital cell and returned to his girl. They fled and were safe for some time. The way in which the warden of the jail traced Blackie is interesting and exciting. He enters the room of the fugitive couple, but Blackie disguised as an old woman covers him with his gun. This is a very emotional scene where Blackie offers the warden a square break but refuses to kill him in cold blood. The warden in reward turns the detectives off Blackie's trail and the happy couple sail for Honolula. Before leaving Blackie gets his revenge on the count by cleverly crossing him in a safe robbery and getting him sent down for twenty years.

Lee and Moran in the comedy was even better than usual. The way their wives fooled them, they fooled their wives and the constable broke up the fun is very humorous and arresting.

Name It.

Shall the man or the woman who operates a tractor be known as a tractorator, a tracterist or a tractioneer? That is a question an answer to which is desired by large numbers of students at the tractor schools now being established in various parts of the United States. Tractor operations have been carried on in a somewhat hit-or-miss fashion thus far, but now the industry is being stabilized and permanent terms of expression are needed. Farming, in its relation to tractors, has apparently been set forward a good ten years by the war. Tractor production has outstripped the training of operators. Every farm boy was brought up to manage a horse, but this big steel beast must be handled in quite a different way. State tractor schools provide a short cut for turning out tractor operators, whatever they are to be called.—Christian Science Monitor.

Superior Knowledge.

A young man was walking through a wood with a gun over his shoulder and his bag full of game which he had shot. He was not satisfied with what he had, and was looking for more, when an excited man with a large tin badge on which was inscribed the one word "Sheriff" came running up to him and demanded: "Haven't you seen the signs which I put up on the trees in this woods?"

"Oh, yes, I saw them," answered the young man; "they said 'No Hunting,' but I found some."

A New Viewpoint.

"Yep," replied Farmer Corntossel; "the fact that he was willin' to get out an' fight for it has sort o' woke Josh up to how much he really appreciated his home."

When Romance Fades.

He got her name and address in a Red Cross package and that was all he knew about her. So he did the thing that a lovesick soldier usually does—wrote her a sweet little letter telling how he longed to correspond with some one. How did he know but that a real romance might start? This was her answer:

"I think this war is horrid. I am doing my share. I buy War Savings stamps and eat corn bread, which I don't like. Also I am learning to knit."

But the cruel part is that she added: "I am ten years old."

A Famous "Oasis."

"Did you see Congressman Twobble while you were in Washington?"

"No. He instructed his office force to say to any one who called that he had gone over to Baltimore to spend the day."

"Yes."

OTTAWA EXHIBITION TO BE THE BEST EVER

MANY NEW FEATURES IN THIS YEAR'S SHOW—DATES, SEPT. 6-15.

If any one class of the community has earned a holiday it is the farmers—the men and women who have been doing their utmost to produce food not only for the people at home, but also for the splendid men of the Allies who made victory possible. During the war many of them did not feel that they should take a vacation, but this year things are different. The danger is over, the time of anxiety is past, and the men on the land may rightly feel that they have richly earned a vacation. Anticipating this feeling on the part of the farmers the management of the Ottawa Exhibition—to be held Sept. 6-15—are putting on speical features and attractions which will make the fair of more interest than ever to those interested in any branch of agriculture. In this matter the merchants of Ottawa are enthusiastically backing up the exhibition directors in their efforts. Plans have been already made for a big shopping weeks. At some time each year various merchants offer special bargains and inducements. This year the merchants by mutual consent, are making the special bargains available for exhibition visitors and are offering them a chance to make their visit to the city profitable as well as pleasant.

For the holiday entertainment the exhibition directors this year have prepared a programme of attractions that far excells all previous years. For the show in front of the grand stand there will be horse races, the best of vaudeville offerings including many New York Hippodrome features, big comedy acts, sensational feats, balloon ascensions, airplane stunts and a general all-round programme of the highest order. In the evenings, in place of the horse races, there will be a big spectacular fireworks display, including the "Raid on Zeebrugge." The midway will be the best ever assembled in Ottawa. It will contain a hundred and one things to attract and divert. Coney Island, New York, has been visited and some of the best features there have been secured for the Ottawa fair, including Capt. Sorcho and his submarine show, Dreamland Show of Freaks from Coney Island, Eden Musee, Edwards' Wild Animal Show, Diving Girls, Plantation Pastimes, Follies, Broadway Cabaret, One Ring Circus, Metz side show, "Over the Falls," and other attractions. The riding devices will include the Frolic, one of the latest devices, Tango swings, airplane carousals, the whip, Ferris wheel, merry-go-rounds, etc.

The educational aspect of the exhibition has not been overlooked. The $25 000 cash prizes given for live stock and the splendid premium list for the products of the field and garden will ensure the best exhibits in various departments.

Then too there will be the Government's official collection of war trophies, the pure food show, auto show, baby show, dog show, poultry and rabbits, horticultural and agricultural displays, domestics science and manual training displays from the public schools, Indian schools exhibits egg-laying contests, cheese, honey and dairy exhibits, women's and fancy work, and scores of other similar attractions.

For this year special arrangements have been made for the comfort and conveniences of visitors. Many seats will be placed around the band stands where people may rest and enjoy the music. The facilities for meals at reasonable cost have been provided so that visitors may come early and stay late thus making a whole day at the fair for one admission. Make up your mind now that you are entitled to a good holiday and that you are going to take if during the week of the Ottawa exhibition. The attractions you will see, the educational benefits you will derive and the good time which is assured you will leave no room for regret.

ROBBED A CHEESE FACTORY

Thieves Got $110 Worth of Products From the Baltimore Institution.

Cobourg Aug. 8.—There was considerable displeasure evidenced today by the officers and patrons of the Baltimore Cheese Factory, situated five miles north-east of here, when it was learned that some party or parties had forcibly entered the building during the early hours of that morning and helped themselves to five fine cheese from the curing room, which were in saleable condition. Entrance was effected by forcing open the outer and inner doors. Tracks led to the supposition that the cheese were taken away in an automobile. T8he average weight of each cheese is estimated at 88 pounds, and the loss would amount to $110.

STRIKE IS OVER.

The strike at the Dominion Textile Co. mills at Montmorency, Que., came to on end yesterday, the employes accepting the company's offer of a ten per cent. raise in wages.

Detroit police have discovered that persons who park their cars in Cadillac Square slip out once in a while, and, if the time of the parking has been chalked on the tire turn the wheel and hide the chalked number.

MANY MUNICIPALITIES HAVE AN EYE ON GUELPH VOTE ON RAILWAY MEASURE

If Carried the Hydro-Electric Would Be Shut Out of the City and the Contingent Localities.

Guelph, Ont., Aug. 8. — The whole country between Guelph and Arthur, is anxiously waiting to see what the Royal City will do on Monday when the railway bylaw is submitted to the ratepayers here. Citizens of Fergus, Elora, Arthur and the farmers in the rich and fertile district to the north are deeply concerned in the big question which will decide Guelph's future radial railway policy. When the 1919 Hydro bylaw was carried, the north people saw visions of their dream of years — better railway connections with their county town — drawing nearer. But in the proposition now before the ratepayers of Guelph, they feel that in its passing their dream is due for another jolt.

This feeling is particularly noticeable in Fergus. The Hydro survey is already made to this thriving village from Guelph, and the people also have the C. P. R. The opinion of the citizens there is that Hydro is sure to come if the scheme is not blocked in Guelph, whereas the C. P. R. is already there and they do not think the latter company will build another line to compete against itself. But the people of Fergus are so aroused over the railway question at the present time, that no matter what Guelph does on Monday next, they are going to make a strong effort to better their railway connections, and they are going to look to Hydro to assist them.

Guelph on the Alert.

George C. Templin, the reeve of Fergus, is very outspoken in the matter, and said: "We are watching Guelph very carefully, for we realize that if the bylaw is carried there next Monday it will mean that we will never get the connection with Guelph that we desire. If Guelph turns down the Hydro we will immediately agitate for a new Hydro line from Fergus and the north and down through Eramosa to Georgetown. We want a radial line to Guelph more than anything else, but it will never come if the C. P. R. bylaw is passed there. The time has come when Fergus is going to better her railway connections, and if Guelph turns us down we will link up elsewhere."

Anxious for Radial.

In the village of Arthur they are not so particular as to the company which builds it, but they are very anxious for radial connection with Guelph. "We are watching Guelph very carefully to see what they will do on Monday," said Mr. H. Clark, town clerk of Elora. "We want to get a radial line to Guelph, and if the C.P.R. bylaw is approved it looks as though we would have to look to Kitchener for an outlet." Mr. Clark hopes the by'aw will be defeated.

Why is man and woman, half the time, feeling nervous, despondent, worried; some days headachy, dull, and unstrung; some days really incapacitated by illness.

If we all would practise inside-bathing, what a gratifying change would take place. Instead of thousands of half-sick, anaemic-looking souls with pasty, muddy complexions, we should see crowds of happy, healthy, rosy-cheeked people everywhere. The reason is that the human system does not rid itself each day of all the waste which it accumulates under our present mode of living. For every ounce of food and drink taken into the system, nearly an ounce of waste material must be carried out, else it ferments and forms ptomaine-like poisons which are absorbed into the blood.

Just as necessary as it is to clean the ashes from the furnace each day, before the fire will burn bright and hot, so we must each morning clear the inside organs of the previous day's accumulation of indigestible waste and body toxins. Men and women, whether sick or well, are advised to drink each morning before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, as a harmless means of washing out of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels the indigestible material, waste, sour bile and toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach.

Millions of people who had their turn at constipation, bilious attacks, acid stomach, nervous days and sleepless nights have become real cranks about the morning inside-bath. A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will not cost much at the drug store, but is sufficient to demonstrate to anyone its cleansing, sweetening and refreshing effect upon the system.

WHAT IS THE TRUTH

Landingville, there is one pile close to one million tons of coal ready for the public and there are dozens of like mountains of fuel in and around the Schuylkill section.

A hue and cry has been raised that the production this year is so far behind that of last year for the same period as to create a very acute situation. Figures compiled by experts show that the output this year is just about normal, as compared with previous years. Quite naturally, the production of 1919 is somewhat behind that of 1918, because there is now lacking the great incentive of war and the stupendous need for fuel for the conflict.

Having raised the price of coal fifty cents a ton, at the rate of ten cents a month from April on, the coal operators insist the public should immediately buy. There is abundant proof in this section that the coal barons not only shut down their plants in April and May to prevent a too plentiful supply of coal and thus a cheaper market, but that a similar shutdown will occur in August. In that month the top price of the fifty cent jump will have been reached, and the public is not expected to rush in orders. Plans are already perfected to announce then that the public is not buying enough coal to warrant mining.

It is asserted by those who have always been close to mining in this section that the Governmental prices were such as to allow a more than handsome profit to the operators, and that, when fixed, these prices allowed for the raise of pay to the miners. In fixing the fifty-cent jump for this year nothing was added to the miners' pay.

One of the dominant reasons for a probable coal shortage, assigned by the operators, is the labor situation. They declare that the ending of the war has resulted in thousands of miners quitting their work and rushing back to Europe to see the land of their birth. Local officials hereabouts have yet to find one single case of a foreigner leaving his work in the mines to return to Europe.

The claim is made by operators that labor is scarce and that returning soldiers, formerly miners with plenty of experience, have declined to again go down in the mines. Not only is this assertion strenuously contradicted, but plenty of proof exists to show that many returning soldiers have been deliberately turned down when they applied for their old tasks.

Which of these two stories is true? It is evident that both are not, for they are diametrically opposite. If the statements in the advertisement are not correct, are we to believe that members of the President's Cabinet men occupying positions that rank next to the chief executive of this country, are allowing their names to be used by the coal operators to extort the public. On the other hand if the truth of the situation is presented by the National Coal Association, is it possible that a great newspaper like the New York Evening World can distort facts and cause the statements of some of the country's highest public officials to be open to question without being brought to account? However, be as it may, if the coal operators had been sincere in wanting to encourage the consumer to purchase coal early, one of the best inducements would have been to reduce the price last April, as in former years, and gradually increase it to normal during the summer months, and save the expense of advertising at the present time. One of the best ways to discourage early buying is the boosting of prices and this is what was done and production cut down about fifty per cent, so as to delay the purchase of coal until such times as the highest prices could be extorted from the consumer.

KEEP CHILDREN WELL DURING HOT WEATHER

Every mother knows how fatal the hot summer months are to small children. Cholera infantum, diarrhoea, dysentry, colic and stomach troubles are rife at this time and often a precious little life is lost after only a few hours illness. The mother who keeps Baby's Own Tablets in the house feels safe. The occasional use of the Tablets prevent stomach and bowel troubles, or if trouble comes suddenly—as it generally does—the Tablets will bring the baby safely through. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

AT AGE SEVENTY GAINS 25 POUNDS

MRS. ROLLINS FEELS BETTER THAN IN TWENTY YEARS "TANLAC IS WORTH ITS WEIGHT IN GOLD."

"I am seventy years old, and have been in poor health for a good many years, but since taking Tanlac I feel better in every way than I have in twenty years, and have actually gained twenty five pounds in weight," said Mrs. M. B. Rollins who lives at 110 West 39th Street, Seattle, the other day.

"When I moved to Seattle about twelve years ago," she continued, "I was in hopes that the climate here would help to improve the condition of my health but I have been gradually growing worse all the time. I suffered constantly from stomach trouble and what I ate caused me so much misery that I had actually reached the point where I dreaded to see meal time come. I suffered terribly from rheumatism, too, and sometimes my feet and legs were so badly swollen that I couldn't walk, and my arms would get so stiff and sore that I couldn't use them at all. More than half the time I wasn't able to wear my shoes. In fact, I had gotten to where I was in misery nearly all the time. My nerves were in such awful condition and the least noise would upset me and I never got a good night's sleep. I finally got so weak and run down that I just had to give up and go to bed and for five weeks my folks didn't have any hopes that I would ever get up again.

"Then I heard about Tanlac and the good it was doing so many people, and I told my son that I would make one more effort to get well, and asked him to get me a bottle. Well to make a long story short I am perfectly well again, and Tanlac is responsible for it. Why, I honestly feel twenty years younger, and am so well and strong now that I can get around and do all my housework without the least trouble. I have a fine appetite and eat just anything I want and never suffer the least bit afterwards. The rheumatism has left me entirely, and so has all that swelling in my fet and legs. My nerves seem to be in perfect condition and I sleep soundly for eight or nine hours every night. The way Tanlac has overcome my troubles and built me up is more like a miracle than anything else, and any medicine that will do that much for a person my age is certainly worth its weight in gold."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd., in Havelock by A. C. Denike, in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd., in Fowler's Corners by W. A. Hunter, in Gelert by A. J. Scott, in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

WHAT IT COSTS TO MAINTAIN PETERBOROUGH'S FIRE BRIGADE.

Seventeen ratepayers petitioned the Fire, Water and Light Committee last night for street lights on the east side of the Monaghan Road south of the C. G. E. property to the C.P. R. crossing. The chairman will report the number of lights required.

Fire Protection

The Mayor was authorized to name delegates to attend the meeting of the Ontario Fire Prevention Association in Toronto, September 4th.

Cost of Fire Department

The expense account of the Fire Department for the first six months of this year, was reported as $15,886.10.

B. F. Ackerman, Son. & Co., Limited are asking permission to install an electrical fire alarm system, and connect with the central fire station similar to the device now used by J. J. Turner & Sons, and at a fixed charge and rental for a term of five years.

J. J. Turner & Sons put their system in at their own expense and assume all liability in case of fire.

Fire Chief Grange pointed out that were the city to install a similar device for the Ackerman factory the city would be liable for consequences in case of fire.

On motion of Ald. Taylor, B. F. Ackerman, Son, & Co., Limited will be notified that this Committee recommends that they be permitted to install an alarm system as requested on the same conditions as accorded J. J. Turner & Sons., they to assume all risks, and the work to be done satisfactorily to the Fire Chief.

There were present, Mayor Duncan, Aldermen Garside and Taylor.

FRUIT FREIGHT FALLS OFF.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 9.—Freight traffic between the north and south through Washington showed indications of being badly disturbed today because of the shopmen's strike. Only one-fifth of the customary cars of fruit, vegetables and live stock passed through the Potamac yards in the last twenty four hours it is said. Many freight trains however, were being rerouted at Roanoke, Va., Passenger traffic still was normal.

One Thing More

Most car owners know that this is the place to have their batteries tested with a hydrometer.

—That it is the place to buy a Bone Dry Battery with Willard Threaded Rubber Insulation—which carries with it the evidence of battery newness.

—That it is the place to come for battery charging, repair, and a rental battery.

But, one thing more—it is the place to come, just as soon as you buy your new car, to have your battery registered and get the benefit of Willard 90-day battery insurance.

Drive in, whether you have bought a new car or not. Perhaps we can give you some battery information that will mean longer life to your battery and fuller use of your car.

DERBY DAY INCIDENT.

Romantic Incidents of England's Premier Racing Event.

People who never bet and who usually take no interest whatever in racehorses yet find themselves reading the sporting intelligence in the newspapers when Derby Day comes round, says Spare Moments. Even bishops have been known to enquire the name of the winter. This year the excitement was unusually great, as it was the first Derby Day since racing was banned in the early days of the war.

The Derby of 1867 was perhaps one of the most sensational and romantic on record. It was won by Mr. Chaplin's Hermit, a horse reported to be lame. The race was actually run in a snowstorm, and the winner started at the long odds of 66 to 1. The plunging Marquis of Hastings lost a fabulous sum in bets over this race, and was ruined.

The piquancy of the situation was increased by the fact that, some years previously, Mr. Chaplin and the Marquis of Hastings had been rivals in love, the marquis carrying off the lady.

This Derby was one of the greatest gambling Derbies ever known, a well-known duke losing in a single bet £180,000. Hermit's progeny won nearly £350,000 in stakes. Mr. Chaplin, who purchased him as a yearling for the modest sum of one thousand guineas, presented his skeleton when he died in 1890 to the Royal Veterinary College.

Two Derby winners have died at sea. Blue Gown, the hero of '68, was sold to a wealthy American for £4,000, and died on the voyage across the herring pond. As the horse was not insured, the Yankee lost heavily over the transaction. A similar fate was that of Kingcraft. By a strange fluke he won the Derby in 1870, but in nineteen succeeding races did not once get past the post first. He was sold for £550 in 1874, and also succumbed to the stormy seas on his voyage to the States.

Amato was another famous Derby winner. His year was 1838. Belonging to Sir G. Heathcote, the squire of Epsom, he only ran upon one occasion — that on which he won the Derby.

He is buried in the beautiful grounds of the Durdans, Lord Rosebery's charming country seat.

The grave is surrounded by iron palings, and the stone slab gives full particulars as to the horse's age, and so on. It is beautifully situated within a few hundred yards of the Derby winning post, and here, surrounded by beautiful trees, daffodils and magnolias in full bloom, the classic hero's bones rest peacefully.

In front of the inn is a well. From time immemorial someone — no one has yet discovered who—has chalked a tip for the Derby on the cover of the well. Racegoers are notoriously superstitious and ready to follow the slightest tips.

A few years ago a one-time wealthy man was on the verge of ruin through his unfortunate gambling propensities. He had about £500 left, and made up his mind, so the story runs, to risk his all upon whatever horse the well "gave" for the Derby. This decision proved particularly fortunate, as the horse selected won at long odds against, and the lucky winner resolved never to back a horse again—a resolution he kept.

Both True.

"I think Smith will realize a fortune from his dreams."

"Why, you told me his plans were all in the air."

"So they are. He's invented an improvement for airplane steering."

Quit It.

"You don't read the newspaper aloud any more."

Thieves broke into a church at Sandusky, O., and stole the wine kept in stock for sacramental purposes.

WILL MEET IN COURT TENNIS.

Gould and Kinsella Agree to Match for Open Championship.

Chicago, August 9.—Articles of agreement have been signed for a match for the open championship of America in court tennis between Jay Gould, amateur, and W. A. Kinsella, professional, to be played on the court of the Racquet club, Philadelphia, next December.

The announcement of the match states that it will be the best of thirteen sets, four sets on December 2, four on December 4, and the remaining sets on December 6. No advantage sets are to be played.

If Gould wins he is to receive a cup and Kinsella is to receive a large purse win or lose. Either Richmond Fearing of Boston or Harry Payne Whitney of New York will act as referee, and the marker will be either Fred Tompkins or Jock Soutar, professionals of the Philadelphia Racquet club.

Three Sticks Wrapped in Paper Turned over to Chicago Police

Three sticks of dynamite wrapped in oiled paper and a soiled Polish newspaper were found lying on an open stretch of lawn in Humboldt park, near Division street and North California avenue, this morning by two boys playing there. They notified Sergt. John R. Girard of the West Park Police who took the sticks and wrapping to the station. The detective bureau was notified as was E. J. Brennan, superintendent of the bureau of investigation of the department of justice.

DENIES MURDER CHARGE

Montreal, Aug. 8.—William Fallon returned soldier held responsible by a coroner's jury for the death of Della Roy, the Ottawa woman who succumbed to blows alleged given to the accused appeared before Judge Leet yesterday. Fallon pleaded not guilty. Judge Leet directed that the charge instead of being for murder, should be for manslaughter.

MINERAL OIL
For Chronic Constipation

By buying this product from us you can get the highest in quality that can be procured at an ESPECIALLY LOW PRICE. There are many thin oils on the market that are not suitable for internal use; other oils have irritating qualities which render them also unsuitable. The one we are selling is guaranteed thick and entirely pure.

It is recognized that a good grade of Mineral Oil is one of the best remedies for CHRONIC CONSTIPATION that is being used. It acts mechanically and does not irritate the intestinal tract, nor does the dose have to be continually increased, as is the case with ordinary purgatives.

It is much better and cheaper than Castor Oil as a laxative for children, since Castor Oil has two effects, the first of which is purgative, and the second or after effect, which is Constipating.

SOLDIERS NOT WANTED.

Cobalt Miners Won't Accept Offer to Settle Strike.

Cobalt, August 9.—The executive of the miners' union has rejected the suggestion of the returned soldiers' committee that a meeting of the men be called for the purpose of voting on the question of returning to work. The union executive took the view that in the absence of guarantees that the managers would agree to be bound by the findings of any such board it would be useless to take the course suggested.

They were willing, they stated, to have a board investigate conditions while the strike was in progress The situation remains a deadlock

SENATE REFORM SHELVED

Liberal Convention Did Not Act on Resolution Sent in.

Ottawa, Aug 9 Everyone in Ottawa is asking what has become of Senate reform In 1893 this was one of the big planks in the Liberal platform No attempt was even made to implement it except by filling the Upper Chaber with defeated Liberal candidates.

Many resolutions form Liberal organizations were forwarded to the convention asking again for Senate reform, but the resolutions committee decided it would be wisdom to quietly shelve it. No one brought it up from the floor of the contion.

VICTORY BUTTONS NOW

Distribution of These Decorations Commence Today.

Chicago, Aug 8 -Capt. Charles W Burkett of the United States army recruiting service announced today that he would begin issuance of the silver and bronze victory buttons to former soldiers, tomorrow morning at his office, 526 South State street. This is to be the only place in Chicago where the official emblem of army service can be secured.

Silver buttons go to those men who received wounds in service; bronze buttons are provided for all other soldiers. Capt Burkett says he has an unlimited supply of the emblems an dthat all soldiers, upon presentation of theid discharge papers, may secure their buttons.

THE CAUSE OF SICKNESS

Always Due to Weak, Impoverished Blood

Apart from accident or illness due to infection, almost all ill-health arises from one or two reasons. The great mistake that people make is in not realizing that both of these have the same cause at the root of them, namely poor and improper blood. Either bloodlessness or some trouble of the nerves will be found to be the reason for almost every ailment If you are pale, suffer from headaches, or breathlessness, with palpitation of the heart, poor appetite and weak digestion, the cause is almost always bloodlessness. If you have nervous headaches, neuralgia sciatica and other nerve pains, the cause is run down, exhausted nerves. But run down nerves are also a result of poor blood, so that the two chief causes of illness are one and the same.

This accounts for the great number of people, once in indifferent health, pale, nervous and dyspeptic, who have been made well and hearty by Dr Williams' Pink Pills; for no other medicine ever discovered is so valuable for increasing the supply of rich red blood and giving strength to worn out nerves. Men and women alike greatly benefit from a course of the splendid blood builder and nerve tonic.

If your dealer does not keep these pills you can get them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

STORM IN NORTH COUNTRY.

Lindsay had only about half an hour's downfall of rain on Thursday afternoon, but from reports that are to hand some surrounding districts received much more. On the other hand, some districts to the north of Lindsay did not get as much as a drop of rain. At Little Britain, according to reports, the rain tumbled down at a great rate and was accompanied by a great shower of real large hail stones. The hail storm did not damage the crops materially, however. At Cambray and towards Hartley not a drop of rain fell.

Back at Haliburton and in the north country a most violent storm is reported to have occurred about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, accompanied by violent wind and hail, which knocked down chimneys, uprooted trees and scattered lumber piles broadcast. Some lightning accompanied the storm but did no damage.

WHISKEY, NOT DAIRY SUPPLIES

License Inspector C. Arnott, of Belleville, while in Trenton visited the G. T. R. freight shed and found a large case addressed to H. P. Patterson of Trenton and consigned as one case of dairy supplies from Montreal. As the case looked suspicious the inspector had it opened. Then seventy-two bottles of Gooderham & Worts special whiskey appeared.

Pork and the Peerage.

When it became known that the Marchioness of Queensberry was in the sausage trade the British public shook its head. What was the world coming to? A real live marchioness had opened a pair of sausage shops!

Several trades have been taken up by the peerage, but there are no previous records of a marchioness with a sausage shop. Dukes occasionally took it on themselves to look like market gardeners; there have been lords who drove fire engines, and countesses who drove bargains—in their own hat shops. But sausages! Minced pork!

One can see what is coming. Soon no self-respecting family will dream of putting any sausages on the breakfast table save those which have been grown and tamed on the pork farm of a peeress.

It may even be that the county flower show is doomed, and in its place one will see a sausage fair, patronized only by the most exclusive and aristocratic of pork farmers. The coroneted sausage is a sign of the times.

Dunmow looks like being doomed. Imagine people being so old-fashioned as to stand their trial for a flitch of bacon.

SPOILED BIG WEDDING FEAST

How Ex-German Emperor Upset Dinner on Which Herr Ballin Had Spent Much Money.

Herr Ballin was noted for the extravagant dinners which he gave on great occasions, says the Edinburgh Scotsman. Probably the most magnificent of all was that which he arranged to grace the wedding of the kaiser's daughter to the duke of Brunswick. The floral decorations alone cost $10,000, the dinner worked out at about $85 a plate, and the wines at about $30. But the dinner, from Herr Ballin's point of view, was a failure, for the kaiser and kaiserin, who were to have been present, sent word in the afternoon that they could not come, and it was in their honor, of course, that Herr Ballin had spent his thousands on the banquet. One of his servants has said that when Herr Ballin received the message that the emperor could not come, he flew into a tremendous rage. He sent for his butler, and ere the man had reached Herr Ballin's study, his master shouted out to him: "The emperor cannot come to dinner tonight—put the whole show off!" and then slammed the door. The butler did not know exactly what to do. To put off so important guests as were to be present was, of course, an impossibility; but no one in the household dared to approach the master on it to suggest this. However, at about 5 o'clock Herr Ballin had sufficiently recovered his temper to come downstairs and give some necessary directions about the banquet.

MULE OF PECULIAR COLOR

Driver Explained With Patience Just How the Animal's Strange Appearance Was Brought About.

Two mules, drawing an army service wagon, caused a sensation in Knightsbridge a short time ago. One mule was poor but honest in appearance, brown in color; the other was a delicate shade of green. The green mule was solemnly unconscious of the attention he was attracting. "Effects of war oats?" asked a facetious United States soldier. A workman rubbed his eyes and then muttered, "camouflage." The A. S. C. driver looked thoroughly ashamed of the turnout. He stopped to pick up a crate. "What is the matter with your pony?" asked a mild man. "I am tired of being asked it, and it isn't a pony," replied the driver. "It is all through the chemical. Goodness knows what color it will be tomorrow. Its coat was very light once, and the other mules used to kick it. We washed it in some chemical dye to make it darker. The sergeant can't remember the name of the dye, and now that it is wearing off, it is a different color each day. You are the last person I shall explain it to." He drove off furiously—a khaki driver on a slate-gray lorry drawn by one honest brown mule and one shameless mule of an esthetic shade of green.—London Mail.

Women as Secretaries.

Since Mr. Lloyd George made the innovation of appointing a woman secretary, the example of the prime minister has been followed by some of his colleagues in the cabinet. One of the three private secretaries to Mr. Bonar Law, the chancellor of the exchequer, having left recently to become deputy chairman of the board of inland revenue, the chancellor has decided to economize man power and at the same time give formal recognition of women's growing efficiency by making Miss E. M. Watson one of his private secretaries. These appointments of women civil servants to confidential posts in the entourage of the members of the British cabinet are highly popular among women workers generally who appreciate the honor thus done to their sex.

Yellow Fever Mastered.

Reports from Ecuador indicate that Doctor Noguchi, the famous Japanese scientist, who is at present in that country, has isolated the bacillus which causes yellow fever, and has prepared an anti-serum conferring immunity on those exposed to the disease. The discovery is being tried out on Ecuadoran troops in the fevery interior.

The conquest of yellow fever is one of the important achievements. In the Canal zone the first steps were taken; the fever was banished by sanitation. But proper sanitation is an extensive process and is impracticable in sparsely settled regions. So Doctor Noguchi's discovery comes to give a needful coup de grace to the old villain, yellow fever.

HONOR INFANTRYMEN.

They Won the War, Says General Haig.

In his masterly final despatch of the war Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig reviews the various arms of the service, and to some extent apportions credit to them for the great victory. It may astonish many people to know that the war has not demonstrated the comparative uselessness of cavalry, for we had heard so little about the cavalry operations upon the western front that we may tacitly have assumed that the horses were sent back to England and their riders sent unmounted into the trenches. Undoubtedly the cavalry did fight like infantry many times, for the same reason that upon critical occasions orderlies, cooks, engineers, in fact, everybody who could strike a blow or fire a rifle was pressed into the service. But because the cooks fought at times, the army did not decide to abolish cooks. Nor did the army discard cavalry, although, as Sir Douglas says, the question or necessity of retaining any large body of mounted men was freely discussed. As a cavalryman himself, like most of his leading generals, the British commander-in-chief may have been especially sympathetic to the cavalry. It was decided to maintain the cavalry corps, and, as he said, the wisdom of the decision was amply vindicated.

He writes: "It has been proved that cavalry, whether used for shock effect under suitable conditions or as mobile infantry have still an indispensible part to play in modern war." Moreover, it cannot be assumed that future wars will see the opposing armies with their flanks firmly anchored either upon the sea or upon neutral frontiers. Whenever there is a prospect of flanking movements, the cavalry is called upon. Sir Douglas says that the cavalry played a great role in the great retirement of 1914, and on many occasions prevented the British infantry from being overrun by German cavalry. At Ypres, their mobility multiplied their value as a reserve. Even in trench warfare cavalry were useful because they could be swiftly gathered at any given point, and launched as a surprise, even if in the actual fighting the men went forward without their horses.

Upon other occasions, too, the cavalry had special and brilliant roles to fill, for instance at Cambrai, in resisting the German offensive of a year ago, and lastly in the great drive that ended the war. The report says: "On the morning of the armistice, two British cavalry divisions were on the march east of the Scheldt, and before the orders to stop reached them they had already gained a line ten miles in front of our infantry outposts. There is no doubt that had the advance of the cavalry been allowed to continue, the enemy's disorganized retreat would have been turned into a rout." To use a favorite phrase then, "when the history of the great war comes to be written," it will have to record the fact that the cavalry is by no means obsolete. Indeed, reading the illuminating despatches of Field Marshal Haig one might almost come to the conclusion that this war has taught no new lessons to those leaders, who came to it instructed in the wisdom of past campaigns. The same principles would appear to underlie a fight between two rowdies, and a struggle in which millions of men take part.

Reviewing the work of infantry, cavalry, airplanes, tanks ~~and~~ every other arm, Haig says that each is dependent upon the other. Team play is absolutely essential, and it is of the utmost importance that one part of the army should understand what the other part is doing or is expected to do. But it is the infantry that wins battles and wars. Germany was beaten by the bullets and bayonets of the common soldier, not by dashing cavalry, nor terrific artillery, nor the greatly daring of flying men, nor the devastating tanks. The man in the ranks with the rifle in his hands won this war, just as he won every other war since gunpowder was invented, and just as the archers used to win wars before explosives were discovered. Of course, we must not forget that without the artillery and the cavalry and the airplanes, infantry alone cannot win modern wars. Each arm is essential, or, instead of saying an arm, let us think of each service as a finger of a clenched hand. But if the infantry is to be regarded as a finger, it is also to be regarded, too, as the muscle, or nerve, or sinew, that propels the final knock-out punch.

Sir Douglas is not one of those carried away by the notion that the flying men will decide future wars. He points out that even the aviators would be useless without the infantry to protect their hangars. Nor would he appear to endorse the proposal often put forward that infantry, instead of being armed with rifles, should be equipped with machine guns. He mentions the fact that while at the beginning of the war there was one machine gun to 500 infantrymen, the ratio had increased to one gun for 20 men in 1918. When the British army took the field it had 454 pieces of light and welterweight artillery. When the armistice was signed it had 6,437 guns and howitzers of all descriptions. For a long time Germany had the supremacy in artillery. Then Great Britain caught up and passed her. Then Russia lay down and Germany once more dominated, but it is a tribute to British workmen to be able to say that, even before the last great German drive had been stopped, Great Britain had again assumed the leadership. The Field Marshal mentions the fact that in two days 42,000 tons of ammunition were used.

Prize Ring Pugilists Mostly English

ONE of those famous experts, about 85 per cent. of whom were wrong about the Willard-Dempsey prize fight, declares that the new champion will be the most popular in history. Fight experts, as a rule, know even less about history than about the prospects in any given bout, and this one in particular is likely to be wrong. When we see Dempsey a United States Senator or Speaker of the House of Representatives, we shall be obliged to withdraw this opinion, but if it does not happen it will be proof that heights once scaled by former champions are unscaleable by their modern successors. There has never been a prize-fighting Senator or Speaker, of course, but John Morrissey went to Congress; Gully was a member of Parliament. Even John L. Sullivan was a candidate, but had little better luck with the electorate than with James J. Corbett. Dempsey promises to be more popular than Willard, for he will probably fight, and more popular than Johnson, who was a negro, but maybe not more popular than Jeffries or Corbett, and certainly he is unlikely to become such an idol as his namesake, the famous "Nonpareil" John L., Jack McAuliffe, Battling Nelson and a dozen other pugilists of various weights who might be recalled.

From the days of the gladiators, fighting men have made a peculiar appeal to the public, and not more to men of similar coarse and brutal type than to the "high brows." It has often been noted that authors of slender and feeble physique have shown a peculiar delight in describing scenes of blood and slaughter, Robert Louis Stevenson being the classical example. Hazlitt, one of the greatest critics and essayists of the century took keen delight in a fight between Tom Hickman, the "gasman," and Bill Neate, and afterwards wrote a particularly lively account of it. Neate won in the eighteenth round, and when Hickman came to, his first question was "Where am I? What is the matter?" On his way home from this famous contest Hazlitt noticed one of his companions reading the "New Eloise," and remarked later "Ladies, after this will you contend that a love for the Fancy is incompatible with the cultivation of sentiment?" Byron, too, was a friend and admirer of "Gentleman" Jackson, said to have been the first scientific boxer, and found his manners much superior to those of many college men. But then Byron, we suppose, would resent being classed with the "highbrows," and no doubt would enjoy himself much more in a pothouse with contemporary bruisers than in a drawing room with a company of Scotch reviewers.

The truth is that pugilists, so far as we know, were always esteemed if they were eminent in their profession, but there were no such engines to give them world wide publicity as exist to-day. The first English champion, called the father of British pugilism, was John Broughton. He flourished from 1705 till 1739, and was patronized by some of the most influential men of the day. The Duke of Cumberland was his constant friend and admirer, and on one occasion lost £10,000 in backing Broughton. The champion was comfortably off when he died, and now lies under an imposing tombstone in Lambeth Church. More highly honored in death was Tom Cribb, who was born in 1781, and was one of the most courageous and fairest fighters who ever drew on a glove, as well as being a man of the utmost kindliness and charity. Tom has a monument to his memory in Woolwich churchyard, representing a lion grieving over the ashes of a hero. Cribb was probably the first English champion to meet an American, his victim being Molineaux, the negro, whom he beat twice. It was never a convention of the British prize ring to draw the color line, that being an institution, if memory serves, of John L. Sullivan, and aimed at Peter Jackson. It might be remarked that those who knew the great Australian heavyweight say that he was a gentleman, and would have been a credit to any calling.

Molineaux was not content with a first beating, but asked for another match, which had the same result; and we are told that when Cribb went to London after the fight Holborn was impassable. Capt. Barclay, his patron, collected £10,000 for him, and one hesitates to name the pugilist for whom an equivalent amount could be raised to-day. Willard? A contemporary of Cribb's was one of the most famous of fighters. John Gully, one of the most noted sporting characters in history. He was not only a champion pugilist, but he performed a feat that rarely if ever has been equalled when he won the Derby three times. He was elected to Parliament. If this distinction is unique he has still another claim to lasting fame, for he was twice married and had twelve children by each wife. He left not only a family, but a fortune, and his grandson was Speaker of the British House of Parliament.

Most famous of English champions was Tom Sayers, who fought the famous draw of two hours and six minutes with John C. Heenan for the world's championship, the spectacle emptying Parliament and closing the courts. He, too, has an imposing monument. Paddy Ryan preceded John L. Sullivan as the fistic champion of his day, and Sullivan came as near being a national idol as any prize fighter in history. Fitzsimmons, who is said by many to have been the greatest fighting machine for his weight or within twenty-five pounds of it the world ever produced, was born in Cornwall, England, but learned the game in Australia. In Beckett, it is believed that England has a big man out of the ordinary.

WHO WILL WIN THE BUTT CUP

This is the Question Now Foremost in the Minds of Lawn Bowling Enthusiasts.

CANADAS REPORTED FAVORITES

Trophy Has Now Been in Competition Ten Years---Presented by Henry Butt, Western-Super-Mare, England.

Toronto, Aug. 7.—With the approach of the Dominion Lawn Bowling tourney the question arises who will win the Butt Trophy this year?

Who will win the Butt Trophy championship of Canada this year? emblematic of the lawn bowling That is the question foremost in the minds of the bowlers with the approach of the Dominion tourney.

This handsome sterling silver cup was presented by Mr. Henry Butt, of Weston Super-Mare, England, for competitions among the winners of the bowling associations of Canada. It is competed for annually at the conclusion of the D. B. A., and is to become the property of the club winning it the most number of times in ten years, and the rinks eligible to play for the trophy are the winner and runners-up of the trophy, winners of the association, and winners of the consolation matches at the Dominion, Ontario, Western Ontario, Eastern and International tournaments, in all twenty rinks.

The Butt Trophy has now been in competition ten years and Canadas, Granites and Queen City Clubs have each won it on two occasions while Parkdale, Guelph, St. Matthews and Hamilton Thistles have each one win to their credit. Should either Canadas, Queen City or Granites win the trophy this year it will become their permanent possession.

With the Ontario, Western Ontario, and International tournaments of 1919 things of the past eleven rinks have qualified for this year's play for the Butt Trophy or Victoria Loving Cup, as it is also failed.

QUALIFIES TWICE.

George M. Begg by winning the O B. A. Trophy qualified with his Canada four; Rock Cassells, of Hamilton Thistles, also gets in by being runners-up to Begg. And he qualifies twice by winning the International

The Canadas, by the winning of the association at the O. B. A. with Dr. Paul's rink, have two strings to play for the trophy. Other rinks who are qualified are two from London, winners in the trophy and Association matches at the W. O. B. A., W. Hogarth, of St. Matthews, winner of the consolation or the same tournament; Oliver, of Buffalo, runners-up in the trophy at the International; Canon Smith, of Bridgeburg, winner of the consolation of Buffalo; either W. J. A. Carnahan, of the Granites, or Gardiner, of Paris, who have yet to play their final game in the association match of the I. L. B. A.; and Greaves, of St. Catherines, winner of the consolation at the O. B. A. The qualifying rinks from the eastern tournament which is in progress this week, and the D. B. A. have yet to be reclaimed.

WINNERS TO DATE.

Of the previous winners in the Butt Trophy competition Canadas, St. Matthews and Hamilton Thistles, are certain of representation in the match this year. Granites can get in by W. J. A. Carnahan defeating Gardiner, of Paris, in the final of the association match of the Internationals Queen City, Parkdale and Guelph will have to return winners in various bowling contests, so uncertain is the game, Canadas with rinks skipped by Dr. Paul and Geo. Begg should enter the Butt Trophy competition this year favorites. Both skips have very strong rinks with every member a clever bowler.

With George Begg already qualified in the Canadian championship match, what will this Canada bowler do, should he also get in the competition with the strong rink composed of Sir John Willison, Charlie Robertson, W. J. A. Carnahan and himself skip by being successful in winning one of the games at the D. B. A.? And how about W. J. A. Carnahan should he beat Gardiner, of Paris, in the International association final? He would qualify Granites for the competition, and also be a member of a Canada rink which is also eligible to play for the Butt Trophy.

1909—R Greenwood, Canada.
1910—Dr. W. T. Burns, Parkdale.
1911—T Rennie, Granites.
1912—C. O. Knowles, Granites.
1913—H. A. Haisley, Queen City.
1914—Dr E. W Paul, Canada.
1915—R. B Rice, Queen City.
1916—Dr. Creelman, Guelph.
1917—W Hogarth, St. Matthews.
1918—T. M Chambers, Hamilton.

"CANNONBALL" BEATEN

Lorneville, Aug. 9.—In the fastest game of the season Sunderland defeated Lorneville with "Cannonball" Ed. Scott on the mound, by the score of 4 to 1. Stan. Young, for the visitors who formerly pitched for the Baracas, of the Bayside League, Toronto, and has just lately returned from overseas pitched one of the best game of his career. He held the locals to two hits and fanned fourteen men; while Scott struck out nine. Both pitchers received errorless support and the visitors' runs were the result of timely hitting.

AUSTRALIANS AT PROVIDENCE

New York Aug. 9.—The Australian tennis players, who arrived here yesterday on the Adriatic, too late to compete in the Newport, R.I., tournament, left this evening for Providence. The party included Norman E. Brookes and Mrs. Brookes, Gerald L. Patterson and Randolph Lycett, of Melbourne, and R. V. Thomas, of Adelaide.

The teams including the two pairs from Australia, are entered in the national doubles championship which will begin on the courts of the Longwood Cricket Club at Boston next Monday.

OFF TO CONTEST AMERICAN TITLE

THOMPSON, BROS., ENTER U. S. AMATEUR GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP.

Toronto, Aug. 9.—Messrs. W. J. Thompson and Frank Thompson, of the Mississauga Golf Club, are among the Canadian entries for the American amateur golf championship, to be played at Pittsburg on August 16. The finest golf players in America are entered for the coveted title, including each well-known stars as Messrs. "Chick" Evans, Francis Quimet, Jerome Travers, Bobby Jones and Oswald Kirkby. It will be remembered that M. Wr. J. Thompson defeated Mr. Travers in the recent international match at Hamilton, and as he is playing steady golf his friends expect he will make a creditable showing at the coming contest, which is the most important of the annual golf fixtures on the continent.

SOLDIER PLAYER HOME ONCE MORE

RETURNS FROM OVERSEAS IN PRIME CONDITION—WEIGHS 230 POUNDS.

Toronto, Aug. 9.—Victor Christopher "Babe" Sheppard, fat man, ball player and rugby star, former catcher of St. Francis, champions of Willowvale Park in 1917, is home. Chris just weighs 230 in his bare feet. Sheppard has played a lot of ball since he left Canada in January, 1918, with the heavy battery from Cobourg.

He came straight from Paris where he played on the Canadian team in the inter-allied meet at Pershing Stadium when the crack Yankee team took three falls out of four from the Canucks. No less than seven Toronto boys were on the Canuck crew. They were: Jack Evis, Bill "Nigger" Wright, Larry Lattimer, Alex. Thompson, "Moose" Hurd, Fred "Sailor" Barker, and Sheppard.

"They beat us three out of four," stated Sheppard. "They had a better team. They won the first game 5-0, we won the second 2-1, and they beat us 10-0 the third game. Barker pitched this game till the sixth, and the score was 4-0, when he was taken out for a pinch hitter, and then the Yanks pounded out six more runs. They won the final engagement 7-1."

In 1918 Sheppard played with the Canadian Reserve Artillery, which beat the U.S.A. team for the championship of the British Isles. Lafitte, the former New York American and Rochester pitcher pitched for the Americans. Sheppard was also with the Canadian Convalescent team at Bromley and with the Canadian Garrison Artillery.

MAY SHOOT AT TORONTO

Local Gun Club Getting Into Good Shape—Scores Last Night.

The Peterborough Gun Club held their weekly shoot last night, and some good work was done by Stan. Coon, who broke 43 out of 50. The club is getting back into form and may shoot at the big shoot in Toronto during the Exhibition.

The club has been invited to Port Hope for their shoot next Wednesday afternoon, and as many members as possible are requested to make the trip. Lakefield will send a squad down the same day.

The Scores were:

	Shot at	Hit
Carvan	85	61
Graham	75	52
Coon	50	43
Symes	50	22
Wood	35	26
Mills	35	20
Duffus	25	11

TENNIS JAP BEAT MURRAY

Newport, R.I., Aug. 9.—Ichivy Kumagae, tennis champion, of Japan, yesterday defeated R. Lindley Murray, of Niagara Falls, N.Y., American national champion in five sets in the fourth round of the Casino tournament. The score was 3 to 6, 7 to 5, 3 to 6, 8 to 6, 6 to 3.

The result will bring Kumagae and Wm. M. Johnston, of San Francisco, together in the semi-finals today.

72 MILES AN HOUR THIS BOAT MAKES

MISS TORONTO HAS 450 H.P. HYDROPLANE—A SURPRISE CREATION.

Toronto, Aug. 9.—Canada will be represented in the International Gold Cup and the Canadian Gold Cup races at the motor boat regatta at Toronto Exhibition by two high-class hydroplanes.

The one is Miss Toronto, a new hydroplane by a Toronto syndicate, and the other is Peter Pan IV., purchased from John P. Bickle by Griff Clarke, owner of Leopard, the fast displacement boat.

Peter Pan IV. is an old boat, but she has shown 65 miles per hour, and Clarke is having her put in the best of shape for the contest. He is an expert diver of fast boats and will probably drive her himself.

Built Secretly.

The hull of the other boat, Miss Toronto, has just been completed in secret, and the mechanics are busy installing her power plant. She will be engined by a 12-cylinder 450 horse-power motor, and as she is designed by the best hydroplane designer in America her owners freely predict that she will show 72 miles per hour. If she does she will beat the world's record. She is a 27-foot boat, the same length as Whip-po'-Will, Jr., which won the two cups for A. L. Judson, of New York here last fall. No expense has been spared to make the new boat a success, and none will be spared between now and the day of the races. Her construction has given a summers work to high-class Toronto boat builders, and Toronto mechanics will look after her power plant.

The names of those who are in the syndicate have been kept private, and will not be revealed until the time of the races, and the place of her construction is held just as close a secret.

If the new boat turns out as well as expected she will go down the line and participate in all the big events for hydroplanes.

CANUCK AMATEUR IS TWICE SECOND

BUT CYCLING CHAMPION HAS ENGINE TROUBLE AT PHILADELPHIA.

Harold Bounsall, of Toronto, the Canadian amateur cycling champion is still doing pretty well around Newark and Philadelphia. Last night at Philadelphia he faced Wayne Wylie, the U. S. champion motor paced amateur rider, in a five mile affair, and was only nosed out by inches. He rode behind Bill Spencer, and Spencer had engine trouble at the start and lost a lot of ground. Bounsall and Spencer got up on even terms the last lap, but the effort told and Bounsall failed on the final jump. The time, 7.22, shows the class of the race.

In the unknown distance amateur race, an unpaced affair, Bounsall finished second to Frank Harris, the Philadelphia champion. George Harris was third. The distance was [illegible] 2-3 miles, and the time 4.01.

RUDDY LOCKS AND COURAGE

Observation of English Writer Is That the Two Are Generally Found Together.

"Ginger for pluck" is an old saying which would seem to be confirmed in the bestowal of military decorations for bravery, observes London Answers. "It was in the ruined square of demolished Ypres last Christmas eve," writes a British officer, "that I was first impressed by the large number of red-haired men who were receiving the military medal.

"Since that afternoon I have noted the complexion of every officer and man wearing a military decoration, and the impression made at Ypres has been strengthened in consequence. There must be something in the old saying, for wherever soldiers are gathered together there is a red-haired, beribboned man in the midst of them.

"Take our most famous fighting division—the invincible Fifty-first. This is composed almost entirely of Highland troops, and the Highlanders are nearly all full-blooded blonds. Of course there are dark-haired heroes in plenty, but nevertheless red hair and pluck would seem to be synonymous. Red hair is common among our most daring airmen, and although I cannot say how many holders of the Victoria cross sport ruddy locks I am prepared to wager that they form a large percentage.

"Scientists say that red hair is caused by a large proportion of iron in the system, and certainly 'carrots and freckles' have been worn by men of iron while doing the work of men in the devil's own war."

FROM COFFIN TO KITCHEN

Plate Placed on Casket That Held Body of Louis XIV Found Doing Duty as Frying Pan.

At the Cluny museum in Paris is a very interesting relic.

One day a few years ago the curator of the museum happened to visit a small restaurant in the suburbs of Saint Denis, in which the same room served as a dining room and kitchen. While he was waiting to be served the curator was attracted by a frying pan of unusual appearance that hung upon the wall. He took it down, carefully removed some of the soot with which it was covered, and made out part of an inscription. What he found interested him so much that he bought the old pan.

When it was cleaned it was found to bear the arms of France and Navarre, surrounded by the chain of St Louis and the cord of the Order of Saint Esprit, and this inscription as well. "Here lies the magnificent Prince, King Louis XIV, King of France and Navarre. Requiescat in pace."

It was the plate that had been fastened to the coffin of Louis XIV. When the burial vaults of the royal family in the cathedral at Saint Denis were rifled by the populace in 1793 it had been wrenched from the coffin, fitted with a handle, and turned into a frying pan. The handle has been removed.

WINTER TRAVEL IN ALASKA

His route extended around the whole arctic coast of Alaska, beginning at the west side, and thence inland to Fort Yukon. He was received everywhere with cordial hospitality by the Eskimos. Two weeks were spent at Point Barrow, where the traveler had an opportunity of studying the largest Eskimo village in Alaska under winter conditions. During the subsequent journey of 225 miles to Flaxman Island the party saw only one human being and were housed only twice.

The archdeacon describes it as "the barrenest, most desolate, most forsaken coast I have ever seen in my life; flat as this paper on which I write, the frozen land merging indistinguishably into the frozen sea; nothing but a stick of driftwood here and there, half buried in the indented snow, gives evidence of the shore."

For two weeks the travelers had to face a bitterly cold northeast wind, and the faces of all were continuously frozen. The heaviest task of all was the journey over the winter's unbroken snow to Fort Yukon. On this inland trip Stefansson and his party were encountered and escorted to Fort Yukon, where Stefansson, who was seriously ill, received medical attention.

In tracing the genealogy of a New England family that came from England in 1634, Mertom T. Goodrich reports to the Journal of Heredity that 43 per cent of this man's male descendants have held public office. Of his seven sons, five of them held town offices. Many of the female descendants were teachers.

Pent Up Emotions.

"I don't suppose you bear any ill will toward your officers?"

"No," replied the discharged mule skinner. "But there's a mule somewhere in France that I'd like to give a piece of my mind to now that I'm out of the service. I wasn't allowed to swear at the brute when I was in the army."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Literary Note.

Longfellow had just written "Excelsior."

"If I want to wait," he mused, "I [illegible] a big price for this as [illegible] poetry."

[illegible] sigh, he mailed the manuscript to his publishers.

That's the Question.

ther on the last voyage of all.

The little room was sweet with the scent of many flowers, and the two caskets, side by side, are covered with the floral tributes of the loving children and friends.

Loved Music.

"They had always been fond of music, and mother loved the band concerts," said one of the daughters. "We did not know they were going to one on Tuesday night, and it has been a very great shock to us."

Their fondness for music—which indirectly led to their death — was again emphasized when Miss Bell spoke of her father's delight in hearing the grandchildren sing. "I have often heard him say, 'Now, children, sing "Our Blessed Redeemer 'Ere He Breathes a Last Tender Farewell,"' she said brokenly.

Mrs. Bell was born in Grafton 77 years ago. Mr. Bell was a native of Dunse, Scotland, and was in his 79th year. The couple celebrated their golden wedding a few years ago.

Many at Funeral.

Relatives and friends filled the home of Mr. Herbert Bell, the eldest son, when Mr. Johnston, rector of St. Saviour's Church, conducted the double funeral service at two o'clock this afternoon. Following the service at the house the bodies were taken to St. John's, Norway, and Rev. W. L. Baynes-Reed, rector of St. John's, conducted the service at the grave. Children, grandchildren and friends followed the remains to the graveside. The pallbearers were Messrs. Herbert and Aluard Bell, sons of the deceased; H. Brantford and B. A. Lindo, sons-in-law, and Robert Barratt and J. E. Sturgeon.

Mr. and Mrs. Bell are survived by three sons and five daughters—Aluard and Herbert Bell, Toronto; Percival of Moosejaw; Mrs. Glover, of Ohio; Mrs. Lindo, Mrs. Brantford, Miss Bell, and Miss Clara Bell, all of Toronto. Eighteen grandchildren also survive.

RURAL TEACHERS WILL DEMAND MINIMUM SALARY OF $600 A YEAR

Scale to Increase $50 a Year to a Maximum of $800—Ontario Educational Association Assumes Position of Labor Union

The rural school teachers of Ontario are preparing to have a say in the matter of fixing their own compensation. School Boards advertising for teachers will no longer be able to induce candidates to cut the compensation by bidding against each other. "State salary wanted" will disappear fro mthese announcements, a phrase which is attached to the large percentage of the notices which appear in the daily papers.

Ninety per cent or more of the teachers of this province belong to the Ontario Educational Association and this organization has assumed all the functions of a labor union. Every teacher on the roll of membership has recently received a circular instructing them how to proceed in securing appointments for the coming school year. All are asked to insist on a minimum salary of $600 a year for the first year's service $650 for the second, $750 for the third and so on until a maximum of $800 is obtained. The scale is to be the same for men and women teachers.

It is one thing to ask for a certain salary, another matter to secure it. ut in order to gain their point the teachers will employ the usual weapon of unionism. If a school board refuses to pay the schedule salary then that school is to be left without a teacher until the trustees undergo a change of heart. If at the end of first year the schedule increase is not granted, the teacher is to leave and no other member of the association will apply for the position.

The above is the substance of a statement made by Mrs. Webster of Cambray, in her address at the picnic of the Farmer's Club on Thursday. Mrs. Webster has always taken an active interest in school matters. Her own children have now passed the school age but her solicitude for the welfare of the schools has not flagged on this account. She spoke approvingly of the move made by the teachers to better their own conditons and the audience who are directly affected by the action of the teachers were evidently of the same mind as the teachers.

Rural School oards have, of late years especially found it difficult to secure qualified teachers. The question of salary has been the real cause of the difficulty. For this condition teachers are largely to blame by adopting the custom of cutting rates in order to get a start in the profession. The minimum salary now asked for is higher than the average rate now paid rural teachers of both sexes over the entire province.

COBB OF DETROIT GETS FIRST PLACE

WINS PREMIER HONORS AMONG AMERICAN LEAGUE BATTERS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Chicago, Aug. 9.—The battle between the two stars, Sisler, St. Louis, and Cobb, of Detroit, for premier honors among American League batters, resulted in the latter taking first place with an average of .365, according to unoffocial averages received here. Sisler is ten points behind. Sisler retained his lead in total bases with a mark of 186 bases. Johnson, Cleveland, caught up to the St. Louis star in stolen bases. Each has 22 to his credit. "Babe" Ruth, Boston slugger, has failed in his last five games to add to his string of 16 home runs, but is still at the top of the circuit drive hitters.

HORSE SHOOTING CASE

Interesting Trial Now in Progress at Lindsay Town.

Lindsay, August 9.—An important trial is in progress before Magistrate Moore, the parties involved being from the townships of Dalton and Digby. The Dewell brothers are accused of shooting two horses belonging to Joseph Gardner. Many witnesses are to appear, and the case has aroused much interest in the north, where both parties are well known.

A feature of yesterday morning's evidence was a sharp controversy between Mr. A. M. Fulton, who appeared for the Crown, and Mr. L. R. Knight, who is acting for the defendants, during the examination of Joseph Gardner. It is probable the case will go before a jury for final settlement.

AUTO TAKES FIRE

Lindsay Man Has Burning Experience on the Road.

Mr. Pat White, Lindsay, while in Uxbridge, had quite an exciting experience with his auto. Mr. White was near the market, and a number of farmers were sitting in the car and on the running board enjoying a good smoke. When Mr. White left Uxbridge for home he thought he could smell something burning, but on turning around could see nothing wrong. Going along at a good pace, he was surprised on turning around again to find the back part of the car in flames. Pat immediately off with his coat and succeeded in smothering the fire and putting it out quicker than a fire brigade. Of course, some new cushions and other repairs will be needed.

EDITOR'S MAIL

LBOR SAVING MACHINERY

Editor Review:—The management of the Grand Opera House is to be congratulated upon the pictures shown, depicting the most modern inventions of the machinery of production. The educative value to the thoughtful producer, the toiler is immense. One could see illustrated the steam shovel working in the metal mines, doing as much excafating and loading in one hour as 32 men could do in a day.

Then again in the corset making factories, sewing machines working six rows of stitching at one time. What great labor saving devices! Take the steam shovel in a ten hour day, 320 workmen were displaced and yet the goods were upon the market. One should ask himself what becomes of that 320 workmen but in the same picture, there were several of these shovels, which would displace over one thousand men. One would be practically safe in estimating 50 per cent would be on the unemployed list. So what benefit under our present system of production for profit instead of use, is machinery to the toiler, machinery which place nine thenths of the wealth to the capitalist class and one tenth to the producer, and the margin getting wider? This is a grievance, the machinery is speeded up for production and the few producers employed are speeded up to keep pace with those machines pouring the wealth into the pockets of the privileged class, while that 50 per cent of unemployed stand looking on and slowly starving.

Thos epictures were the greatest advocates for the eight hour day and forty four hour week that has yet been to Peterboro. I hope sir, the Grand Theatre will keep that class of picture going until the next election and that as many working people as can afford it will go to see them with those things in their mind. Then the election of a labor candidate will be assured.

If the law of supply and demand is to rule the labor market, under the conditions herein mentioned, what is to become of the working men and the cost of living still rising?

THOS. TOOMS.

THE BAND CONCERT.

A record crowd last night listened with much interest to the Temple Band give one of their best programs so far this season. The snappy marches and selections were well received. The band was augmented by Bandsman J. Sutton, who has just arrived from England. Mr. Sutton, who is a cornet soloist, also manipulates a trumpet. The solo played by this new member of the band was very pleasing. It would appear that the general public are taking advantage of attending the weekly band concerts, as August concludes the season for concerts in the park.

HUNDRED THOUSAND RY. FIREMEN AND ENGINEMEN DEMAND WAGE INCREASE

Three Hundred Chairmen of Brotherhood Meeting Today—Canadian Railways in Question—New Wage Scale to be Drawn Up—Hope For Settlement of Railway Shopmen's Strike Soon.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Cleveland, O., August 12.—Three hundred local chairmen of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Fireman and Enginemen, representing more than 100,000 firemen and hostlers throughout the United States and Canada, met here today to discuss wage demands to be presented to the railroad administration.

New Wage Scale.

A new wage scale will be drawn up and submitted at the close of the meeting, which is expected to last the greater part of the week, according to Timothy Shea, acting president of the brotherhood. Further action will depend on whether these demands are accepted, Mr. Shea said, adding that the members are firm in their purpose to obtain better living conditions.

Settlement in Sight.

Chicago, August 12.—While only a few of the striking Federated Railway Shopmen in the Chicago district have returned to work, railroad officials were optimistic today over the prospects of an early return of workmen to their places, pending a settlement of their wage demands or the result of a strike vote, for which ballots have been distributed from Washington by international officers in the regular way.

From many other parts of the country reports come that thousands of men had already gone back to work or would return today.

OLD PETERBORO BOY IS INJURED

DANIEL F. HARVIE THE SUPT.

Formerly With the Wm. Hamilton Co., This City, Suffers Severe Injuries in Disaster.

DANIEL F. HARVIE, mechanical superintendent of the huge elevator at Port Colborne, destroyed by an explosion Saturday afternoon, is reported today as seriously injured in the catastrophe. Harvie is a former resident of Peterborough, having been an employe of the William Hamilton Co. for years, and many friends here will be pleased to know that there is hope for his recovery.

One of the Finest.

The destroyed elevator was one of the finest the Government had built. It was constructed of steel and concrete and had only been in operation a few seasons. At the time of building it cost $1,250,000, but could not be replaced for les sthan $2,000,000. The explosion followed by fire has left it in such a state that the entire building will have to be rebuilt.

Hon. Dr. Reid, Minister of Railways and Canals, has taken the question of this appalling explosion up with officials of his department, and a thorough inquiry will be held. It is likely the elevator will be rebuilt, although it cannot be reconstructed in time to be of any assistance in handling this year's crop.

Loss Stupendous.

The entire loss, including the building valued at $2,000,000, grain $1,000,000, the barge Quebec, $25,000, estimated damage to neighboring buildings, $25,000, amounts to $3,050,000.

There is no outside insurance on the building and contents, the Government carrying its own risks.

Immediately upon receipt of word of the accident Saturday afternoon an official was sent from Montreal, and arrived upon the scene while the debris was still smoldering.

Eleven Dead.

Port Colborne, August 12. — The death toll of Saturday's disaster, which completely wrecked the big government grain elevator and the barge Quebec, stands at eleven, while the injured total eighteen.

PROFITEERING BILL PASSES SECOND READING IN THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT

All Persons Guilty of Profiteering to be Prosecuted—Penalty $1,000 or Six Months in Jail—Manufacturer Says He Is Ashamed of Profits He Is Making—Local Tribunal to Act.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, August 12.—The House of Commons, after hearing Sir Auckland Geddes, Minister for National Service and Reconstruction, declare that profiteering in foods was responsible for social unrest and discontent, passed last night on second reading the government bill providing for prosecution and penalties for persons guilty of profiteering. The bill was supported on the second reading by the Labor Party, and the vote on its passage was 251 to 8.

Manufacturer Ashamed.

Sir Auckland, who is in charge of this bill for the government, said the measure would have a great effect upon profiteering. The minister said that one manufacturer in Northern England had told him he "was ashamed" of the profits he was making. He added that shoes which sold at wholesale at from 15 to 25 shillings retailed at from 50 to 60 shillings.

The bill is now in the hands of the Committee of the Whole House, preparatory to bringing it up for final passage. The profiteering bill before the House of Commons provides for the establishment of a central authority to deal with those speculating in the necessities of life. Local and county tribunals would be empowered to inflict penalties up to £200 or six months' imprisonment. The bill would apply to England, Scotland and Wales, but not Ireland.

GUELPH CITIZENS VOTE SOLID FOR HYDRO-RADIAL SYSTEMS

By-Law to Sell City Railway Defeated in Vote of 437 For and 1,185 Against.

Mayor Duncan this morning received a telegram from Mr. J. W. Lyon, president Hydro-electric Radial Commission, stating that the bylaw to sell Guelph city street railway had been defeated in a vote of 437 for, and 1185 against the measure.

Mayor Duncan is a member of the Hydro-electric Radials Commission.

Vote Quite Clear.

Guelph, Aug. 11.—The citizens of Guelph made it clear to-day where their sympathies rest as between public ownership versus private corporations when they snowed under by an avalanche of votes the proposed agreement with the Grand River Railway Company to take over the local railroad service and extend a line to Puslinch Lake and Hespeler. Much as the latter connection is wanted, the attraction could not withstand Sir Adam Beck's eloquence or the splendid campaign put up by local Hydro officials. There is no mistaking the fact that Guelph is standing behind the Hydro and is in no danger of going back on its word to the rest of the municipalities in the radial scheme.

The vote to-day was slow in coming out, but it was a fairly large one considering that there are not many over 2,200 available voters on such a by-law. Of these 1,622 voted, with the following result:

An Exciting Campaign.

This marks the end of one of the most exciting campaigns on record in Guelph. The agreement with the Grand River people was at first received with approval by the majority of the people of this city, for the street railway has been productive of a series of never-ending deficits, and for years the city has been anxiously looking forward to securing radial connection to the north as well as the south, and while the G. R. R. people did not promise the latter, it was generally thought that if the by-law carried the C.P.R. would before long connect the city with Elora. When, however, the Hydro people saw the agreement they at once perceived that the possession of the local street railway carried with it a strategic position for the C.P.R., inasmuch as it gave the subsidiary company control of the surface rights of the streets of Guelph. Sir Adam Beck consequently interposed, and the Hydro forces were put in operation, with the result that the ratepayers of the city were aroused to see that the suggested arrangement was inimical to Hydro Radials and a breach of the pledge given when the city in 1916 entered into the arrangement with the rest of the municipalities for Hydro Radials.

The result has been a spirited two-weeks fight, with Sir Adam Beck present at two meetings pointing out the weakness of the agreement and demonstrating the remarkable hold he possesses over the admirers of public ownership.

BIG LABOR CONFERENCE

International Labor Organization Will Meet in October.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, August 12.—The International Labor Conference provided for in the peace treaty has been called by President Wilson to meet in Washington on October 29.

All nations members of this international labor organization as defined in the peace treaty, and those which probably will become members prior to the conference, have been invited to send delegates.

LEO COPP IS INJURED

Fell From Street Car Today and Broke Bone in Right Ankle.

Leo Copp, a popular young man who resides at 210 Autrim street, and who has recently returned from overseas where he spent three and a half years in active service, fell from a George street car, near the corner of Hunter street, about 12 o'clock today and broke a small bone in his right ankle.

Mr. Copp, who is at present employed at Smith's store during the absence of the proprietor, was standing on the rear of the car with his arms full of parcels and when the jolting of the car threw him off his balance he was unable to recover himself and fell to the pavement. He was carried into the Oak Hall store and Dr. Carmichael, on making an examination, discovered the injuries as above noted. The young man was taken to his home in Dr. Carmichael's car.

HUNGARIAN SITUATION

Peace Conference Postpones Action Pending Mission's Report.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, August 12.—The Peace Conference, it was apparent today, will take no further action in the Hungarian situation until the inter-Allied Military Mission, which has been sent to Budapest, makes its reports.

COMMUNICATION IS QUITE SUSPENDED

Business Practically Brought to a Standstill by Forest Fires in Upper Michigan.

NAVIGATION ALSO HELD UP

Telegraph and Telephone Wires Cut by Flames Near the Soo Junction---Steamers Aground

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Aug. 12—With only limited wire communication with other points and with inter-lake navigation still practically suspended, business has been virtually brought to a standstill here because of the forest fire situation in the eastern portion of the upper peninsula of Michigan.

Telegraph and telephone wires were cut by fires near the Soo Junction Sunday night, but service was partially restored late yesterday. None of the villages reported menaced today are in imminent danger. One Soo Junction residen was destroyde yesterday.

Navigation through St. Mary's River and the government locks here has been halted because of the smoke pall and three large freight carriers are reported aground.

ENTHUSIASTIC RECEPTION TO PRINCE OF WALES AT ST. JOHNS

Returned Soldiers and Sailors of Newfoundland Contingent Participate in Ceremonies---Also Boys' Organizations.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

St. John's Nfld. Aug. 12.—The Prince of Wales landed here at noon today and rode through an enthusiastic crowd lining two miles of city streets, over which decorated arches had been erected.

Represents Freedom

New York, Aug. 12.—Several New York papers today, in leading editorials join in welcoming "with their cousins to the north," the Prince of Wales, upon his arrival on the soil of North America.

The Sun says "Americans will join with their cousins to the north today in welcoming the heir to the British throne, not because he is the Prince of Wales, but because he represents officially, and most conspicuously that nation which through dark days battled determinedly for freedom, for justice and for right."

Recalls King Edward

The World recalls the visit of the Prince's grandfather in 1860, declaring that the American welcome to the present royal visitor is as "a comrade in arms and envoy in the friendship of nations closely associated in world aims as 1 nlanguage and history will be less warm."

St. John., Nfld. Aug. 12.—At the landing of the Prince, he received an address of welcome from the Mayor and City Council, and midway of the drive another was presented by the Chamber of Commerce, while the Government's welcome was delivered at the Parliament Building, where the ride ended.

Later his Royal Highness proceeded to the governent house, where he is to be the guest of the governor, Sir Alexander Harris, during his stay in the city.

SPLENDID ENTERTAINMENT PROVIDED FOR PETERBOROUGH'S CIVIC HOLIDAY

Performance of Visiting Band, Vaudeville Artists and Local Talent up to the Mark---Excellent and Exciting Contests on the Race Track

When the 91st Regiment Kilties Band of Hamilton paraded on the grounds of Exhibition Park yesterday afternoon playing "Bonnie Dundee," the marching tune of Peterborough's favorite military unit, the 93rd Battalion, they won at once the favor of the large crowd that filled the grand stand and overflowed in the quarter stretch and around the fence of the race track. The visiting band lived up to its reputation and both afternoon and evening provided an excellent musical entertainment.

The same success was scored by the juvenile pipe band from London and by the visiting vaudeville artists. A high-class entertainment in their various lines was furnished, and the committee in charge of the civic holiday program are to be congratulated upon the success of their enterprise. Both afternoon and evening the attendance was all that could be expected. The display of fireworks in the evening was especially brilliant.

The Horse Races.

As usual, the main attraction on the program was the horse races, and as usual these events were up to the standard. The day was perfect for racing, still and hot, the weather the horseman hopes for, and the track was in excellent condition. Many of the heats furnished exciting finishes, and in all excellent time was made by the winners.

The free-for-all was of course the main attraction on the bill, and first money was won by Camellia, owned by T. J. Poyett, in three straight beats. The best time, 2:15, was made in the third and last trial, when Mannella, owned by George Powell, of Belleville, gave the winner a hard run for the lead all around the circuit. The summary:

Mannella	4	2	2
Herman Weingar	2	3	3
Furioso	3	3	4

Time—2:17¼, 2:15¾, 2:15.

A Family Affair.

Father and son fought for the honors in the 2:18 race, the veteran and skilled driver, the hero of many a race track struggle, Geo. Powell, Belleville, holding the ribbons over the fast stepping Danger, and his son up behind Dick Bryson. The veteran could show them all how to guide a horse around the track. There is not a move in the business with which he is not familiar, and the son took dust from the father in every heat. In the second heat Danger was leading up the home stretch when Adrian Pointer, owned by Dr. Johnston of Port Hope and driven to a hard earned victory by E. W. Jones of Peterborough, forced the leader into a break and won the round. Summary:

PRO PATRIA WINS DESIGN CONTEST

WAR MEMORIAL CERTIFICATE COMPETITION CLOSED SATURDAY, AUG. 9.

Following the announcements in the daily papers of July 23rd and August 2nd, of the competition for the War Memorial Certificate, was closed on the mail of August 9th. It is regretted that two designs were not received until this morning, being too late to be judged with the five which were received on or before noon on Saturday.

The following is the report given by the committee acting as judges:

Gentlemen,—We, the members of the committee appointed to act as judges of the designs entered in the Memorial Certificate competition, beg leave to present the following report:

Five designs were submitted for our inspection. Two of these were of outstanding merit. We are unanimously of the opinion that the one signed "Pro Patria" is the best of the five; and that the one signed "Canada" is worthy of honorable mention. The former was sent in by Mr. Stanley Harris, 478 Donegal street, and the latter by Mr. W. Kingdon.

May we be permitted to add that we are of the opinion that the Board of Trade are to be congratulated on the success which has attended the carrying out of such a praiseworthy competition?

Signed on behalf of the committee—Mrs. Arthur Stevenson, W. A. Logan, Dr. F. P. McNulty, H. R. H Kenner.

The president, Mr. J. J. Turner, of the Board of Trade, wishes to thank all contestants for the care and pains that must have been taken to produce the various artistic designs sent in; also sincere thanks are due to the judges who so willingly accepted to act in that capacity.

The winner's design will be kept by the Board to be used for reproduction and the remaining designs will be forwarded to their respective owners.

AFTER TWENTY-FIVE YEARS

Miller Brothers of North Bay on Visit to Old Home Town.

Albert and William Miller, twenty-five years ago residents of Peterborough, but now of North Bay, are in the city visiting friends, having motored all the way down from their northern home. Both brothers are in the railway business, Albert being a conductor on the T.N.O. line owned by the province, and William an engineer on the C.P.R. Both appear vigorous and prosperous and are surprised at the growth attained by Peterborough since their residence here.

STONEY LAKE REGATTA MOST SUCCESSFUL EVER CONTESTED

Splendid Course for the Small Boat Events—Sailing Races Postponed for Lack of Wind.

The Stoney Lake Regatta yesterday was one of the finest and most successful ever held on the lake. The day was perfect for all except the sailing races. The course, however, was in excellent condition for the small boat events. The wharf, rocks, pavilian and verandah were crowded all day with throngs of interested spectators. The races were mostly close, and some splendid boating was exhibited.

The Hurry Scurry

The hurry scurry race was probably the most difficult race, and as such the most skill in canoeing was shown. The canoes were lined up on the wharf. At the sound of the whistle the boats were shoved out into the water. The men scrambled onto the wharf ran across it, swam out and climbed into their canoes. Then they paddled to the rock across from Juniper Island, portaged aver and padled around it, to return to the wharf. This race required great skill in handling the canoes and it proved very interesting for the spectators. The tilting was substituted by canoe boxing, which novelty was appreciation by participants and spectators alike.

Evening Festivities

The island presented a very lively spectacle in the evening. The pavilion was crowded with dancers and launches and boats kept continually coming and going. The prizes were presented in the evening by Mrs. G. Graham, who made a short speech, praising those who had been successful in the different events.

The only sad part of the day was the delay in starting, while the body of the late Mrs John Nugent was removed from a neighboring island. Mrs Nugent was a respected and popular cottager and the Stoney Lake people postponed the commencement of the races for about one hour and a half in respect for her.

Results o the Races

The open sailing and dingy sailing were postponed until today on account of the very slight breeze that was blowing.

Boys' Double Canoe—1, Willoughby and Currie; 2. Leckie and Kitchener.

Mixed Tandem Canoe—Fitzgerald and Miss Mackenzie; 2. Bluett and Miss McCallum.

APPEALS FOR AID FROM RUSSIANS

WITHDRAWAL OF ALLIED SUPPORT WOULD SPELL INEVITABLE DISASTER.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Aug. 12.—Appeals for continued military and support have been sent to the Allied governments and the United States by the provisional government of the northern region of Russia at Archangel. The appeals received today in Washington are understood to be identical with those forwarded to the other countries and said inevitable disaster would follow the withdrawal of Allied aid.

Ford plant at Kearney, N.J., will probably be completed by Nov. 1, when 2,500 men will be employed, with an output of 750 cars daily.

MACKENZIE KING AND CHINESE LABOR

THE DEVOUT LIBERALS of Ontario and elsewhere outside of Quebec who bravely attempt to conceal their disappointment over the election of Mackenzie King as leader, are trying to comfort themselves with the general allegation that as a friend of Labor he will secure the support of the workingmen. Such Liberals cannot have read Mr. King's book, "Industry and Humanity," published after his long and remunerative term of service with the Rockefeller Foundation in the United States, an institution that was financed by a contribution from the millions of the greatest monopolist that the world has ever produced, an institution that was created to satisfy the whim of a man enormously rich and looking for means of indulging a fancy for information.

On page 77 of his book Mr. King relates how in 1909 he was authorised by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, then Prime Minister of Canada, to confer with the Chinese Government respecting an arrangement between China and Canada whereby immigration from China to Canada might be regulated by international agreement. That immigration was then and is yet restricted by the impost of a poll tax upon every Chinaman coming to this country, the only available means that the Canadian Government has of regulating the tide, anything in the nature of an international treaty being arranged by the British authorities.

Mr. King was, and is, opposed to that poll tax. To use his own words, the tax "serves to sell into slavery thousands of coolie laborers." He is solicitous for the Chinese immigrant rather than for the native Canadian or Britisher already in this country who, if not made slaves by the competition of the coolie, whose cause Mr. King espouses, are at least reduced to pauperism and between the two conditions there is little to choose.

Mr. King while on his mission in China collaborated with Sir John Jordan, who at that time was the British Minister in Peking. Sir John was opposed to the poll tax, and a tentative agreement was drawn up by which the tax was to be abolished. Chinese immigration was to be restricted by a compact which would open the doors of Canada wider than ever to admit the cheap labor from the Orient. In this agreement Mr. King concurred, but the stars in their courses were against the carrying out of his plan. Events intervened to prevent the acceptance of his treaty by the governments interested.

Reciprocity became about this time the burning issue in Canadian politics. The Laurier Government decided to postpone the consideration of the Chinese treaty until the other question was disposed of. Mr. King's party lost office in 1911. About the same time the Chinese monarchy was overthrown by revolution and a republic established. The negotiations between Canada and the fallen dynasty went for naught.

During the shortage of labor in war time it was suggested that Chinese workmen be brought in to temporarily relieve the situation. Every one can recall the furore that was caused by the proposition. Organized Labor all over the country protested to such purpose that the idea was abandoned.

Hon. Mackenzie King, according to his own printed statement, is opposed to the only practical and available means the Canadian Government has to restrict Chinese immigration. He is a free trader in cheap labor as well as in the products of that labor. He would leave the matter to a third party not threatened by the labor referred to, and interested in making easy terms with China for the sake of what could be obtained in reciprocal advantages.

And this is the man that Organised Labor in Canada is asked to support as their champion, the man whose avowed interest is chiefly to save the coolie laborer from slavery.

GOVERNMENT BY ANCESTRY.

"I HAVE a grandfather."—Hon. Mackenzie King, new Liberal leader.

"I have ancestors who always supported the temperance cause."—Hartley Dewart, leader of the Ontario Opposition.

THE CASE OF SERGT. BLADE.

THE MEMBERS of the G. W. V. A. sent to the Police Commission a communication protesting against Sergt. Blade of the force engaging in side lines during his off hours, such as washing autos, acting as chauffeur and soliciting insurance. The Trades and Labor Council is also on record as holding the same view.

The Commissioners decided that they could not interfere with what one of their men does when not actually engaged on city work. Sergt. Blade can continue to draw his wages as a civic employe and at the same time edge some man, even if that man be a returned soldier, out of a job. This, too, at a time when so many men are idle.

How long would any member of that Police Commission stand for the same conditions in private business? How long would any member of the Board employ a man at regular and adequate wages and permit him to work for someone else during his leisure time? The Police Commissioners are not helpless in this matter as they appear to claim. They would be well within their rights if they insisted that every member of the force either confine himself to the duties for which he is paid or resign his position. The same principle should be applied to the management of civic affairs as those which prevail in private business.

When Mayor Duncan was a plain alderman he was in favor of a police board under aldermanic control, just as he has at times expressed himself with relation to expenditures by the school board. Not so many years ago Mayor Duncan supported a resolution in favor of reducing the salaries of the members of the police force. That was when he stretched his legs under an aldermanic desk. When he became mayor and a member of the Police Commission he seems to have undergone a change of heart. It is of record that the mayor moved for an increase of police compensation less than a year ago. seems that he filed no protest against the action of his He is, too, an avowed friend of the Veterans, and yet it seems that he filed no protest against he action of his colleagues in deciding to permit Sergt. Blade to do double duty.

The war veterans in this matter have another illustration of what is meant by fair weather friends.

LEADER KING'S MAGNANIMITY.

MR. KING, the new leader, is acclaimed as a believer in industrial representation in Parliament, that is, he concedes the right of Labor to elect members to the House of Comomns, a right equal to that of any other class.

This is certainly magnanimous on the part of Mr. King. The Review has all along stood for industrial, or occupational, representation in municipal council, in Legislature or in Parliament. Without this system representative government is a farce. But there is not at present, nor has there ever been, anything to prevent Labor from electing members from its own ranks. If more workingmen are to be sent to Parliament it will be entirely due to their own efforts, not for any moral or practical support they will receive from Mr. King and his party, who would choose a professional man and trick him out in overalls until his election was secured, or otherwise camouflage him as a champion of the workingmen's cause.

THE PRICE OF CHINESE LABOR.

ON PAGE 62 of his book, "Industry and Humanity," Hon. Mackenzie King relates that when he was in China in 1909 on a labor mission as the representative of the Canadian Government, he found that steel ingots were being exported from Woochang to the United States and that some of this steel eventually found its way into Canada. Mr. King, with refreshing frankness, goes on to say that except for the handicap of tariff and transportation, the workers in the iron and steel plants on this continent might as well have had their Chinese brethren working in adjoining plants, with no regulations as to hours or other conditions of labor, and with standards of living the reverse of such as are maintained by legislation in advanced communities.

Mr. King then explains how it is possible for the Chinese to sell steel products in the United States and Canada in competition with the home manufacturers. It is all a question of the cost of labor and the conditions under which the Chinaman works. Iron workers in the Orient receive the American equivalent of $3.20 to $4.00 a month. The man attending the furnaces is paid $8, and the most highly skilled workman does not receive more than $16 a month. The compensation of the foreman is $24.

All men work twelve hours a day seven days a week. At such times as shifts were made from day to night work or vice versa, there were continuous stretches of eihteen hours of labor. There were on Sundays, no holidays, the mills being operated 364 days in the yaer.

Mr. King says that except for the tariff the underpaid Chinese laborer might as well be in Hamilton or Toronto working in direct competition with Canadian labor and with no restrictions as to hours and living conditions as they are at home.

Mr. King and his party are pledgod to reduce the tariff which protects the Canadian workmen not only from the cheap labor of the Orient but from that of Europe as well. Reducing the tariff, according to Mr. King's own admission, will in effect put the Canadian wage earner in direct competition with the pauperised labor of the old world.

Serious Trouble In The City OF Fiume

The city of Fiume for several times affirmed her indestructible right to self-determination and declared herself united to Italy, and now the National Council of that Italian city wishes, through the medium of the Canadian press, to bring a further message to the Canadian people. The message alluded to follows:

"Since some time ago the French troops have assumed a provoking behaviour in our city. While they fraternize openly with the Croats and boast their attending Croatian clubs, they ignore completely both the civil and military Italian authorities of Fiume. French soldiers as well as French mariners rouse our citizens almost daily, offend our national sentiment, keep an immoral attitude in the presence of Fiuman ladies whom they insult even on the public streets and tear off the tricolor badges they all wear.

"On the evening of June 29, about 20 French mariners started a demonstration against Italy on Corso Vittorio, crying, "Long live Jugo-Slavia! Death to Italy.' his originated the deepest resentment in the people, and any occasion would have been enough to bring sad consequences. A further French imprudence, on the evening of July 2nd, provoked a general uprising of the people of Fiume against the French soldiers. The occasion was this: Two French soldiers, passing by Piazza Dante, having seen two Fiuman ladies wearing, as all Fiuman ladies now do, the tricolor badges, bearing the inscription 'Italy or death,' suddenly and brutally tore down the badges and, having thrown them on the ground, they stamped them under their feet. Then, while pronouncing dirty injuries against Italy, they spat in the ladies' faces and started away. It was then that several citizens assaulted the two French soldiers.

"As a consequence the anger became general. The whole population arose as one man against the French soldiers, mariners and officers, starting a body to body fight. All citizens went into the streets, which became real battle fields, where especially women were to be seen as furious combatants against the French. The centre of the fight was Piazza Dante. Italian Carabinieri and Granatieri having seen the danger in which the French found themselves, went to their protection, and succeeded in surrounding them. But the people were able to get through and threaten the French again. The Italian troops found it necessary to send for automobiles and have all French soldiers taken away.

"Suddenly from the balcony of the Croatian Club, which is on Piazza Dante, bottles were thrown against the crowd. One of them caused a wound to citizen Mario Petris' chest. Another one fell short of wounding Major Abba of the Royal Carabinieri. The crowd started for the club and again the Carabinieri had all to do their best to prevent them from harming the people therein; nevertheless they were able to get through, they invaded the club rooms and engaged in another battle. The club was thoroughly damaged: furniture, pictures, buffet were destroyed, but silverware was not touched. Finally the navy's whistles called the mariners aboard. Things were at such a point that Italian Carabinieri were unable to control the people anymore, and it was necessary to use cavalry. Women specially are angry, and it is our belief that as long as the French remain here there will be no order in our city of Fiume.'

THE WORK OF A SO-CALLED ANARCHIST

Henry Ford Started a School in His Factory to Make American Citizens Out of the Aliens.

The last testimony utter in the Ford-Tribune libel suit was a brilliant description of the Americanization methods created by the Ford organization and adopted by the United States government.

When the government found itself with tens of thousands of drafted men who could neither read nor speak the English language, and had no conception of American principles, it conscripted every Ford educational worker and used the same methods in the training camps which Henry Ford was using in his factories.

That was the final answer given by the Ford forces to the Chicago Tribune's contention that Ford is an anarchist and that his teachings make anarchists.

So American is the Ford educational course, said Clinton C. Dewitt, superintendent of the Ford English School, that not even the "English language" is taught; it is the "American language."

"Mr. Ford was of the opinion that you could not successfully put over one idea while there were 52 languages in the shop," said Mr. Dewitt, "so for his one idea, which was Americanism, he insisted on one language, which is the American language, and that is how our school began."

When Ford shop students graduate from the school, they graduate into "The American Club," which gives advanced acquaintance with American ideals.

The motto of the Ford school is, "Help the other fellow." Its school yell is:

"Siss—Boom—Bam!
Hurrah for Uncle Sam!"

Several of the lessons which the Ford classes study were read from the witness stand. One of the grammar lessons ran: "I buy an American flag. You buy an American flag. He buys an American flag."

In the centre of every class-room used by the 4,000 students, a huge silken American flag was kept always waving by the help of large electric fans.

"We always call the students Americans," said Mr. Dewitt. "We teach our men that they are Americans now. Our formula of address in the class room is, "Now, all the Americans who can say that sentence properly, stand up!"

"We always run patriotism and home together in our lessons," he continued. "We show how correct home life and love of country are linked together."

Some of the examination questions ran as follows: "Explain what the stars and stripes in the flag mean." "Explain what liberty, justice and equality means."

Another lesson had this as the "fact to be thought about"—"An anarchist is a man who does not believe in organized government." This was in lesson 63.

"Government is for the protection of the people," was the "fact to be thought about" in another lesson.

The American flag was bought in 5,000 lots for the Ford school pupils, and each man being furnished with one and taught its care and significance.

The Federal and State courts had long recognized a diploma from the Ford school as an evidence of adequate preparation for citizenship papers, it was testified.

"Henry Ford wishes that we become big, broad, intelligent American citizens," was a sentence in one of the reading lessons.

Mr. Ford leaned oll his educational workers to the goverment for the training of teachers for the Americanization work undertaken during the war. Ford educators were in the military camps and in foreign military units, spreading the American idea, and Henry Ford was paying their salaries.

HUMANE SOCIETY MEDAL PRESENTED CAP. P.P. YOUNG

Heroic Rescue of Miss Bland from Drowning Rewarded Saturday Evening.

A very fitting tribute was paid to Capt. P. P. Young, of Young's Point, last Saturday evening, for his great bravery in saving the life of Miss Bland nearly a year ago. The circumstances were reported to the Humane Association, and they presented Capt. Young with their medal, which is so difficult to earn. The Humane Society requested that the presentation take place publicly, and ex-Controller McCarthy, of Toronto, took charge of the proceedings on their behalf.

Mr. McCarthy gave a clear account of the gallant rescue performed by Capt. Young. He heard the cry of Miss Bland as she fell into the water, and ran above the power house but could see nothing. He then hastened to the raceway and perceived the sweatercoat which was attached to Miss Bland. Without a moment's hesitation he plunged into the swirling raceway to the rescue. He secured a hold on Miss Bland, and as they had been carried into the eddy of the raceway, he found it impossible to swim. He clung to a railing within reach and remained there in peril of instant death until relief came to take them off. Mr. McCarthy spoke in glowing praise of the heroic deed performed by the rescuer.

Rev. Father McCally spoke of the heroic deeds performed by, and the general estimable character of Capt. Young during his long life. Reeve Nichols, of Smith Township, expressed the feeling of praise felt by the township toward Capt. Young for his heroic deed, placing him high among a large number of Canadian heroes. Mr. McCarthy made the surprising announcement that only one out of forty applications are awarded the medal of the Humane Society, proving conclusively in spite of the modesty of Capt. Young that the deed performed was of extraordinary gallantry.

Capt. Young made a fitting reply, modestly stating he did not realize he was doing anything out of the way, and thanked his friends for their kindness. The meeting dispersed with the singing of the National Anthem.

THE BRIDGE ACCOUNTANT

Editor Review: Please allow me a small corner of your paper. I am a reader of municipal affairs, and a ratepayer. As to the controversy going on over the bridge accountant between Mr. Elliott and Perks, contrast in the financial situation should be made. Mr. Elliott is supposed to be a men well situated. Mr Perks is a returned soldier who had been gassed, with a wife and five children dependents upon him.

Then as to Mr. Wade and Mr. Graham, two other candidates. Mr. Graham is crippled with sciatica from trench exposure, and is unable to follow his usual occupation. He has a family. Mr. Wade is a returned soldier, competent, and worth thousands of dollars, and has not any dependents.

THE MERCHANTS' olrhaveealea

(In this column, which appears every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, will appear news and short articles of special interest to merchants, their salespeople and business men and women in general. All phases of store management—buying, accounting, advertising and retail salesmanship—will be dealt with, not theoretically, but by descriptions of methods actually in use by successful merchants.)

WYOMING MAKES SHORT SHRIFT OF BAD DEBTORS

"Most retailers figure their credit loss percentage on their total sales volume," said a Cheyenne, Wyo., merchant recently. "I think that this should be gotten by figuring what percentage of the total credit business is the credit losses. If that were done many retailers who think they are doing well in collections would see that they are guessing wrongly. If a store whose total sales volume is $40,000 loses $500 on bad debts the credit loss, says the retailer is 1¼ per cent. But suppose his credit business of the $40,000 volume is $10,000; then the credit loss would be 5 per cent. Looking at it in that way will cause the retailer to get busy on his collections and manner of granting credits."

And the retailers in Cheyenne have gotten busy.

They have back of them the Wyoming Credit Rating Exchange. It means that the merchants are back of the exchange; for when one drops out he is the target for bad debts. Working together to gather credit information above each buyer, holding to the policy of good references before extending credit to unknown buyers, being willing to report to others through the association the credit "behavior" of credit buyers, prompt turning in of overdue accounts and letting the association handle the collection without interference—these things have brought down the credit losses over 60 per cent in Cheyenne.

Each merchant displays one of the association cards prominently and here's the way it works: One day when he had gotten to a grocer for $65, a debtor refused to pay; and he set out to play the old game of stinging the next victim. It used to be easy; for a merchant used to prefer to give risky credit to losing trade. He knew that if he didn't the next man would. It used to be that way in Cheyenne. But when this man appeared at prospective victim No. Two's store seeking credit, No. Two called up the W. C. R. Exchange and made inquiry, the prospective debtor being a bit uneasy the while.

"What can you tell me on Blank—Will R?"

"Just a moment, please!" And the girl referred to her card. It showed that Doe, the grocer, had turned in an overdue account against Blank sixty days overdue.

"Hello. We find that Mr. Blank has not paid an overdue account, that he has with Doe, the grocer. It is $65 * * * You're welcome."

"I'm sorry Mr. Blank," said No. Two, "but I'm afraid that we cannot open an account here for you now. I am advised that you still have a bill with Mr Doe. Will be glad to have you came in after you have fixed matters with Mr. Doe."

"Mean to say you won't trust me?"

"No, not exactly that; but we couldn't very well give you credit while you still owe Mr. Doe. I'm sorry but——"

"Well, if you don't want my trade I'll go where it is wanted."

"That's you privilege Mr. Blank."

Then followed an interesting experience. The W. C. R. Exchange traced the man's visits one after another just as if he were a train being reported by a train dispatcher's office. He was persevering. He tried nine stores that afternoon and each one called up as did No. Two. It is a rule of the Cheyenne merchants not to sell to a man who is behind with a brother merchant. After nine trials the debtor began to see the strength of the organization he was bucking. He went back to his first love and paid his bill. And Mr. Doe says that he is a more pleased customer than ever.

One or two suits pushed relentlessly as examples, served to make it possible for the association to speak softly and be heard and heeded.

What is known as Janes's smile!

FLOOR TRAYS HELP SELL CANDY TO THE KIDDIES

"How to you manage to sell so much candy to the children without interfering with your regular duties?" was asked of an Indianapolis druggist. "I've seen you make twenty-one sales within the past ten minutes, besides selling articles to two ladies and taking in a prescription to be filled! How do you do it? I haven't seen you hurry either."

"That was the problem which nearly floored me when I came to this store four years ago," said the druggist. "I did not have one-half the penny trade which is handled here now, but it kept me jumping all the time. One day I happened to leave some unopened boxes temporarily in front of the penny candy show case when four children came into the store, and imediately climbed upon the boxes. I sold candy to those four tots in less than half the usual time and when they had gone I set to work to see why.

"I found upon studying the matter, that the children having climbed upon the boxes, were high enough that they could see the candies plainly and did not have to look edgewise at the shelves or the containing trays in trying to make their selection. Then I remembered that one little chap, instead of saying: 'Give me one of that,' pointed with a finger to the show case and adding, 'no, not that, the next one—no the other way,' as I moved my hand from tray to tray, as I thought he wished me to go.

"Instead of all that delay and hunting on my part for the kind of candy I thought he wanted, the little chap said: 'Give me one of those the scoop is in.' Right then and there I found the right key to the whole penny retail candy business. I at once planned to put the penny candies where the very small children who usually bought that kind could see each and every kind and without effort and then I panned to 'put a scoop in each tray.'

"The solution of the whole problem consisted of placing the candies in a glass front show case which stood on the floor. Then, I 'put a scoop in each tray,' by having some cards printed, each with a single letter, A to Z, on both front and back of the cards which were fastened each to a steel spring clip which could be attached to any tray. The little customer who could see every one of the low placed trays would say: 'Gimme me one of "C" and could serve him instantly, without search or delay."

THE DECALOG OF A SUCCESSFUL STORE

The T. S. Martin Company, of Sioux City, Ia., has a set of "Ten Commandments," all its own, not conflicting or referring to those of the Mosaic law, but relating to the management of a successful retail store.

These commandments were drawn by the founder of the company when he first entered business and, framed, are to be found today in a position of prominence, so that they will meet the eyes of the employes several times a day:

Second: That store which builds its future on good merchandise will grow and thrive and build into the esteem of the community more solidly than a store that sells price, not quality.

Third. The store is the gathering place of the best handiwork of the world's workers. They are entitled to compensation according as their work is good and, in the end, the store that serves with the good things of world industry will help to better homes and the people of the home.

Fourth. The store is an institution of service, a go-between as between world communities—and any and all service should be cheerful service.

Fifth. As service is bettered by the application of intelligence care should be taken always in the selection of those members of the organization who give direct service to the public.

Sixth. As merchandise is the commodity in which the public is served by the store, such merchandise should always measure up to a set standard of goodness.

Seventh. Where, in use, merchandise does not measure up to the Martin standard, it shall always be subject to return and exchange.

Eighth. The store is always the servant of the public and the customer's word is always law.

Ninth. To perfect service the store should always reflect the ideas of the patronizing public and should, therefore, keep constant note of all comment.

TRUE TO TRADITIONS OF SEA

"When I got into some clothes and got out to see what the trouble was I was surprised to see dozens of sailors as busy as bees helping care for the wounded and making people as comfortable as possible. It developed that our train was carrying two day coaches filled with bluejackets, and a few seconds after the crash came they were out of the cars and making themselves generally useful.

"Some time later representatives of the railroad company came through the crowd settling with the passengers for slight damages. Some asked $50, others $100, and checks for the amount asked were forthcoming. One big man said that $100 would about square things with him, but added that the check should be made out to "those sailors out there." Accordingly the check was drawn in favor of the men who had been working like Trojans ever since the crash. But—

"The sailors refused to accept the money.

"The check was then turned over to the Red Cross to be used in naval relief work."

Their War Aims.

The Boche was a typical wide foreheaded Boche, with big horn-rimmed spectacles and a lager rotundity. It was possibly that rotundity which had prevented him getting away with the others when the British troops scared off the German party that was trying to cut their wire. He was a valuable prisoner, too, for he spoke English like a native. He had been, he told them, a professor of German in England for many years.—Capt. R. F. W. Rees.

PRIZED OLD RIFLE

Weapon Long Preserved as Heirloom in Family.

Belonged to John Ferril, Who Used It With Effect in Indian Wars of Kentucky—Passive During Civil War.

There is a story of the American rifle that has been handed down in the hearthstone history and traditions of those who for generations have lived in the West. It begins with the Greenbrier region of Virginia of colonial times, thence into Kentucky to Missouri in the days of Upper Louisiana, thence to the great prairies of the far West and on to California. The family rifle was dear and sacred.

John and Margaret Ferril and their family were with a party of pioneers from the Greenbrier region who migrated to Kentucky in the early days. Owing to the hostilities of the Indians, they were armed and under the command of Capt. Jacob Baughman, a brother of Margaret Ferril.

They "packed" on horses over the Alleghany mountains and when in camp at or near Crab Orchard, Ky., were attacked in the night by Indians. In the fight that ensued Capt. Baughman, John Ferril and others were killed, but the men held back the Indians long enough to enable some of the women and children to escape. Among the number thus saved were Margaret Ferril, a son, John Ferril, and two daughters; and also Mrs. Jacob Baughman, a son Henry of tender age, and two daughters.

John Ferril, then fourteen years old, who had escaped, swore an oath of revenge on his rifle. He kept that vow and his rifle became a bloody one in the Indian wars of Kentucky.

In the Boone Lick region of Missouri, now Howard county, in 1812, were built several forts for protection against Indians, especially the Sacs and Foxes and the Pottawatomies. John Ferril and family were in one of them, known as Fort Cooper. He here still possessed his old Kentucky rifle. After the war of 1812, in addition to farming, he often engaged in hunting expeditions up the Missouri and Kansas rivers, and sometimes far out on the great prairies.

Over a century ago he hunted bear and other game on what is now the site of Kansas City. He and other frontiersmen then predicted that a great city would be founded on the confluence of the Missouri and Kansas rivers.

The old rifle of John Ferril has been preserved. During the Civil war, when the authorities were collecting all the guns in Saline county, Missouri, they seized the old Ferril rifle. Keziah Ferril, then about ninety years old, cried and begged that it be not taken. Her sons and grandsons were wearing the blue and gray and a compromise was effected. It was agreed that this old rifle should be hid away, and thus the old Ferril rifle became a noncombatant in the Civil war. It later passed to the possession of Jesse Ferril, county judge, son of Henry Ferril, who founded Miami, Mo. On the death of Judge Jesse Ferril the rifle was passed on as an heirloom to his brother, John Ferril, who had been a soldier from Saline county with Doniphan's Missourians in the Mexican war. John Ferril died some months ago at his home in Exeter, Cal.

How Fast Shot Travels.

When standing within a few yards of a gun's muzzle at the time of discharge, a person would be amazingly astonished were he only able to see the shot go whizzing by. Experiments in instantaneous photography prove that the shot not only spread out, cometlike, as they fly, but they string out, one behind another at a much greater distance than they spread.

Thus, with a cylinder gun, when the shot of a charge reaches a target that is 40 yards away, the last shot is lagging full ten yards behind. Even a chokebore gun shot will lag behind eight yards in 40. This accounts for the wide swath that is mowed in a flock of ducks on which a charge of shot falls just right. About 5 per cent only of the shot, according to the most reliable deductions from experiments, arrive simultaneously at the target aimed at, the others lagging in the ratio named above.

HAS BROKEN ALL TRADITIONS

Present King of Siam Only One of His Royal Line to Refuse to Establish Harem.

It is a curious fact that while women of the lower classes in Siam have always enjoyed the greatest freedom, participating and competing with men in the business and pleasures of life, the ladies of the royal household have been kept in the background, appearing at only the most private social gatherings and never at public or official functions. As all former sovereigns had in their harems the cream of the aristocracy of the country, and, as they inevitably felt a hesitant chivalry about exhibiting their "wives" in public, they barred all women of rank from sight. The sovereign is expected to have in his harem a member of every influential family in the country, for it is considered that in no other way could he be in such close touch with the people of his kingdom. Polygamy has, therefore, been considered an obligation of royalty. But, curiously enough, the present reigning monarch is a bachelor, the first and only bachelor who has sat upon the throne of his fathers in twenty-five hundred years. And thereby hangs a tale, for marriage by a Siamese sovereign has meant not the simple taking of one wife, or a dozen, or even a mere hundred, but the wholesale adoption of a thousand or more. The young king's father and his father's father, and each of the long line of kings preceding them, had many wives. His father had between seven and eight thousand. And, when the young crown prince returned from his long stay in Europe—he had passed a third of his life there—he was told by his royal father that there had been selected for him a number of court beauties from which he could take his choice of a hundred or two for his harem. But the prince would have nothing to do with this wholesale acquisition of a husband's holdings. "When I marry," he declared to his astonished father, "it will be to one wife and to no more, and she shall be the one queen of my heart and the one queen of my realm." —From "The Land of the White Elephant," by Frederick Dean, in Asia Magazine.

Couldn't Be Discouraged.

There are croakers in every country, always boding its ruin. Such a one then lived in Philadelphia; a person of note, an elderly man, with a wise look and a very grave manner of speaking; his name was Samuel Mickle.

The gentleman, a stranger to me, stopped one day at my door and asked me if I was the young man who had lately opened a new printing house. Being answered in the affirmative, he said he was sorry for me, because it was an expensive undertaking, and the expense would be lost; for Philadelphia was a sinking place, the people already half bankrupt, or near being so; all appearances to the contrary, such as new buildings and the rise of rents, being to his certain knowledge fallacious; for they were, in fact, among the things that would soon ruin us. And he gave me such a detail of misfortunes now existing, or that were soon to exist, that he left me half melancholy.

Had I known him before I engaged in this business, probably I never should have done it. This man continued to live in this decaying place, and to declaim in the same strain, refusing for many years to buy a house there, because all was going to destruction; and at last I had the pleasure of seeing him give five times as much for one as he might have bought it for when he first began his croaking. —Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin.

Strategic Advantage.

A major, attired in his raincoat, was crossing the parade ground one rainy morning when a young medical officer, hastening toward shelter, came past and saluted without slowing down.

"Wait there a minute, lieutenant," called the major. "Never salute when at the double time. Strictly against regulations."

With that the major launched out upon a long lecture on the significance and value of the salute, while the lieutenant, now standing stiffly at attention, was drenched to the skin.

A few days later the major was afflicted with toothache and sought the services of a dental surgeon. As he reclined in the chair, he thought he detected a peculiar expression of satisfaction on the young dentist's face.

"Look here," he said suddenly. "Haven't I seen you before?"

"Yes, sir," was the answer, "you were speaking to me the other morning about saluting—"

"Great Scott!" yelled the major, leaping from the chair and starting for the door, "I've had some close calls in my time, but never anything to compare with this one."—Judge.

LAUNDRY MOVED WITH THEM

A correspondent with the American army in France, while motoring near Verdun, met a sergeant who asked if he might ride with him to a pile of ruins that had once been a town. The chance meeting threw light on how a "doughboy" laundry operates. After the sergeant had entered the car he asked the occupants:

"You chaps ain't seen my laundry anywhere, have you?"

"Laundry? We didn't know there was a laundry in this part of France."

"Well, there is, and it belongs to us. At least it did yesterday. We've been transferred from the division to the corps. When I got back from headquarters the division had moved and the laundry was gone. I think they stole it. We used to be attached to a hospital; when they moved we hitched our laundry to a truck and went along."

"Your laundry is on wheels, then?"

"Yes sir. It needs wheels, the way this division is moving. Our laundry is a couple of big tanks on a wagon with a steam-heating apparatus. First we soak the duds in suds; then we steam them; next we bake them. In an hour everything is washed, rinsed and dried. When a bunch comes out of the trenches we give 'em new clothes and run the old ones through the washing machine; then we bake 'em and issue 'em out to the next gang, and keep things going. Fifteen hundred outfits a day—that's our average. Three weeks to launder the whole division."

As they neared the ruined village, he caught sight of the portable laundry, and with a "Thank you" he hurried off to take possession.—Youth's Companion.

COBOURG'S .GREAT. HORSE SHOW
AUGUST 19-23, 1919

Besides the many attractive features of Canada's most popular Horse Show, the directors have pleasure in announcing that they have secured the 48th Highlanders' Band for the week.

ROYAL CANADIAN DRAGOONS

HIGH JUMPING AND TWO OR THREE EXCITING RACES EACH DAY

The Directors have arranged for Polo Matches each afternoon

This is also the week when all Soldiers who enlisted with Cobourg Garrison Artillery, 139th, 235th, etc., are being invited to revisit their old comrades at Cobourg. They will be the guests of the Town of Cobourg and of the Horse Show.

EACH NIGHT A FAMOUS BRITISH MILITARY TATTOO

will be held, in which the War Veterans' Association and Cobourg Artillery, assisted by hundreds of returned soldiers and by the 48th Highlanders and Cobourg Bands, will participate. The Dragoons will also take part.

If you are a lover of the Clyde, Percheron, Hackney Thoroughbred, High Stepper. If you are a lover of Steeplechase, Across Country Horse Racing.

If you are a lover of High Jumping (the world's record was made at the Cobourg Horse Show by Confidence, ridden by Jack Hamilton, 7 feet 10¾ inches.

If you have or have not seen the Royal Canadian Dragoons in their Musical Ride and other military sports.

If you wish to witness the British Military Tattoo each evening.

Then plan to see the Horse Show, which this year will eclipse its own wonderful record.

But far and above all, every effort is being put forth to secure the honor of a visit from

HIS R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES

during the Show

All these events promise to make the Cobourg Horse Show more attractive than ever. The charge for autos will be 25c, including parking

GOD SAVE THE KING AND THE PRINCE OF WALES.

MEMBERS OF LADIES' UNION TO HAVE POST OF HONOR IN PARADE

Program of Sports for Labor Day Offers Rich Variety of Events--- Ball Game Morning and Afternoon.

The Labor Day Committee of the Trades and Labor Council are leaving nothing undone to make that day one of continuous entertainment for the citizens of Peterborough, and if the weather man does his part there should be no regrets from any one for having stayed in the city for that day. To start with, a ball game will be the morning attraction. Immediately after the noon hour the various unions will line up at Central Park and parade through the city to Riverside Park. It is expected that Union Labor will turn out en masse and in this way show its united strength. Many if not all of the locals will be headed by a float or a banner. The City Fire Fighters are expecting to take their position in the line of march, with their apparatus, and would be placed at the head or rear, so that in the event of an alarm they could respond without any delay and disorder. It is also hoped that the ladies' union (Electrical Workers, No. 772) will be out in force to take the place of honor in the line, with the Trades Council immediately following. The local unions will then appear in the order of the dates of their charters, the oldest chartered union, the Molders, having precedence. The Musicians' Union will furnish the band for the day, and besides leading the march will render a choice program during the afternoon at Riverside Park. On the arrival of the parade at the park a list of sports will be run off. A baby show will also be a feature of the day, and a local physician will be requested to act as judge. In order to permit of the afternoon ball game the committee has been obliged to curtail the number of events on the list of sports. A tug-of-war will form part of the day's amusement, and will be contested by the various unions. Any union that aspires to the honor of rope-stretching champions is asked to send its entry to the chairman of the committee, A. J. Bolwell, 165 Hunter street E., by Monday, August 25. Any two unions of thirty members or less may combine to select a team.

It is still too early to say what team will hook up with the Petes for this demonstration, but both the games will be well worth seeing. An effort will be made to have Belleville play the two games. A silver cup will be put up for competition.

There will be refreshment booths on the grounds under the supervision of the Trades Council. Ladies from the Electrical Workers' Union will be in charge.

To conclude the day's entertainment a dance is being arranged for the evening, and efforts are being made to secure permission to utilise the armories for this event.

The twenty-eight-page program now in the hands of the printers will, it is hoped, be available at various stores in the city on or about Tuesday prior to Labor Day. It is replete with the advertisements of wide-awake merchants and others, and it will repay readers to look them over and remember them.

Any one entering a race who desires to protect his amateur standing can do so by receiving an order for goods equivalent to the value of any prize won, the order to be on any program advertiser such winner may select.

An invitation to participate in the parade is extended to merchants and others who care to decorate their delivery vehicles. As in all parades of this nature, they can take up positions in the rear of the line of march.

The complete list of events and prizes follows:

10:00 a.m.—Ball game, at Riverside Park (teams will be announced in a later issue).

1:00 p.m.—Unions to line up for big parade.

Baby Show—Six months and under—Cash prize, $3.00.

Over six months to one year—Cash prize, $3.00.

Tug-of-War—To be contested by local unions—Prize, box of union-made cigars.

100 Yard Dash—Union men only—First prize, $4.00; second prise, $3.00.

Married Ladies' Race (75 yards)—First prize, $3.00; second prize, $2.00.

Young Ladies' Race (75 yards)—First prize, $3.00; second prise, $2.00.

Married Men's Race (100 yards)—First prize, $3.00; second prise, $2.00.

Girls' Race, 12 years and under 16 (50 yards)—First prize, $1.50; second prize, 75c.

Boys' Race, 12 years and under 16 (50 yards)—First prize, $1.50; second prize, 75c.

Boys' Race, under 12 years (50 yards)—First prize, $1.50; second prize, 75c.

Ball Game (teams to be announced later).

The 2:30 Class.

The 2:30 race, in which there were originally nine entries, Lawrence's Brilon being drawn after the first heat, furnished plenty of thrills in a chapter of accidents. In the first heat Frank Montgomery's Lady Barongale collided with Birdie Wilks at the first turn on the second round and took a wheel off the latter's bike. For this the driver of the Peterborough horse was set back to last place and fined $25. There was another mix-up in the same place in the third heat, and Bobby Hill, owned by Sheffield of Corbyville, had to retire with a damaged sulky. In the fourth, after the word was given the bell dropped from the judges' stand and, mistaking the sound for a recall, the driver of Mona Hall, a Port Hope entry, owned by G. E. Caldwell, returned to the wire, afterward making the circuit alone to save a place. This was the hardest fought race of all, as it required five heats to decide the winner. The four horses that won a share of the $200 purse were as follows:

Frank McKerran, J. Elmhirst, Keene	8	2	1	1	2
Birdie Wilkes, S. Palmer, Port Hope	8	7	2	3	1
Lady of the Lake, Johnston and Moyer, Port Hope	3	1	4	5	3
Jack Brooks, J. Dinsdale	1	5	6	6	6

Time—2:22½, 2:20¼, 2:23¼, 2:29¼.

Lady Barongale took second place in the fourth heat, and but for the collision in the first would undoubtedly have won second money.

Dr. James Sinclair of Cannington occupied his familiar place as starting judge, and that assured satisfaction for drivers, owners and spectators alike. The other officials in the judges' stand were C. A. MacIntosh of Toronto, presiding judge; H. C. Winch, Thomas Chalk, Port Hope, and Charles Armstrong, Havelock, timekeepers; A. H. McClure, clerk.

The flag dance by a team of girls from the Y. W. C. A., and the Highland flings by the visiting pipers, were among the features of the program.

MEAT INJURIOUS TO THE KIDNEYS

Take a Tablespoonful of Salts If Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lead and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

Willard STORAGE BATTERY SERVICE STATION

One Thing More

Most car owners know that this is the place to have their batteries tested with a hydrometer.

—That it is the place to buy a Bone Dry Battery with Willard Threaded Rubber Insulation which carries with it the evidence of battery newness.

—That it is the place to come for battery charging, repair, and a rental battery.

But, one thing more—it is the place to come, just as soon as you buy your new car, to have your battery registered and get the benefit of Willard 90-day battery insurance.

Drive in, whether you have bought a new car or not. Perhaps we can give you some battery information that will mean longer life to your battery and fuller use of your car.

CENTRAL PARK NEEDS WATER

Complaints are continually being made about the condition of Central Park.

Central Park in its present state is said to resemble the Sahara desert. This park in the centre of the town is a blot upon the appearance of the neighborhood. The lawns on McDonald street are kept in excellent condition as is the lawn of the Public Library across the road. The grass upon Central Park has not been watered this season, and people are thinking it is time that the city improved the appearance of this property, as well as insisting upon private citizens doing so.

MABEL NORMAD A DIVING VENUS

HER WONDERFUL DIVING STUNTS ARE WORTHY OF A KELLERMAN.

Last night was Mabel Normand night at the Grand, this little actress appearing in two splendid pictures which were greatly enjoyed by a capacity audience. In the first, entitled, "The Slavey's Beau," Miss Normand has a rough and tumble time with her love affairs at a summer boarding house but is disappointed each time. Finally she decides to commit suicide, but a goat interferes with her plans. In the final scene everything works out right for the slavey, and she is happy at last in the arms of a regular beau.

Much has been written and more has been said about the female form divine, but in Mabel Normand's latest picture, "A Perfect 36," one gets a fairly good glimpse of the real thing. As a divine Venus this actress leaves nothing to be desired. Some of the diving stunts she performs are worthy of a Kellerman.

The picture opens with Mabel and her aunt having a struggle with some refractory wall-paper, which absolutely refuses to go up right. Mabel finally wrecks the room and in fright runs to the room of one of the guests in the house. This guest takes pity on her ragged appearance and gives her a dress which later nearly put her in the calaboose. She then decides to become a traveller selling waists and her experiences in a sleeping car on her first trip out are most amusing.

Her predecessor in the waist business, having been discharged from the army, Mabel finds herself out of a job. She signs on as a diving Venus with the press agent of a circus. While in the wate the local Sherlock Holmes, having seen a picture of the dress in the city paper, confiscates Mabel's clothes, leaving her nothing but her "altogether." After explanations, everything is fixed up and Mabel signs on with the press agent as his diving Venus for life.

A splendid drama entitled "Whitewashed Walls" and the Screen Magazine complete a very entertaining program, which will be repeated today and tomorrow.

COMEDY PLAYERS OF NOTE SUPPORT MABEL NORMAND

Mabel Normand is given capital support in "A Perfect 36," her newest Goldwyn Picture, said to be even funnier than her recent vehicle, "Peck's Bad Girl." In "A Perfect 36" at the Grand today and Tomorrow, Miss Normand is surrounded by players identified with successful stage and screen productions and whose talents help to show the pretty little funmaker at her best.

For her leading man Miss Normand has Rod La Rocque, the dashing young actor who has proved his mettle in several other Goldwyn Pictures. It is his second role opposite Mabel Norman, his work with her in her previous comedy success, "The Venus Model," bringing the youthful leading man marked praise from critics and theatre patrons everywhere. La Rocque also has been highly complimented on his performance in "Money Mad," starring Mae Marsh. In "A Perfect 36" he has the role of O. P. Dildock and demonstrates that he is as much at home in broad comedy as he is in the more serious side of the screen.

Flora Zabelle, wife of Raymond Hitchcock, plays a prominent part in "A Perfect 36," the popular musical comedy favorite having been induced to make her debut in Goldwyn Pictures by Miss Normand, a close friend of Miss Zabelle and her husband, the comedian. Up to a short time ago Broadway playgoers knew no more charming dancer and singer than Miss Zabelle. Miss Zabelle has been seen in several important screen roles but none that gave her greater opportunities than the part of Lena, a woman of mystery, in "A Perfect 36."

Leila Romer, well known for her work on the speaking stage and before the camera, proves a splendid foil for Mabel Normand in her new production. In her stage career Miss Romer was highly successful in musical comedies and in vaudeville. On the screen she was seen at her best in "The Beloved Vagabond," "The Light That Failed" and in "The Iron Claw" series.

Louis R. Grisel, a Goldwyn Pictures favorite, plays the constable in the Normand play.

Edward Bernard has switched his allegiance from the vaudeville stage to the screen. He gives a sterling performance as Sol Manheimer, the busy waist manufacturer, in "A Perfect 36."

ANDREW CARNEGIE, PHILANTROPIST, DIES MONDAY AFTER A BRIEF ILLNESS

Millionaire Who Gave Away Several Ordinary Fortunes in Establishing Libraries, the Peterborough Library Included, All Over America.

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 11.—Andrew Carnegie, the steel magnate and philanthropist, died at his Lenox summer home, Shadowbrooke, at 7.10, Monday morning, after an illness of less than three days with bronchial pneumonia. So sudden was his death that his daughter, Mrs. Roswell Miller, was unable to get to her father's bedside before he died. His wife and private secretary were with him at the end.

Mr. Carnegie had spent most of the summer in Lenox, coming here late in May and up to a few weeks ago enjoyed himself in almost daily fishing trips on Lake Mahkeenac, which borders his big Shadowbrook estate, and in riding about his grounds.

He was taken ill Friday and grew steadily worse. His advanced age lessened the powers of resistance and hastened the end.

Mr. Carnegie came to Lenox to make his home in May, 1917, and had spent the past three summers there.

Mr. Carnegie leaves his wife, who was Miss Louise Whitefield of New York,(and his daughter, Margaret, who married last April Ensign Roswell Miller of New York.

In Ill-Health for Some Time.

Although Mr. Carnegie, who was in his eighty-fourth, had been an invalid since 1917, when he suffered an attack of grippe, the news of his death was a shock to old friends and former business associates here.

Owing to his ill-health Mr. Carnegie for some time had led a secluded life and his withdrawal from all public activities gave rise to frequent statements concerning his After his retirement he was compelled to limit the number of his daily visitors and until his last illness he met and spoke with only a few of his closest friends.

It is hard to believe that Andrew Carnegie is dead, for he was possessed of superabundance of vitality that bade fair to defy the grave until the utmost of man's span was reached. Throughout his monumental career, that which he most dreaded was death. With characteristic tenacity he clung to life, and was sometimes heard to say that he would willingly make his bargain with Faust could he re-live one-half the measure of his allotted years.

Picturesque Career.

There are many millionaires in America to-day possessed of more wealth than was Andrew Carnegie at the moment of his death. Yet he stood out as a personality unique.

He was born in Dunfermline, Scotland, in 1835, the son of a weaver of fair intellect and no mean ambition. By 1848, steam, which had been looming on the horizon for some time robbed the weaver of his means of livelihood, and it is one of the ironies of fate that, later the son should so utterly subdue and turn to his own advantage the jinn which had forced his family to fare across the ocean, where eventually they found harborage in Alleghany. Andrew set to work in a bobbin factory and the sum earned was a dollar and a half a week. At fourteen years he became messenger boy to the Ohio Telegraph Company, and learned all that came within his ken on the subject of telegraphy. In a short space of time he was an operator earning $300 a year and from that he became operator and clerk to the New Pennsylvania Railroad at Pittsburgh.

Before he had yet reached man's estate he made his first business venture. It involved the mortgaging of his family home, but the little god of fortune was already at the helm. Through his agency a new model of sleeping car was put on the [illegible] and from this period his career moved apace. In 1860 he and two other men sank $40,000 in a petroleum-yielding farm in Pennsylvania. Eventually the shares of this company had an aggregate market value of $5,000,000, and in one year alone, the cash divends amounted to $1,000,000.

First Bridge Over Ohio.

Carnegie's next move was the organization of the Keystone Bridge Company, which was responsible for the first bridge built across the Ohio River. A few years later the Union Iron Mills were erected. Returning from a visit to England in 1868 he introduced the Bessemer process into his mills, which meant complete revolutionization of old methods. Soon after that he became owner of the Homestead Steel Works at Pittsburgh.

The Wife and Daughter.

Mrs. Carnegie is a clever and domesticated woman who makes no social pretensions but has as much of the Spartan about her as Queen Mary herself.

Andrew Carnegie idolized his daughter, and one of his most frequent comments was that he was going to see that he did not leave her too much money to be a millstone round her neck. Just the same, she has been left sufficient to make her one of the wealthiest young heiresses in the world. Her upbringing has been a prudent and sensible one, for her father was a democrat to his finger-tips. He believed in the gospel of work, and one of its greatest exponents in the last century ceased to labor when the little laird breathed his last.

Peterborough has a direct interest in the life and death of the millionaire philanthropist as the splendid public library in this city was made possible through his generosity.

FOREST FIRES IN THE NORTH

Account for the Haze Enveloping Peterboro Last Few Days.

The hazy atmosphere enveloping Peterborough and surrounding country Sunday and yesterday is due to smoke from forest fires in different parts of Northern Ontario that has swept over this district during the last few days on account of the north winds that have been blowing. The fact that the sun has set in the west and risen in the east as a big red ball is due to the smoky haze caused by these fires. This condition, while noticeable in Toronto for only the last few days, has been apparent in the northern part of the province for some weeks. Rain has not fallen in many sections of the north for several weeks and in the Sault Ste. Marie district and in Muskoka the vision is daily obstructed by the smoke.

The movement of vessels in Lake Superior and to a lesser extent in Lake Huron has been interferred with on account of this smoke. Between the fog and the smoke, the captains are obliged to anchor at nights through they can make fairly good headway during the day.

On Whitefish Bay a few days ago at daylight, at the head of the St. Mary's River, between 50 and 60 freighters were found anchored within a short distance of each other. For twenty hours one day last week no vessels locked through the Canadian Soo because of the smoke.

While several small fires are burning within the city limits of Sault Ste. Marie, the successful work of the firemen has prevented the fire reaching the centre of the city. No lives have yet been lost.

THE WESTERN CROPS

It is estimated that about 15,000 men will be required to work as Farm Laborers to assist in harvesting the crops in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The Canadian Pacific has arranged and is advertising usual special fare of $12 to Winnipeg, and will run special trains from Toronto, Tuesday, August 12th, and Thursday, August 14th.

Not Yet Satisfied.

"Only to Albany," replied the other, who hated talking to strangers and wished to nip this one in the bud. "I am a commercial traveller. My age is forty-six. I am married. I have a son of nineteen; he is at Harvard. My father died last January. He was on the stock exchange. Mother is still living. I have a niece with red hair. Our cook's name is Bridget. Is there anything else?"

The chatty little man smiled affably. "What oil do you use for your tongue?" he inquired slowly.

America's Largest Industry.

The United States' largest manufacturing industry is iron and steel. The pig iron recovered in smelting iron ore amounts to about 25 per cent of the raw materials. The equivalent of about 14 per cent is driven off by volatilization in the coking of the coal; in the process of smelting a further 40 per cent escapes in gas, fumes and dust, and the remaining 21 per cent represents the slag.

Why Huskies Go Blind.

Many dogs that are driven in double-traced harness go blind. Particles of ice, exceedingly hard and fine, fall from the brush of the dog that is travelling ahead, and, striking the eye, scratch it, and in time cause partial or total blindness. The more ferocious dogs of the pack fight their way to the front of the teams, and are usually saved from this trouble.

Their Surprising Way.

"I was never more disappointed in anybody in my life than I was in my cousins up to Kay See," admitted Gabe Gosnell of Grudge, who was just back from a visit to the Big Burg. "Why, with everything on earth going on and anything you could think of liable to happen at any moment, I'll be switched if they don't poke off to bed at between nine and ten o'clock every night of the world!"—Kansas City Star.

Comparative statement compiled by a leading New York retail clothing house shows man's outfit costing $62.90 in 1914, costs $112.10 in 1919, quality the same.

LONG HARASSED BY WITCH

New England Man Finally Gets Relief by Using Silver Bullet in Time-Honored Way.

Your description of the many tribulations of William Morse and family of Newbury in 1781 brings to my mind some singular occurrences about the year 1780, S. P. Ridley writes to Boston Herald. This is the story told me about 1846:

My grandfather was captain of a schooner that went to Grand Banks fishing. They had a man aboard that was tormented, so they say, by a witch. He would lie in his berth hours at a time insensible. When he recovered he told them the witch had turned him into a horse and rode him around on the Sable island. His arms were black and blue where she had kicked him when he attempted to bite her. When he was told to pump a pail of water from the cask, it would be salt and rough. The next one pumped by another crew would be all right. While stirring up dough in the galley the bowl of the spoon would drop off and a twin would appear in the handle. He was annoyed so much that his health failed and he was sent to the galley to do what he could.

It has been said that you could only shoot a witch with silver, so my grandfather took his silver sleeve buttons and loaded the gun and told the man to shoot the witch when she appeared again. One day they heard the report of the gun and rushed to the cabin to find out the cause. The man lay insensible on the floor, and there was a spot of warm blood on the shins. He was never troubled after that.

He was asked the reason of his being troubled, but he did not know. He said he lived on Cape Cod, and one day he was traveling along the road and called at a house. There was no one in, but a goat was lying on the hearth. There was a pan of doughnuts in a pan. He took a few and passed on. He said when she took him and rode him around Sable island she twitted him of stealing the doughnuts. That was as near as he could see about it.

From about 1800 for a long time my grandfather was pilot in Boston harbor and a man of intelligence, and although I was small I fully believed that he believed the story he told me. He gave me the gun that the witch was shot with. His name and address of his office is in Boston directory of 1806.

Queer Food Facts.

One of the revolutionary discoveries of the last few years is the presence in our food of certain substances that in minute quantity are essential to life and health. Men, pigs, fowls and rats develop beri-beri on an exclusive diet of rice that has been polished, but are cured by a very small amount of watery or alcoholic extract of the rice-polishings. In a paper to Liverpool chemists, Prof. W. Ramsden lately mentioned that this "anti-beriberi vitamine" is now proven to be neither protein, fat, carbohydrate, nor other previously known constituent of plants or animals. It exists in sufficient proportion in most foodstuffs, but is absent from white flour, polished rice and arrowroot, and probably also from corn-flour, sago and tapioca. The absence of another vitamine, which may be also indispensable to man, has been shown by other researches to be a cause of sore eyes and arrested growth in rats and mice. It exists in quantity in yolk of egg, cod-liver oil, most animal fats, milk, cheese, green leaves, soya beans, millet and flaxseed, but is absent from lard, and all vegetable oils. A third vitamine is indicated, its lack being chiefly responsible for scurvy. It is present in all fresh vegetables, fruit and meat, but lacking in dried vegetables and dried seeds.

Mail That Is Put Ahead.

"It was not expected, probably, when the United States parcel post system was established, that it would be possible, in a few years, to stick a stamp on a day-old chick, or on a honey bee, and have it delivered by Uncle Sam. This is not, of course, exactly a literal possibility even yet, for chickens and bees must be properly boxed and the stamp affixed to the container; but the opening of the mails to these living commodities has proved a great convenience and has facilitated the work of beekeepers and poultrymen alike. Few people realize how large is the number of bees shipped each spring from the southern to the northern states, and even to Canada. The mail clerks always put these shipments through with great promptness—perhaps for reasons of their own.

Irish Writer Declares That the English People Are Becoming Talkative

THERE have been many indications that the war has changed more than the political boundaries of Europe; with them, one dares to hope, the "wicked hearts of men" with which Ulysses claimed an extensive acquaintance. The matter of hearts must be left to the future, but certain it is that changes seem to have occurred in the characteristics of certain nations, or at least that our conceptions of them need revision. "A Frenchman must always be talking whether he knows anything of the matter or not; an Englishman is content to say nothing when he has nothing to say," was the characteristically sweeping distinction made by Dr. Johnson; but the volatile Frenchman of fiction has been revealed as the imperturbable poilu; and it has long been whispered that even the taciturn Englishman has been betrayed by the experiences of war into an unwonted loquacity.

The general impression is fortified by the verdict of a genuine authority. For what better authority could one ask on the habits of the English than a witty Irishman? Mr. St. John Ervine confesses, in a recent article on "The Changing Englishman," that he is "very fond of discoursing on the English people, particularly in an adverse manner, in the presence of English people"—a characteristic, be it remarked, which he shares with many of his race. And not only do his conclusions bear out the prevailing conviction, but by the very fact that it is an Irishman who draws these conclusions a new twist is given to the whole discussion. For, mark the implications in Mr. Ervine's title alone. The Englishman is changing. The idea opens up an inviting field of speculation. One might inquire, for instance, whether the change would be one-sided only, whether with the upward progress of the Englishman there might not go a corresponding decline of the Irishman, until the positions were reversed and the Englishman was discovered appealing to heaven and the United States Senate to consider what Ireland had done to England. Indeed, some such reversal of roles is foreshadowed by Mr. Ervine himself, who tells of an unfortunate contretemps that happened to Mr. Chavasse, an Englishman, "who walks about Ireland in a Gaelic kilt and refuses to speak in any other but the ancient Irish language—to the great embarrassment of the Irish people. An Irish policeman," continues Mr. Irvine, "was so nonplussed by Mr. Chavasse's language on one occasion that he mistook him for a German spy and clapped him into jail—to the intense indignation of the Gaelic League, who strongly protested against this brutal outrage on a Gaelic-speaking Englishman by a hulking English-speaking Irishman!" So it seems that merely a change of heart and habits will not avail to keep an Englishman out of trouble in Ireland, not even if he who, in Emerson's phrase, "of all men stands firmest in his shoes" attempts to substitute for his ordinary footwear a pair of Irish brogues.

Mr. Ervine himself applies the sure and certain test — the Englishman travelling. In pre-war days Englishmen "wasted a great deal of eternity in walking up and down railway platforms looking for empty carriages," and when they found one, triple brass must be the armor of the traveler who evinced a desire to disturb their privacy. Whether it is the sociability of common danger or only the shortage of rolling stock, certain it is that the Englishman since the war has perforce acquired the habit of travelling more like a sardine than a lonely autocrat, and, making the best of a bad job, he has fallen into the habit of conversing with his neighbors. In fact, the Englishman, since the war, "has found his tongue, just as many Frenchmen, since the war, have lost theirs." And this loosening of the tongue, Mr. Ervine finds, goes much further than mere casual conversation in railroad carriages. This is borne out by the recent observations of Mr. E. V. Lucas. The Englishman has become not only loquacious but introspective. He will tell you all about his sensations under fire, almost like a character in a novel by Dostoievsky. If any one doubts this, concludes Mr. Ervine, 'let him consider "The Grand Fleet," by Lord Jellicoe, and "1914," by Lord French—and explain them away if he can."

Off to Serbia.

A strange and unwonted emigration is shortly to take place from the Lake District and fell country of northwestern England. The Herdwicks, the Cheviots and the Wensleydales, three famous types of mountain sheep, have "got together," and decided that some of their number shall go to Serbia and help to restock the wasted Serbian farms. It is an excellent and far-seeing arrangement. The Herdwicks, the little fell sheep, so familiar to every one who knows the Lake District, have the reputation of being the very hardiest sheep in Britain, and that is saying much. He thrives on the scantiest fare, managing to find all he needs even on the barren slate mountains of western Lakeland. And so he will do well on the bleak mountains of Serbia, while the Cheviots will gladly make their own of the foothills, and the Wensleydales will thrive in the rougher pasture.

NEW YORK MADE RAT TIGHT

Phrase Means That Enemy Agents and Spies Were Driven From Great United States Port.

"The port of New York is rat tight." This is the phrase in the vernacular of the sea which is going around the world to every quarter of the globe since the customs intelligence bureau was organized in New York a year ago. Paraphrased in the speech of the average American it means that it has been impossible for an alien enemy or spy, any article of contraband, or any secret message or forbidden information that might benefit the cause of the enemy, to come of go out of this port without being detected by the vigilant eyes of Uncle Sam's guardians, a New York Pittsburgh dispatch states.

More than 75 per cent of the immense volume of munition shipments sent from the United States to Europe passed through the port of New York, which has been the most important war port in the world. Moreover, it has been the main gateway through which travelers have passed either in going to allied or neutral countries or coming from such countries to the United States. Because of this volume of travel and traffic New York has been the spot from which enemy agents have worked most assiduously to send information and supplies to enemy countries. And it is because of these conditions that it has required more force, more determination and constant scrutiny to afford the protection which the vast interests centering here have received.

The best evidence that these conditions have been adequately met is found in the motto of seamen quoted above: "New York is rat tight." It sums succinctly the full measure of value which has been rendered to allied nations by an agency of the government which has worked so quietly here that many citizens even have not known of its existence. This agency is the customs intelligence bureau, organized at the beginning of last year by the collector of the port. Up to the time that America entered the great world war persons desiring to travel abroad found no trouble in leaving the United States. But with the opening of the war the customs branch of the government became an agency of grave importance. And the work they have accomplished without any question has saved many lives and millions of dollars.

Glacier Climbing in U. S.

Thanks to the "See-America-first" movement and the difficulties of European travel due to the war, many Americans are finding out that they can have all the thrills of seeing and climbing glaciers without paying the Swiss innkeepers and guides a stiff toll. Right here in the United States easily accessible but little known glaciers show the awe-inspiring crevasses and wonderful changing colors that one who has ever had first-hand experience with these slow moving rivers of ice can never forget.

Among the national parks easily accessible by railroad that furnish the sport of glacier climbing, are Glacier park and Rainier national park. It is Alaska, however, that offers the de luxe glacier sightseeing. This little known land not only has the largest glaciers—big enough to make Switzerland's pride look insignificant—but also the most easily accessible. In fact, during the summer season the excursion steamers run right up to the face of the glaciers that descend to salt water, and thread their way in among the bergs that have broken off. One of the sights along the seacoast is that of the iceman hitching his gasoline launch to a baby berg and towing it to a convenient place to cut out his supply.—Fred Telford, in Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Piecing Out Wool Supply.

All the wool grown in the world every year, if made only into clothing for people living outside the tropics, and not into horse blankets, carpets, etc., would provide fourteen ounces per person. That is enough to make one lightweight pair of bathing trunks extending from the waist to the knees. "Then, uncle," asked Rollo, "where does the rest of the wool we wear come from? Our coats and overcoats and blankets and woolen stockings?" "That," replied his uncle, "is reworked wool, or shoddy." "But surely, uncle," exclaimed the boy, "we do not wear shoddy, do we?" "No," said the honest uncle, "you and I do not, but everybody else does."—The Little Journal.

Paying War Debts.

There is no uniform rule of action regarding the payment of war debts. Some war debts have been entirely paid off, and others have been greatly reduced. In 1793, following the Revolutionary war, the public debt of the United States was $80,352,634. It was reduced year by year until 1812, when it was $45,209,737. During the war of 1812, it increased until 1816, when it was $127,334,933. Then followed a long period of steady yearly reduction till in 1835 it stood at the nominal figure of $37,512, with much more than that balance in the treasury. Circumstances brought a long period of growth in the public debt till 1866, following the Civil war, it was $2,773,236,173.

TWO THOUSAND FANS SAW PETES DEFEATED IN A SCRAPPY PLAY

Score 5 to 4 in Visitor's Favor---Kirn's Fielding a Feature of the Day

Nearly 2,000 people witnessed the Petes go down to defeat in the tenth inning to Belleville Saturday afternoon by the score of 5 to 4 after one of the snappiest and most exciting games of the season. Both stands were filled to capacity, and many lined the fences or seated themselves around the grounds. Many were present from Belleville, Port Hope, Cobourg, Lindsay and Oshawa.

Belleville started off from the drop of the bat and by means of a walk an error and a long sacrifice fly secured one run. After retiring the Petes they came right back in the second and scored another run. Not until the third did the Petes get a run across the rubber and that stage Cherett led off by beating out a nice bunt, spilhcted second and scored on a hit by R. Rose. The game went along quietly until the seventh, when Belleville scored two runs, but the locals came in full of fight and using a bunting game to advantage tied the score with three runs. Excitement ran high when the game was carried into the extra innings, but when Goyer was hit and Weir came across with a slashing two bagger, the winning run was scored by the visitors.

Rose Covered Well.

The Petes had Lorney Rose covering the 3rd base corner and he covered his position well, although he did not add much to the batting strength of the team. Swanston was behind the bat again and played his usual heady game, being the only man to get three safeties. The passing of Goyer on the tenth when the ball bounded off the ground and hit him is a disputable point. Manager Solomon bitterly protested against the decision, but Rosener stuck to his original decision and sent Goyer to first from where he scored the winning run.

Pure Hard Luck.

The Petes were certainly unfortunate to lose for they outhit and out fielded the Belleville bunch. Goyer, however, tightened in the pinches and the locals could not connect for safeties when hits meant runs.

The fielding of Kirn was perhaps the feature of the day. He accepted 6 assists without the sign of a boot. In the eighth Ross, the first man up, hit a slow one down between the pitcher's box and first base. Kirn sprinted for the ball and fell, but grabbed it and threw the ball with his gloved hand while on the ground, getting the runner by inches. It was the best fielding play seen here in some time.

First Inning.

Belleville—Weir was passed; Magher was safe when Long let Kirn's throw get away from him, going to second while Weir drew up at third; Ross flied out to Heenan, but it was too short for a sacrifice; Mills hoisted a fly to Jackson, who threw perfectly to the plate, but too late to get Weir; Smith walked and Gerow was thrown out by Kirn. One run, no hits, no errors.

Second Inning.

Belleville—Kellegher stuck his head over the base to be hit by one of Kirn's shoots and was sent to first; Simons got a hit and Goyer beat out a bunt, filling the bases; Weir grounded to Cherett, who threw Goyer out at second, Kellegher scoring on the play; Magher struck out. One run, two hits, no errors.

Peterborough — Swanston singled and stole second; Long popped a short foul fly to Mills; Jackson drew a pass; Clancy bunted and was safe on Goyer's error; Kirn hit a short fly to centre field; Solomon came in to hit for McCarney with the bases full, but struck out after working Goyer for three and two. No runs, one hit, one error.

Third Inning.

Belleville—Ross struck out; Mills got a hit to short right; Smith hit a short one and was thrown out by Swanston; Gerow went out, Cherett to Long. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterborough—Cherett beat out a nice bunt, stole second; R. Rose came through with a single over second and Cherett scored when Ross let the grounder get away from him; L. Rose tried to sacrifice his brother, but bunted too high to Magher, who doubled R. Rose at first; Swanston popped out to Magher. One run, one hit, no errors.

Fourth Inning.

Belleville—Kellegher struck out; Simons grounded to L. Rose and Goyer to Kirn. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough—Long fanned; Jackson grounded to Goyer; Clancy was hit in the side but gamely continued only to be caught off first by the left hand pitcher. No runs, hits or errors.

Fifth Inning.

Belleville—Weir struck out; Magher flied out to Cherett and Ross grounded to Kirn. No runs, hits, or errors.

Peterborough—Kirn struck out; Heenan, who replaced McCarney at centre, flied to Ross, who made a one-hand catch, after misjudging the ball. No runs, hits or errors.

Sixth Inning.

Belleville—Mills flied out to Jackson; Smith struck out and Gerow grounded to Kirn. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough—R. Rose popped to short; L. Rose past second but Long fanned. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Seventh Inning.

Belleville—Morden came in to bat for Kellegher and opened up with a two-base hit; Simons singled to left, scoring Morden; Goyer sacrificed Simons along; Weir grounded out to Cherett, Simons scoring on the play. The players came in thinking there were three out, but had to return while Magher popped to R. Rose Two runs, two hits, no errors.

Peterborough—This was the Petes big inning. Jackson drew his second pass, using good judgment on balls and strikes; Clancy got a safety the play going to second, but too late to get Jackson; Kirn fanned; Heenan tried to sacrifice and was safe on Gerow's error, Jackson scoring; Cherett singled, scoring Clancy, stole second and scored when Goyer threw wild to get him at third on R. Rose's grounded; L. Rose fanned. Three runs, two hits, one error.

Eighth Inning.

Belleville—Kirn made his circus play on Ross's slow grounder; Mills and Smith struck out. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough—Swanston opened up with a single but was forced at second by Long; Jackson singled. Then Long and Jackson worked a double steal; Clancy popped to short and Kirn struck out, losing a great chance to win. No runs, two hits, no errors.

Ninth Inning.

Belleville—Gerow and Morden fanned making four strike-outs in a row for Kirn; Simons grounds to L. Rose. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough — Heenan fanned; Cherett hit one that bounced around the plate, then settled in fair territory and was thrown out by Mills; R. Rose struck out. No runs, hit or errors.

Tenth Inning.

Belleville—Goyer was hit on the toes; Weir slashed out a long two-bagger to deep left-centre, scoring Goyer with the winning run; Magher ground out to R. Rose, Weir going to third; Ross ground to R. Rose, who cut Weir off at the plate on a nice play; Mills hit one into the clouds, which hit beside pitcher's base and R. Rose missed it; Smith flied to Jackson. One run, one hit, one error.

THE BELLEVILLE MANAGER ON THE COACHING LINE.

Peterborough—Mulhern batted for L. Rose, but grounded to Goyer; Swanston grounded to Goyer and Long finished the game when he broke his bat on one that went to third. No runs, hits or errors.

GRAND AMERICAN OPENS

Twentieth Annual Handicap Trapshooting Event in Chicago.

Chicago, Aug. 11.—Eight hundred and fifty men and women from all sections of the country are entered in the Grand American Handicap, the feature event of the trap shooting tournament, which will begin on Monday and continues for five days. Most of the entrants have arrived, and these gathered at the South Shore Country Club traps today to witness the contest for the all-round amateur and the open championship trophies events, which are only secondary in interest to the Grand American. Each event is at 200 targets—50 at 18 yards, 50 to 20 yards, 50 at 23 yards and 25 doubles at 16 yards.

GRAND AMERICAN HANDICAP

Eight Hundred and Fifty Trapshooters Have Entered This Event.

Chicago, Aug. 11.—The twentieth Grand American Handicap Trap Shooting tournament opened on the traps of the South Shore Country Club today with the largest list of entrants in the history of the event. The tournament will continue for five days closing on Friday with the Grand American Handicap, feature event of the meeting. There are 681 entries for this event and it is expected the post entries will bring the total up to 800 from every state in the union, except four.

SOCCER IN SWEDEN

Bethlehem of America Play Tie Game With Swede Footballers.

Stockholm, Aug. 10.—The Bethlehem Steel Football Club and the Stockholm team played a game today, it being the first contest the Americans have participated in in Sweden. The score was two goals each.

AUSTRALIAN LADIES WIN

Miss Betty Grimes Captures National Women's High Dive Championship.

Chicago, Aug. 10—Misses Fanny Durack and Wilhelmina Wylie, Australian swimming stars, today won men, and Miss Betty Grimes, Minneapolis A. C. won the national women's high dive championship. The Duluth Boat Club's four-oared crew won from the Lincoln Park Boat Club and the Duluth Club's swimmers also won the women's relay race. To-day's programme closed the second annual public water carnival of the Chicago Athletic Association.

The Australian swimmers who are on tour of the United States and Canada, understood their agreements permitted them to appear in exhibition and handicap events only. A telegram received today from Ferd W. Dubien, secretary of the National A. A. U. informed them, however, that they must take part in competitive events.

Miss Wylie won the 100-yard breast stroke swim from Miss Helen Thompson, of the Milwaukee A. C., by the narrow margin of two feet.

Miss Durack won the 400-yard free style by fifty feet from Miss Thelma Derby, of Indianapolis, after the latter had pushed her for 300 yards. The race would have been closer but for a collision with Miss Darby by another swimmer.

INJUNCTION FOR JOHNSON

Prevented From Interferring With New York American Club.

New York, Aug. 11.—Ban Johnson, President of the American League, was served upon his arrival here in Chicago yesterday with an injunction preventing him from interferring with the New York American Club using Pitcher Carl Mays, whom he had suspended. Johnson said he would be present at the Mays' hearing before Justice Luce, of the New York Supreme Court, but would not attend the meeting today called by the New York Americans. The Chicago and Boston clubs had representatives here for the meeting.

TRAPSHOOTING CHAMPION

Frank M. Troeh, Vancouver, Wins Open All-Round Championship.

Chicago, Aug. 11.—Mark P. Arle, of Thomasboro, trapshooting champion of Illinois, and former amateur champion of the United States, won the Hercules all-round amateur trapshooting championship at the South Shore Country Club with a score of 195 out of a possible 200 targets. Frank M. Troeh, Vancouver, Washington, amateur champion of that state and former national amateur champion, won the open all-round championship with a score of 190.

New York at Brooklyn

Plans were filed for a Cunard steamship building at 35 Broadway New York, to cost $5,140,000.

Not Much of a Pusher.

It was the elevated station at 8:30 on a weekday morning. The advice of the Irish guard who helps close the gates of the rear cars was an education in itself. But he had a competitor in a girl who was doing her valiant best to get on. "Push, push," she urged of a weak little masculine beside her. In a wish-washy voice he replied that he was pushing. Back came the swift retort: "You make me tired? You push like a jellyfish!"—New York Sun.

Opium.

Opium is the dried juice of the white poppy, a flower that grows in many parts of Asia. A few days after the flowers have fallen off the plants men go through the fields in the afternoon and make little cuts in the poppy head. Out of these cuts a milky juice oozes, which dries into a brown, sticky paste. Every morning the men go through the fields again and scrape off this paste, which they put into jars. Later on it is made into half-pound balls and then packed for shipment.

Making Gas From Wood.

Experiments on wood as part substitute for coal in gas making have been carried out in France. The wood used was sea pine in the form of billets cut from the middle of the trunk. The charge of the wood was about half the weight of that of coal, and carbonization occupied half the usual time. When running one retort with wood to every two with coal, no appreciable difference in the calorific power of the gas was noted. Of the two by-products—small coke and tar—the former amounted to 5 to 10 per cent.

Bronzing Small Articles.

Small articles may be gilded by immersing them in the following solution, which must be used at nearly boiling heat: Caustic potash, 180 parts; carbonate of potash, 20 parts; cyanide of potassium 9 parts; water, 1,000 parts. Rather more than one and one-half parts chloride of gold should be dissolved in the water when the other substances are to be added, and the whole boiled together. This mixture is often employed by dealers in cheap jewelry.

No Person Has Seen the Sun.

Astronomers aver that no one has ever seen the sun. A series of concentric shells envelops a nucleus of which we apparently know nothing except that it must be almost infinitely hotter than the fiercest furnace, and that it must amount to more than nine-tenths of the solar mass. That nucleus is the real sun, forever hidden from us. The outermost of the enveloping shell is about 5,000 miles thick, and is called the "chromosphere."

Ordering One's Life.

Take time to scrutinize your life. Try to define just why you are "run" and decide for yourself that if you are going to be ruled, as most of us are, it must be by something or somebody well worth the arduous sprinting we are all indulging in. If the goal toward which we are being steered is worth while, only then can we look back and feel that the race has been well run.

Test of Woolens.

One test is to cut off a bit of the selvedge and touch a match to it. If it shrivels up, but does not burn, it is wool, but if the fabric burns with a flame it is cotton. Another way is to put a bit of the cloth in a test tube or other glass receptacle with a solution of caustic soda. The soda will eat up the wool, leaving that which is not wool.

His Ruling Thought.

One hears a great deal about the absent-minded professor, but it would be hard to find one more absent-minded than the dentist who said soothingly, as he applied a tool to his automobile, under which he lay: "Now, this is going to hurt just a little."

Size of the Foot.

The foot should be as long as the ulna, or chief bone of the forearm—that is, from the small head of the bone to be seen at the wrist to the point of the elbow should be the length of the foot.

Grandmother's Economy.

Another reason why your dear old grandmother didn't think she could afford silk stockings was because she thought she ought to wear six or seven petticoats.—Dallas News.

The Warning.

He was nineteen years [illegible] was just sixteen. For a long time they had been saving their money to get married. When they together had acquired $100 they decided that they had reached the opportune time. So into Sullivan and to the courthouse for the needed license they hied.

As they ascended the steps of that building they met a motley crew coming down the stairway—a discontented-looking husband, a still more discontented-looking wife and five dilapidated, dirty children. The boy stopped, turned to stare at the girl and found that she was staring at him. Suddenly she laughed and tucking her hand into his arm turned him around so that his back was toward the entrance of the building. "Let's go back home, Fred, and wait until we've saved another hundred dollars," she advised.—Indianapolis News.

Psychologically Tested.

Psychological tests are being used by the United States employment service in New York to aid in determining the work for which applicants are best fitted.

Be Slow to Condemn.

Why condemn an individual or institution before you hear both sides? Does a jury convict or a judge sentence a prisoner before the evidence is heard?

Daily Thought.

Wisdom is ofttimes nearer when we stoop than when we soar.—Wordsworth.

To Make Attar of Roses.

After having gathered a quantity of roses, place them in a jar, then pour upon them some spring water. Cover the top with thin muslin to keep out the dust, and expose the jar to the heat of the sun for a few days, until oily particles are observed to be floating on the surface of the water. Take off this oil substance and place it in a bottle. This is the perfume known as "attar of roses."

Cannot Do Without Sleep.

Sleep is a necessity of life no less than is food. No man has ever succeeded in keeping awake for more than a few days continuously. If he is forced to do so, as in ancient Chinese tortures, where constant tickling of the feet made sleep impossible, he falls at last into a comatose state from which he never awakes.

Largest Motor Vessel.

The British twin-screw Diesel engined vessel Glenapp, which had just been built by a Glasgow shipyard, is according to the local press the largest and most powerful motor vessel in the world. It is of 10,000 tons deadweight, and has two sets of engines, constructed by Messrs. Harland & Wolff at their Glasgow works. These give a total horse power of 6,800, which figures represent a very marked progress in this type of vessel.

VERY JOLLY DAY AT BRAUNDPORT

SUNDAY SCHOOL CHILDREN AND CAMPERS INDULGE IN SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

The Braundport children's day celebration yesterday, August the 11th, will long be remembered by the gathering of over 200 campers, visitors, attendants, sympathizers, friends and relatives of the Braundport Sunday School, and of the families of Braund's and Routley's who camp there Great and joyful times was carried on all the afternoon and evening.

The sporting features of the day were: Children's tug-of-war, races, woman's tug-of-war, men's tug-of-war and a croquet tournament in the afternoon between cousins,, Routley and Braund. One of the cousins, Norman Routley, a returned soldier, was a very keen contester in the games. Mr. C. E. Sisson, Mr. D. Looms and J. T. Braund managed the sports, which, to the great delight of the crowd, passed off without a hitch.

Worked Like Trogans.

The ladies helped like Trogans. Home-made candy, cooked corn, which were peddled round the grounds, steaming hot, each little one knawing at a cob like the proverbial prodigal son in a far country. Cobs of corn! Yea, more.

Mr. and Mrs. James Richardson and others looked after the children's bower, at which was sold a great variety of needle-work, etc., made by the young camping ladies. These young ladies deserve mention for the faithful way they worked for days and days in making baskets, doilies, comb boxes, hair receivers, mats, crochet work, strings of ingeniously made paper beads. They all worked with a will, and the admiration of the older folk was surprising. Among the many young ladies were Miss Mary Hunt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred. Hunt, who camp on the south bank of the river; Miss Lillian Routley, Mildred Routley, Viola Routley, Jean Routley, Gwyneth Routley, Elva Braund, Nelda Braund and many others. The corn supplied by Miss Frances Gillespie and home-made candy by Mrs. W. Routley and Mrs. S. J. Richardson. Mrs. Hunt, sr., kindly done crochet work. Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Weir gave great aid in all the decorations

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Benton and family, Mr. and Mrs. G. Robertson and family, Mr. and Mrs. Heatherington, Mr. and Mrs. Sisson and family, Mr. and Mrs. Jno. Pelling, Mr. and Mrs. E. Hensley, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Thomas and family, Mr. and Mrs. Wellsor and family, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Ford and family, and many more others helped to make the great gathering a splendid success.

Balloon Ascension.

The balloon ascension pleased the children in a demonstrative way, more so than anticipated. And the huge bon-fire, which burned for hours, took the eye of many. In fact, since the worthy Indian warriors of the wonderous part, roamed on the banks of the Otonabee never has this spot been so awakened.

The thanks of R. C. Braund and all Braundport campers is tendered to all who helped to bring cheer and joy to the children at Braundport. The gathering closed with "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," and God Save the King.

BAND CONCERT TONIGHT.

FARMERS PLANNING TO ELECT NOMINEE

CONSTABLE McDONALD IN EAST PETERBOROUGH WILL RECEIVE FINANCIAL SUPPORT.

In East Peterborough the members of the Farmers' Club are hopeful of their ability to elect to the Legislature Mr. E. N. McDonald, the candidate who was nominated at a convention of the new party some time ago. In selecting nominees throughout the Province the policy adopted is to choose some man who has never been aggressively active in party politics. Judged by this standard, Mr. McDonald would appear to be a paragon, as he is authority for the statement that he has never yet cast a vote for either party. He is a young man who has always been active in the farmers' movement, and he has held the position of county president of the U. F. O. His fellow farmers will help in paying his election expenses, the money advanced, it is understood, to be repaid in the event of his success. It is proposed that a campaign fund be raised by making a levy of $1.50 on every club member in the riding.

In the Peterborough branch of the U. F. O., the regular monthly meeting of which was held last evening, the question of nominating a farmers' candidate in West Peterborough was referred to, but no definite action was taken. If no candidate is put up, the local club will contribute to the campaign expenses of the East Peterborough nominee. There are at present 183 members of the Peterborough branch. Of these, 78 come from East Peterborough, 82 from the West riding, and three are residents of the city. Should there be a candidate in both ridings, the financial support given each will be divided according to the membership.

The local club has already expended over $14,000 in purchasing directly such supplies as binder twine, feed, coal, sugar and other articles used on the farm, and have shipped at a saving to themselves thousands of dollars worth of live stock to the Toronto market. The new system has worked out satisfactorily, and the members are pleased with the result of their venture.

At the meeting last night the committee in charge of arrangements for the picnic held last week were not ready with their final report, but the affair was a financial success, the only drawback being the fact that so many were unable to attend on account of the lack of accommodation on the boat, which was filled to capacity long before the hour set for sailing. A number of those left behind made the trip by autos. G. A. Gillespie, M.L.A., J. E. Lillico and W. J. Cox, non-members but friends of the club, were given a unanimous vote of thanks last night for their assistance to those left behind to reach the picnic grounds by the overland route.

VETERAN MISSING SINCE LAST JUNE

LEFT ON VISIT TO BRANTFORD

Feared That Threats of Strikers Have Unbalanced Unfortunate Man's Mind.

Toronto, Aug. 13.—Cowed, it is thought, into a state of nervous excitement by threats made by strikers, James Dockray, a shell-shocked, war-worn veteran, disappeared from his place of employment. Going on in the even trend of his vocation, following months of active service in France, and despite the wounds which he had suffered and made him lame for life, Dockray was ordered out on strike on the 4th of June. He intimated that he was going to visit h brother, who resides at 98 Queen street, Brantford. He never reached there, and has disappeared completely.

All efforts put forth by his employers and the Central Branch of the Great War Veterans' Association to locate the missing veteran have been unavailing. Besides being badly wounded while on active service, Dockray suffered severe shell shock, and it is thought that the threats made by the strikers played on his nerves to such an extent that he has suffered complete loss of memory. No other reason can be assigned for his strange action, and his friends are afraid that he may be wandering around with his mind a blank.

The description of the missing man furnished by his employers is as follows: Height 5 feet 6 inches, weight 136 pounds, blue eyes, brown hair, lame from active service wounds, age 36 years, English, quiet, nervous manner, employed as machinist at Hamilton Gear Company, Toronto.

Every effort is being made to locate this veteran, and the employers are offering a substantial reward for information as to his whereabouts.

ENG. COAL MINERS RETURN TO WORK

REFERENDUM ON POLITICAL DEMANDS POSTPONED BY YORKSHIRE STRIKERS.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, August 1.—The coal miners of Yorkshire, where more than 200,000 men have been on strike since July 21, decided today to resume work. This action was taken at a mass meeting of delegates at Barnsley.

The executive council of the Yorkshire Miners' Association at a meeting on Tuesday recommended that the miners go back to work. The proposed direct action referendum on political demands was postponed by the executives of Labor's Triple Alliance in London on Tuesday. The changes in the policy of the Government, which needed consideration, were said to have played an important part in causing this postponement. The Triple Alliance is composed of the miners, the railwaymen and the transport workers.

WASHINGTON BANK HELD UP

Hold-Up Man Demands $150,000, and Finally Shoots Himself.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Aug. 13.—An unidentified hold-up man entered the banking rooms of the Munsey Trust Co., in the heart of the Pennsylvania Avenue section this morning, and pointing two pistols at the teller demanded $150,000. As the teller was making a show of counting the money the hold-up man fired missing him, and then turned a pistol on himself. He was killed almost instantly.

Sir Douglas Haig Ordered Taking of Passchendaele by the Canadian Troops When Others Had Failed.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Kingston, Aug. 13.—Speaking at a banquet last night to delegates of the Canadian Union of Municipalities in convention, General Sir Archibald Macdonnell, commandant at the Royal Military College, warmly defended Sir Arthur Currie against charges of unnecessary casualties at Passchendaele.

Macdonnell said he was present when Sir Douglas Haig told Currie to take that position, and Canadians took it, after Britishers, Australians and New Zealanders had failed. Records showed, said Macdonnell, that Canadians made maximum gains with minimum losses.

Not Enough Farmers.

Dr. Edwards, M.P. for Frontenac, urged greater co-operation between rural and urban municipal ties. He declared the high cost of living is due to the fact that there are not enough farmers and too many city people.

Control Monopolies

The convention spent this morning discussing causes and effects of the high cost of living. A resolution was introduced providing for commission to contrlo monopolies. This was strongly supported by many speakers.

AFTERMATH OF FATAL ACCIDENT

WOULD ERECT FOOT BRIDGE OVER CROSSING—COST OF MAINTAINING FLAGMAN.

Peterborough City's Legal Committee are securing terms and conditions on which flagmen are kept at level crossings in other cities and towns besides this

The accident by which an aged Peterborough couple—Mr. and Mrs. John Bell were killed last week in Toronto, occurred at a level crossing, toward the flagman's maintenance, at which Toronto city pays 25 per cent of the cost.

In this connection, work Commissioner Harris in a report submitted to Mayor Church of Toronto, yesterday, regarding the accident at the railway crossing at Riverdale Park last week, states that, in his opinion, the only method of reasonably affecting grade separation at this point is to erect a foot bridge across the tracks.

"But as this is a matter which concerns the Parks Department," he says, "I suggest that if any one consideration is given to this project, the Parks Commissioner be requested to deal with the matter."

It is pointed out that this existing level crossing exists by virtue of the Don Improvement Agreement, and provides access from the park on the east side of the Don to that on the west side. On account of the increased pedestrian traffic over this bridge, and across the tracks, the city made application for protection in October, 1916, and on the orders of the Dominion Railway Board, a watchman was provided during the months from May to October, the city to pay 25 per cent of the cost.

$53,000 STOLEN

Paper Currency of Merchants' Bank of Canada Disappears.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Edmonton, Aug 13.—Fifty three thousand dollars in paper currency, the property of the Merchants' Bank of Canada, was stolen from the post office here between Saturday and Tuesday. No clue to the thieves.

BOLSHEVIKI WITHDRAW FROM VINNITZA

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 13.—The City of Vinnitza, in Ukraine, 125 miles southwest of Kiev, has been abandoned by the Bolsheviki, according to a wireless message from Moscow. In Volhynia, anti-Bolsheviki forces have occupied the railway center of Lutsk, east of Kovel.

11,000 Prisoners

London, Aug. 12.—General Denikine's advance is continuing oling the greater part of the Southern Russian front against considerable Bolsheviki resistance, the War Office announced tonight.

Kamishin, which was taken on July 28, yielded 11,000 prisoners, 60 guns, 150 machine guns and an immense amount of war material, it was added.

REVENUE INCREASED FOR DOMINION OF CANADA

EIGHT MILLIONS MORE THAN FOR CORRESPONDING PERIOD LAST YEAR.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, August 13.—The revenue for the Dominion for the first four months of the fiscal year totalled $99,621,970, which was eight millions more than for the corresponding period of last year

There has been a falling off of four millions in customs, but excise duties have more than made up this decrease, while revenues from public works have grown considerably.

Expenditures were seventy-six and a half millions, not including war expenditures, this being an increase of forty millions.

The net debt at the end of July was one billion six hundred and seventy millions, which is an increase during that period of fifty-three millions.

MUST NOW CREATE MERCHANT FLEET

Also Help Germans Abroad With State Advances Declares Vice-Premier Mathias Erzberger

RAISE TWENTY-FIVE BILLION

Big Yearly Tax Budget Needed to Again Place Germany in a Healthy Condition.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Berlin, Aug. 13.—"We must proceed immediately to create a mercantile fleet and help Germans abroad with state advances," said Methias Erzberger, Vice-Premier and Minister of Finance of the German Government, speaking before the National Assembly at Weimar yesterday.

The Loan Consideration.

He promised the assembly that a bill carrying out these projects would be presented in a few weeks. Herr Erzberger added that the loan situation must be given consideration, declaring that the German nation must raise twenty-five billion marks yearly in taxes in order to regain a healthy condition.

THEFT INQUIRY AGAIN ADJOURED

MORE INFORMATION RE CHARGE AGAINST A. L. ALLEN TO BE SOUGHT.

The Allen case was again brought up in Police Court this morning with the result that it is adjourned for two weeks until more information can be obtained.

Pte. A. L. Allen is charged with having sold a subscription of the Pictorial Review in January without having turned in the money.

Harold Gilbert occupied the witness box this morning. He is the district representative for several publications and Pte. Allen was in his employ at the time the alleged subscription as taken. Mr. Strickland appeared for Allen and Crown Attorney Hatton for the Crown and the argument waxed very hot. There was no written contract between Allen and Gilbert but to the understanding was that Allen was to give in his subscriptions to Gilbert each night minus his own commission. Allen was to leave a receipt with the subscriber and hand in the money and the book with the stub of the recept. The book, which Allen used on the day concerning which the charge has been made, has been lost. Gilbert swore that Allen never returned it to him, but the magistrate refused to believe him. Allen is willing to swear that he handed in the book and thus makes it appear that Gilbert lost or "conveniently lost" the book. No list could be produced to show whether or not the subscription had been handed in or not and the magistrate adjourned the case until this list can be obtained from Toronto in spite of the protests of both the Crown and the accused.

Pte. Allen was brought from Kingston some time ago to face this charge. He was induced to plead guilty and was sentenced to two months with hard labor. A week ago Mr. Strickland took up the case and Allen was remanded for a week. Now the case is adjourned for two weeks. Pte. Allen has to come from Kingston where he is a member of the permanent force and witnesses will have to be brought from out of town. This seems like a lot of trouble and expense over a $2 subscription to a paper.

FARMERS BY THOUSANDS.

Thirty thousand people from both sides of the border attended the picnic at Crystal Beach on Tuesday, given by the Welland County Board of Agriculture and Erie, N. Y., County Grange. The big steamer Canadian brought the Canadians from Port Colborne, and the Americans came by way of Buffalo by boat. Seldom has the summer resort seen such a crowd.

REPLY OF RUMANIA TO ALLIES IS OF CONCILIATORY NATURE

Premier Bratiano Instructs Rumanian Officers at Budapest to Hold a Conference With Allied Generals.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Aug. 13.—The replies of Premier Bratiano of Roumania to the notes of the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference concerning the activity of Roumanian troops in Hungary have reached Paris, and were being decoded today by the Roumanian delegation.

Of Conciliatory Nature.

While full and exact texts of these notes are not available, members of the Roumanian delegation said that hey are of conciliatory nature.

It is said that Premier Bratiano has instructed the Roumanian officers at Budapest to hold an immediate conference with Allied generals there, and to make every effort to avoid complications.

It was not known today when notes would be presented to the Supreme Council.

Will Withdraw Troops

Bucharest, Aug. 13.—The Roumanian army entered Budapest in what was believed to be compliance with the wishes of the allies, Premier Bratiano said today in a statement given to the Associated Press. He said the movement was undertaken in an effort to stamp out Bolshevism and that there was not the slightest disposition on the part of the Roumanians to take any territory beyond that considered essential to Roumania's achievements of national unity. "Our troops will be withdrawn within the frontiers fixed by the Roumanian treaty of alliance with the Allies," Premier Bratiano said, "whenever there is established in Hungary a stable government that will afford protection to the Roumanian frontiers, and give an effective guarantee that the armistice or treaty terms will be observed."

VISCOUNT GREY TO REPRESENT GREAT BRITAIN AT WASHINGTON

Accep's Appointment Until Permanent Ambassador is Chosen—A Strong Figure in World Politics.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 13.—Viscount Grey, former British secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has agreed to represent the Bitish Government at Washington, pending the appointment of a permanent ambassador.

Viscount Grey of Fallodon, Sir Edward Grey, comes to the United States to represent the British Government after a brilliant career as head of the British Foreign Office. For eleven years, momentous in the political affairs of Europe, he was Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs from December 11, 1905 to December 11, 1916, and on several occasions during that period it was the initiative of Sir Edward Grey that caused the gathering clouds of war to disappear. It was he who made a last effort to prevent the European war. His effort failed through the attitude of the German government and the German Emperor.

Since his retirement from foreign office Viscount Grey has been living in retirement in Northumberland. The new ambassador's eyes began to trouble him in 1918, and at one time it was reported that he was totally blind. This report was exaggerated, but the Viscount has difficulty in reading, although his eye trouble has improved somewhat.

AMERICA'S MARTYRS IN THE WORLD'S WAR

Washington, August 13.—The final casualty report from the Central Records Office of the United States expeditionary forces in France made public by the War Department gave the total battle deaths as 49,498; total wounded, 205,690; and prisoners, 4,480.

"Only slight revisions" will be made in this report, it was announced.

Recent corrections in the list of missing have reduced the number to only 127 names, as compared with 264,000 for France and 121,000 for Britain. To July 1the army had reported 149,433 cases of disabled soldiers to the War Risk Insurance Bureau. It was estimated that the final total would be close to 200,000.

Canada's List of Dead.

Ottawa, August 13.—Canada's war toll in men, according to the official figures of the Militia Department, it 54,919 dead, 8,119 reported missing, 2,818 prisoners of war, and 149,709 wounded.

The details are as follows: Killed in action or died of wounds—Officers, 2,536; other ranks, 48,333; died—officers, 234; other ranks, 3,706, missing—officers, 352; other ranks, 7,767; prisoners of war—officers, 130; other ranks, 2,688; wounded—officers, 6,344; other ranks, 143,365.

Toronto Methodists hope soon to embark on a scheme for procuring their own educational films to be shown in the churches.

COUNCIL HASTILY SUMMONED.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, August 13.—The Inter-Allied Supreme Council was summoned hastily today to meet at 2:30 o'clock to consider the Hungarian situation.

OFF FOR NEW BRUNSWICK.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

St Johns, Nfld., August 13.—The Prince of Wales and party spent this morning at the regatta here and appeared to keenly enjoy the races. The party embarked for St. John, N. B., promptly at noon.

ONE FAMILY DOWN WITH SMALL POX

East City House Placarded and Inmates Are Being Kept in Strict Quarantine.

CASE IN ISOLATION HOSPITAL

M. O. H. Recommeds Vaccination of All Children not so Treated Recently--Wise Precaution

Dr. McPherson, M.O.H., reported to the Board of Health last evening that there are two small pox placards up in the city. In one case it was a visitor from outside and she had been sent to the Isolation Hospital. The other case is in East City and practically all the family have it, and are being kept in strict quaranteen.

The Board recommends that on account of the presence of small pox in the city and vicinity, parents have all children vaccinated who have not been so treated recently. The Board felt that if this recommendation be carried out a great deal less danger will be run.

STEAMER STRIKES MINE

Aftermath of Great War Endanger American Boat "Englewood."

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Dover, England, Aug. 13.—The American steamer "Englewood," five thousand tons, struck a mine in the North Sea, off the Thames River, at 7.30 o'clock this morning, and sent out a wireless message for help.

If she takes in more water, the steamer probably will be beached at Sheerness at the mouth of the Thames.

HASTE CAUSE OF TRADEDY

Two Dead, Two Dying, Eighteen Hurt in Accident at Quebec.

Quebec, Aug. 13.— Two men are dead, two are dying, and eighteen other are suffering from grevions minor casualties, as a result of the collapse of a gangway at the New Champlain Drydock at Lauzon at closing time yesterday. Large gangs of men were engaged in repairing two C.P.R. vessels, the War Peeridot and Dunbridge, and as the whistle sounded at quitting time there was a rush for the gangway leading from another vessel to the side of the dock. The gangway bridged a space of about 30 feet between the ship and the side of the dock, and beneath it was the floor of the dock, 40 feet below.

THEY WANT PROHIBITION.

At a meeting held in the Mehtodist church at Islington a society was formed for the purpose of propagating prohibition throughout the township of Etobicoke in preparation for the referendum in regard to the Ontario Temperance Act.

WOULD BANISH JUNK DEALERS FROM RESIDENTIAL DISTRICTS

Move in Right Direction Urged by M.O.H. Dr. McPherson—Board May Act at Its Discreation.

The Board of Health met last night, but as the meeting was very small, some business was left over for a full meeting. Dr. McPherson took the chair in the absence of Chairman Buller.

Dr. McPherson recommended that milk tests for the city be not published. He stated that the tests were not always accurate, and the publication leads to wrong impressions. The milk is carefully enough tested to ascertain if the milk is pure or not, and if it proves to be impure by the first test a second more accurate test can be made and, then action taken. The object of testing is not to ascertain the amount of butter fat in milk but to make certain milk is perfectly pure. Cleanliness is the most important thing to insist on.

The appointment of Mr. and Mrs. W. Reed as caretaker and cook, respectively, of the Isolation Hospital was ratified.

Would Start Junk Business.

An application was received from W. Roth for permission to start a junk business using a vacant lot on Lewis street to pile his iron and rubber He did not intend to have any rags or bones there. The Board felt that rather than encourage dealers to locate in residential districts, those that are there should gradually be forced out. Dr. McPherson would not recommend the place on Lewis street as a spot for storing junk of any kind. This matter was left in the hands of the Medical Health Office and Sanitary Inspector to act as they see fit.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 13, 1919

MR. WEARING AND THE NEW LEADER.

MR. JOSEPH WEARING has a communication in another column in which with choice phrases and apt expressions he praises Hon. Mackenzie King, the new Liberal leader, and predicts a successful career for the party under his guidance. We gladly make room for Mr Wearing's communication, both because it is a statement of the other side of a question and because we are convinced that Mr. Wearing is sincere in his admiration of a public man and is not inspired for the occasion by mere partisan enthusiasm.

But still it strikes us that Mr. Wearing has looked only on the bright side of the situation. He takes no note of the troubles that are certain to beset Mr. King's official pathway. In 1917 Mr. Wearing was an ardent Unionist himself. There was in Peterborough city or county no more devoted worker on behalf of the war than he. But for physical reasons he would have been in the thick of the scrap himself. He favored conscription and felt constrained to break party ties and forsake his party and his then leader on the issue which so clearly divided the country into two camps.

How, then, does Mr. Wearing reconcile his position in 1917 with that of the leader whom he now acknowledges? Why does he berate Mr. Rowell with the same vigor as he praises Mr. King, seeing that two years ago Mr. Wearing and Mr. Rowell were enthusiastic and devoted supporters of the same righteous cause?

Mr. Wearing appears to overlook the fact that Mr. King, diametrically opposed to him on every issue concerning the war two years ago, will have some difficulty in overcoming the opposition which his policy aroused in 1917. Whenever the next Federal election is held, the war is sure to be an issue. A public man's record in this regard, especially that of a party leader, is certain to count for or against him. This may not be right, but it is human nature, and it is with human nature that political parties and leaders have to deal. The war will eventually cease to be a political issue, the records of public men on this question will in time no longer be cited, but it will not be for some years to come.

Mr. Wearing says that Mr. King's love for "the common man is shown in his epoch-making book, 'Industry and Humanity'." From that book the average reader will be likely to acquire the impression that the author's so-called love for the common man is made secondary to that of his solicitude for the other class, and that anything he has to suggest on behalf of the former is in effect an attempt to make him a still more efficient part of the industrial machinery, not so much for his own temporary benefit as for the promotion of the material welfare of the man whom he serves. The cog wheel may be improved not for any advantage to itself but for the general benefit of the machine.

SUNDAY STREET CARS.

A CONTEMPORARY that bravely espouses the cause of Sunday street cars for cities of less than 50,000 inhabitants, says that Sir Adam Beck, if approached in the proper spirit, would probably be willing to give Peterborough permission to operate Sunday cars, provided their operation did not interfere with church worship. Some one evidently is under a delusion as to the status of Sir Adam. He is a man of authority beyond all question, but is by no means all powerful. There is a limit even to his prerogatives, although he may say to this municipality, come, and it comes, to another go, and it stands, not on the order of its departure. There is a greater authority than that of the head of the Hydro Commission, the Legislature of Ontario, or is it an interdenominational organization that is suspected of swaying that Legislature at will?

Sir Adam Beck has nothing to say as to whether or not municipal street cars shall be operated on Sunday. The law is clear on this point. Cities of the size of Peterborough are supposed to be incompetent of judging as to what is good or evil. When a municipality has a population of 50,000 or more, the inhabitants may take a plebiscite on the question of Sunday cars, but not otherwise. Had Peterborough a radial line connecting it with Lakefield, that line could do business as usual on Sunday. If that radial used part of the city line and was extended to some point south of the city, the cars could pass up and down George street on Sunday while the law kept the city cars stored in the barns.

It is perhaps just as well that our contemporary is wrong as to its estimate of the greatness of Sir Adam Beck. Peterborough has emerged from the babyhood stage of existence, and should be given authority to decide for itself, instead of being reduced to the necessity of appealing even to the head of the Hydro Commission as to what is good for it in either a material or a moral sense.

BE NOT DECEIVED.

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM as drawn up at the convention in Ottawa throws a sop to the farmers in the shape of a promise of free binders and other agricultural machinery. But the farmers of Canada can no longer be duped by the pledges of the party in Opposition. Experience has made them wary in this regard.

In 1896 the Liberals promised, if returned to power, to reduce the duty on binders. They were returned, and instead of reducing the duty referred to they raised it.

Previous to 1896 the customs tax on a binder imported into Canada was 20 per cent. ad valorem, and binders for taxation purposes were valued at $80. This made the tax on each machine $16 under the Conservative Government.

The Liberals, to make a show of keeping their pre-election pledge, cut the duty on binders to 17½ per cent., but more than offset this by raising the customs valuation of a machine to $100. During the Laurier regime the duty on a binder was $17.50, or $1.50 higher than it was before the change in Administration, this being the Liberal idea of a move in favor of the farmers. Sir Thomas White a few years ago reduced this duty by five per cent.

If the Liberals were in power tomorrow their pledge would be no more worthy of serious consideration than it was any time during their fifteen years of office. They dare not, even if so disposed, abolish the duty on agricultural machinery, destroying established industries in this country and throwing thousands of Canadian artisans out of profitable employment.

Before he retired from office Sir Thomas White by a masterstroke of statesmanship solved the problem of the cost of farm machinery to the farmers of the West by securing transportation rates which puts these farmers on the same footing as those in Ontario. Practical legislation rather than pre-election promises is what counts.

THE RIGHTS OF THE POLICE.

> The young man who was hit by a bullet fired from a revolver in the hands of a Toronto policeman appears to have himself to blame for his wound. A pursuing policeman's order to stop must not be disregarded. The officer's duty is to capture the fugitive he believes guilty of breaking the law. Were the police to let suspected persons to escape simply because these persist in disobeying his warning to cease running, Toronto would soon become a very disorderly city and the force would soon have to be re-manned with constables who do not shrink from bringing the runaways to a halt.—Mail and Empire.

IS IT ANY WONDER that members of a police force may occasionally acquire exaggerated ideas of their own rights and importance when newspapers of the standing of the Mail and Empire publish such piffle as the above? A member of the local force, distinguished, perhaps, in his special line, not so long ago in all seriousness told a young reporter, probably with a view to duly impressing the journalistic mind, that as an institution the police force was just as sacred, just as immune from criticism, as royalty itself. In his opinion it would be no less lese majesty to berate a policeman than to make derogatory remarks concerning a king.

The average policeman is prone to suspect the laity and to take liberties with the person or the prerogatives of the mere private citizen. In the Toronto case to which the Mail and Empire refers, with the logic of a schoolboy writing his first essay, a policeman attempted to arrest a young man whom he merely suspected of an offence. The young fellow took to his heels and ignored the officer's order to halt. Of course, no constable can be supposed to compromise his dignity by engaging in a foot race with an escaping victim. This particular representative of the law opened fire upon the fugitive. He declares he did not aim at him, merely fired to frighten him. At least he wounded the running man, and now a newspaper commends his action.

Are people who may simply be suspected of crime to be shot down indiscriminately by the police when they try to make a get-away? Even if the young man in question was guilty of the offence of which he was suspected, that guilt duly established, did not render him a subject for capital punishment. It has been shown again and again that even a policeman has no right to club, much less shoot, a prisoner, except to protect his own life or person. No officer is menaced as to his safety by a civilian in full flight. If the contention of the Mail and Empire is correct, then Canada is no better than some of the countries in Europe where militarism is, or was, the supreme law. Of course, policemen have rights, guaranteed by law, but as much can be said on behalf of civilians. Every man's life is supposed to be his own peculiar concern.

NOTES AND COMMENT.

THE PROPHET may enjoy honor outside his own country, but the profiteer seems to be in bad odor in every land on earth.

• • • • •

"ANDREW CARNEGIE gave away three and a half million dollars," says an exchange. In other words, having gathered where he had not strawed the magnate sought to make restitution.

• • • • •

HOW WOULD IT DO, under the present Canadian conditions, to ascertain the opinion of the United States as to statesmanship that is learned from books?

• • • • •

IF HON. Mackenzie King is the friend of Labor his admirers claim, then he cannot find rest for the sole of his foot on the tariff plank in the party's platform.

• • • • •

THERE ARE PLENTY of Ontario Liberals defeated in the election of 1917 who can sympathize with Mr. King, knowing what a millstone means when hung to a man's neck.

• • • • •

SOME OF THESE DAYS, unless the Allies speed up, the friends of the ex-kaiser will claim immunity for him under the statute of limitations or whatever it is the lawyers call it.

• • • • •

"THE LIBERAL platform is very generous to the returned men," says a western exchange. Yes, generous with promises at variance with the party's record during the most crucial period of the war.

• • • • •

To those who advocate a lowering of the tariff, the Liberal party holds out the only hope.—Lethbridge Herald.

OR TO THOSE who advocate any other chimerical idea.

MEN'S SUITS, it is announced, are to be equipped with pockets that will defy the most expert pickpockets, but after the outfit is paid for at current rates, any "dip" should not be denied anything he may salvage.

MR. JOSEPH WEARING says there has been no leadership in Canada since 1911. Still the country has been safely brought through the most trying period of its history under a leadership that has attracted admiration unstinted save by partisans at home.

FORMER DRINKERS MAY NOW USE DRUGS

Life insurance underwriters are keenly interested in the nature of the substitute that will replace alcohol in the dietary of users of stimulants. That section of the life insurance business which never actively opposed whiskey is certain that some substitute will be found, and they fear that it will in the end prove more injurious than hard liquor.

Prompt steps will be taken by the underwriters to aid the authorities to check any development in the direction of the excess use of drugs by those who heretofore relied upon alcohol. The life underwriters are much more interested in the general health of the community now than they were only a few years back. Then it was felt that it was the business of life insurance companies to issue policies protecting the individual, and pay the claim when a loss occurred. Now they take the view that they also owe the community the obligation of reducing mortality to the minimum so that the cost of conducting the business of insurance can be reduced. Their view of the matter is based solely on the business features and has nothing whatever to do with sentiment.

Under the rule of King Alcohol underwriters where divided in their allegiance. Some of them went so far as to refuse to sell policies to men who took a drink, none would sell to men who were known to be heavy drinkers. There has never been sufficient evidence to support the theory that whiskey is severely deletrious, and for that reason the underwriters who barred drinkers altogether were regarded as acting from pejudice rather than from a scientific conviction that alcohol was more dangerous than a hundred other things that are normally consumed by the people. Sugar is regarded by many underwriters equally as dangerous to the health of those who use it to excess.

But the thing that is disturbing the underwriters is the question of the substitute that will be adopted by users of stimulants. These may become drug addicts, and in addition to harming themselves would become a menace to the community. The objection of the underwriters to men who used alcohol to excess was on the score of their irresponsibility and liability to accident, rather than to the internal effects of the alcohol. Drug users will not only be helpless so far as they personally are concerned, but it is thought they will form a greater menace to the community.

Appeals On Behalf Of Profiteers

The New York Commercial takes the part of the business men of the country, the alleged profiteers, as follows, thus showing again that no cause is ever so desperate as to lack a champion. The Commercial says:

The Government has announced its intention of proceeding criminally against the packers. The packers may or may not have transgressed the law. If they have they should be punished for it and if not they should be unmolested. What is of infinitely more concern is the attitude of the Government toward business men. Already there is reflected a lack of confidence on the part of the business community. Charges of profiteering are being passed back and forth until every one engaged in the business of distributing the necessaries of life seems to be under suspicion.

Yet when all is said and done, what has it all amounted to? In all the search that has been and is being made for profiteers what actual guilt has as yet been uncovered? The packers are now, as they always are, immediate objects of attack because they are the biggest men in business. What assurance is there that any action such as is now contemplated will result in reducing the cost of living?

As a matter of fact, who are the real profiteers? Who actually gets the money that consumers are paying over and above what we consider normal [illegible]? As to foodstuffs the answer is as plain as it can be. The farmers the darlings of the Government, are the ones who have benefited most from the high price of foodstuffs. There is absolutely no question about that. As to manufactured goods, the principal cost is in labor, and labor was never well paid as now.

But does any one imagine for a moment that the Government would undertake to prosecute the farmers for profiteering? Does any one hear anything of labor being prosecuted for profiteering? The object of attack is always the business man—the man who fills such a necessary place in the distribution of merchandise so often scornfully referred to as the middleman. When it came to distributing the surplus food the Government refused his aid, but was obliged to set up some other agency in his place.

And yet who was it stood by the Government when it was threatened from without? Business men left their desks and flocked to the aid of the Government, often at tremendous sacrifice to themselves. Without them the Government could not have got along and the war could not have been won. All their training and business of intellect was needed to mobilize industry and direct the spending of the billions that were required for war purposes.

But among that grand army of dollar-a-year men did we find any farmers? Labor was well represented by Samuel Gompers and John Mitchell, but what were the farmers doing? If memory serves, they were complaining because they were not allowed to obtain $3.50 for wheat instead of $2.25, and the cotton planters were deliberately cutting down their acreage so as to force their price higher notwithstanding the world's tremendous need of cotton, which is one of the reasons why cotton fabrics are 25 per cent. higher than they were last year. Theodore F. Whitmarsh, at that time president of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association and one of Mr. Hoover's leading assistants, was the man who had much to do with formulating the rules governing food distribution. He refused to allow his own firm to make a profit of $11,000 on a transaction that was under way at the time the rules went into force. Rather a different spirit to that which prompted cutting down cotton acreage!

In the wholesale grocery trade there are houses that have been in existence for more than a hundred years. In dry goods, flour and many other lines there are firms that have been in continuous existence for as long. They are of unblemished reputation and consider their moral responsibility to the community to be even paramount to their legal responsibility. Yet a member of a firm of food distributors of the highest standing the moment he tried to speak before the Board of Estimate, was told by the Mayor of this city that he was a profiteer and a member of the "food trust"! And for no other reason than that he was engaged in the very necessary occupation of food distribution.

The Federal Trade Commission is just as reckless in its charges of profiteering. It and other agencies of the Government must be careful or they will start a conflagration they will be unable to stop.

A DELIGHTFUL TRIP

With the Catholic Order Foresters to Hastings Yesterday.

St. Peter's Court, C. O. F., held their annual water trip to Hastings on Monday. There was a good crowd on board and everyone enjoyed the beautiful sail down the river. The delightful scenery on either side of the river added much to the pleasure of the trip, and the excursionists (principally Hastings folk) arrived there about 1 o'clock and spent a very pleasant afternoon renewing friends in that pretty little town.

The boat left the Hastings wharf at 4 o'clock on the return trip, arriving in Peterborough about 8:30. This evening sail was perhaps the most enjoyable feature of the outing, and everybody landed on terra firma well satisfied with the day's outing.

POLACK CARNIVAL WORKED ON SUNDAY

Brantford, Aug. 13.—Strong protests are being made against the action of the Pollack carnival shows which came here from Toronto on Sunday, and which unloaded on Sunday evening. It is reported that the Ministerial Association has been asked to take action. The carnival is being brought here under the auspices of the G.W.V.A., and occupies the market square and the adjoining streets.

Mrs. Mona Bernhard, a member of the shows, while curling her hair, set fire to it, and was severely burned about the head. She is now in the Brantford General Hospital, doing well, but suffering severely.

BAYER

Your druggist gladly will give you the genuine "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" because genuine Aspirin now is made by Canadians and owned by a Canadian Corporation.

There is not a cent's worth of German interest in Aspirin.

During the war, acid imitations were sold as Aspirin in pill boxes and various other containers. But there is no substitute for genuine "Bayer Tablets of Aspirin" which have been proved safe by millions for Pain, Headache, Toothache, Earache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Colds, Grippe, Joint Pains, Neuritis.

Proper and safe directions are in every "Bayer" package.

Aspirin is the trade mark (registered in Canada) of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid. While it is well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to assist the public against imitations, the Tablets of Bayer Company [illegible] stamped with their general trade mark, the "Bayer Cross."

EDITOR'S MAIL

THE NEED OF THE HOUR

Editor Review: In Saturday night's issue a question was asked by Mr. T. Tooms if the law of supply and demand was to control the labor market under the conditions of labor saving machinery, what is to become of the working man? That is easily to answer. If there is any labor released in our urban centres there is lots of demand in our rural districts.

The farmer is hungry after help to thoroughly cultivate his land, to make it produce to its capacity, and is willing to pay a living wage to a man that is efficient or is willing to make himself efficient.

The world has not got at the present time the surplus of a half of a century gathering, but is facing destitution and nothing but a closer co-operation of all classes and a concentrated energy of all will relieve the situation.

I have nothing to say against the man that works faithful in his capacity in the shop or on the street or elsewhere for eight hours and then works three or four hours in his garden or some other productive work, he has done well. No man has a license for parading the streets with his hands shoved in his pockets up to his elbows whether on a strike or off a strike, to say one word against the high cost of living until he has done his part to increase production. Henry Ford will have to build a lot of automobiles at six hours a day to again supply our needs with wheat, potatoes, etc. It must come from the soil and the labor of this country must help produce it or face the situation like men. Our existence depends on the soil and no man can deny it, and the farmers has got just as much right to get up in the morning at 8 o'clock and go to work, and at 5 o'clock quit, and he and his wife, son and daughter sit down and say we have done our part as I have or any other citizen. If that was the case where would we land? In the midst of starvation at any cost of living.

And just one thing more. I want to say is that the farming community and the U.F.O. platform of today stands pat on moral questions and that is the greatest issue. In conclusion, I could say that I appreciate Mr. Toom's efforts in the labor cause as I have found him a good faithful, hard working fellow, only I think he has not got a broad enough view of the needs of the world today.

The press is expected to be free, for the views of the people on the subjects of the day providing they are in keeping with British institutions. In the future I will refrain from entering into controversy with any that have in their past capacity proved themselves intolerant or any that are using fictitous signatures.

Thanking you, I remain,

Yours,
W. H. MERRILL.

For Your Convenience

THE saving of the extra steps and extra motions has been shown to be a big thing in the business world. Efficiency engineers at fancy salaries have been hired to study the most convenient ways of getting work done. The biggest industries have proved that convenience pays, and it is the same in the household.

EDDY'S MATCHES & Indurated Fibreware

enable the housewife to save many extra steps and extra motions which may be unnoticed at the time, but which require time and energy just the same.

Eddy's Washtubs and Pails are easier to lift, easier to move, and keep the water hot longer. Eddy's Matches are safe, reliable and non-poisonous. They have been standard in Canada since 1851.

THE MERCHANTS' COLUMN

Edited by
MANSFIELD F. HOUSE
(Copyright.)

(In this column, which appears every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, will appear news and short articles of special interest to merchants, their salespeople and business men and women in general. All phases of store management—buying, accounting, advertising and retail salesmanship—will be dealt with, not theoretically, but by descriptions of methods actually in use by successful merchants.)

HUGHES' LETTERS TO CLERKS ARE SECRET OF HIS SALES

J. F. Hughes of Pratt, Kan., three years ago bought a dry goods store there which was commonly known as a "run-down" establishment. It was doing an annual business of about $30,000. Today the annual business handled by Mr. Hughes is in excess of $150,000 and instead of the three or four clerks employed when he bought the store he has a force of from eighteen to twenty-five.

Much of his success, Mr. Hughes believes, is due to the fact that he writes letters to his clerks.

Dear Friends:

There are two grave charges laid at this store's door that make us feel very bad. One, that the clerks do not wait on customers promptly and that most every store in town gives better service. The other, that our clerks are not pleasant, and in some cases even shortspoken and snappy to the customers.

Now, presuming that these serious charges are true, what would be the ultimate outcome of a store that allowed its clerks to follow this policy? I can say without a question that it would mean failure.

The people of this community do not have to trade with us and we cannot afford to have our customers run away, just because some one of us is not feeling well, or some one of you does not like the boss or the store management. This mistreatment of the customers that the boss spends days and nights trying to get into his store and trying to make them friends and regulars, is a direct slam at the management.

We insist that, beyond everything else, our employes must give every customer courteous treatment and undivided attention, striving always to please. This store would not have a position for you if it did not have an established line of customers on which to base its business.

We want this bulletin to get next to your hearts and to be plain some of you are not giving the store the proper support that it must have to succeed. The hard part about it is that we are unable, so far, to find out just which ones are driving away the customers instead of bringing them in. Please try to place yourself in the bosses' shoes and realize how you would feel if some one was not doing his best to make this store grow larger and better and was pulling back instead of pushing forward.

This is all just a little joke on our part to wake you up to the fact that we will all have to do a lot of unusual things this year to make this store forge ahead. Seriously, though, there have come to me rumors that this store did not give the service that it should, and that some of us, unthinkingly, failed to do our full duty toward our customers. Please try to impress upon yourselves the value to this store, of making everyone that comes in a prospective customer. If you fail in this we cannot succeed.

Then let us all do away with that grouchy look and the unpleasant thought that we have, and never fail to give the very best we have in knowledge and service to every customer we wait on.

No matter how busy you may be at other work, drop everything, for the one thing this store must have to succeed—a customer.

Moral—Don't wait until customers ask you to wait on them—beat them to it every time. Say: "What will you have?"

TRUNKS—AND TRUNKS

The absented-minded young man wandered from the boardwalk into a baggage dealer's place and asked to be shown some steamers and wardrobes.

Proving hard to please, the salesman, with such politeness as he could summon, suggested:

"We don't seem to have just what you want in trunks."

"You bet you haven't," said the young man emphatically. "I saw her out on the beach there a little bit ago."

A SALES-BAROMETER THAT NEVER FAILS

A hardware "barometer" that tells unfailingly just what kind of a buying mood the public is in and regulates the sale of timely merchandise through the various seasons of the year is one of the novel features of advertising that have been worked out by the J. R. Shannon Hardware Company, of Philadelphia.

The plan is this:

Every Sunday appears an advertisement based on the probable activities of suburban and rural people during the following week. The "copy" used is small—it may be 50, 75 or 100 lines across one column, but its appeal is always topical and calls attention to the "special bargain" offered in hand sprayers or garden shears or any of the thousand and one articles that come in handy during the different seasons. The advertisement is directed to out-of-town prospects and quotes the price for the article described, together with the amount of parcel postage necessary for mail delivery.

The direct returns from these advertisements are easily traced and the volume of orders that comes in during the next few days is clear proof of their value and ability to reach outside consumers.

An idea of the sales through this medium may be gained from the following results—picked at random—secured through this regular parcel post advertising:

In one week 1000 metal ice tongs were disposed of; three gross of sewing awls at 20 cents apiece; 300 handsaws at $1 each; two gross of tool grinders at $2 each; one gross of combination wrenches at 75 cents apiece; hundreds of hand sprayers, garden grass and pruning shears, etc., besides stimulating the local sale of the articles advertised.

Company Has Always Advertised.

C. Richard Watson, [illegible] manager, who has been connected with the Shannon Company for ~~more than~~ forty years, has this to say about its advertising policy:

"The company began advertising many years ago, as far back as our records go and beyond the memory of any member of the present firm. 'We are continuing the advertising, for it continues to pay. If you have a splendid display in your window on Monday and then keep your shades drawn all the other days of the week, how much business will result? That is exactly what some merchants do with their advertising. They advertise once and then quit—while, if they kept at it, they would find that the cumulative value of advertising in dollars and cents cannot be overestimated.

"Sades Are Up All Week."

"Experience has proved to us that successful advertising is the same as any other means of selling—the result of persistent, logical argument presented attractively to those who are able to buy your goods. That is the reason that we don't stop at parcel post advertising, but keep the 'shades' out of sight during all the other business days by consistently using the daily newspapers. Our customers are anxious to know what special piece of merchandise we have to offer them, and naturally they look to the newspapers for this news."

The present business, with more than a million separate items in stock, does a trade of over $500,000 a year. The turnover of stock is said to be about seven times a year.

"ICE SERVICE STATIONS" ARE THE LATEST THING

The Crystal Ice Manufacturing Company of Columbus, O., has inaugurated a novel means of distributing ice and advertising its service.

Twenty-six quaint little houses have been constructed in various parts of the city. The occupy conspicuous localities and are painted snow white—all, identical in architecture. There is always at least one within easy walking or motoring distance of the home or the office.

For it has been figured out that during the warm weather ice will be needed "in between times."

In order to acquaint the public with the new sheme, liberal space is used in daily papers to list the twenty-six stations, while the ads are illustrated with attractive line drawings of the "Ice Bungalows."

THEATRICAL

FALSE EVIDENCE IN ASSAULT CASE

MAKES A THRILLING STORY IN WHICH VIOLA DANA FIGURES.

This five act drama has been secured at considerable expense for presentation at the Grand Opera House, Thursday, Friday and Saturday this week.

The Cast

Madelon MacTavish—Viola Dana
Burr Gordon—Wheeler Oakman
Lot Gordon—Joe King
Sandy MacTavish, Madelon's father—Edward J. Connelly
Richard MacTavish, Madelon's brother—Patrick O'Malley
Dorothy Fair—Peggy Pearce
Samanthy Brown—Virginia Ross

The Story

Sandy MacTavish and his daughter, Madelon, known throughout the country for her clever playing on the fiddle, live in the remote village of Redwoods. Sandy is a stern woodsman who believes that a man never breaks his word.

In her infancy Madelon was betrothed to Lot Gordon, a lumber king and the richest man in Redwoods. As she grows to womanhood, however, Madelon realizes that she does not love Lot but his cousin, Burr Gordon. But Burr was also betrothed at an early age to Dorothy Fair, who, in turn loves Richard, Madelon's brother. This prank of Fate's cause untold misery but, under the stern laws of the community the betrothals must stand—nothing can be done.

Madelon, while fiddling at a dance one evening, sees Burr with Dorothy and is violently jealous. She rushes from the hall and while running down the road meets Lot. She mistakes him for Burr, and, as he tries to kiss her, stabs him with a knife. She soon discovers her mistake and believes that she has killed Lot.

Burr comes upon the scene, and hearing the villagers returning from the dance, forces her to flee. Madelon confesses to her father that she has stabbed Lot, but he only laughs at her thinking that she is trying to shield Burr.

In the meantime the angry mob thinking Burr guilty, prepare to hang him. In vain Madelon protests that she is the guilty one—she is only laughed at. In despair she appeals to Lot but he refuses to help unless she promises to marry him at an early date. She consents and Lot clears Burr's name, who is then saved from the rope.

Lot gets well and the day for the wedding arrives. Madelon, desparately unhappy, nevertheless realizes that the time has come for her to redeem her promise—for a MacTavish never breaks her word.

On the way to the church Lot is killed by a falling redwood. The news soon reaches Madelon who cannot help but be thankful for the release from a marriage with a man she could not love. Happy once more she soon marries Burr, which leaves Dorothy free to marry Richard.

Origin of a Title.

The eldest son of the reigning monarch of Great Britain and the heir apparent to the imperial throne is always known as the Prince of Wales. It is the only case in which the title of prince as applied to a member of a royal family is a territorial one, and the story of how it came into existence has been told many times. It is one of the most picturesque incidents in English history. King Edward I, one of the early Empire builders, ended the long series of wars between the English and the Welsh by bringing Wales into the union. In the conference, at which peace was concluded with the people of Wales, King Edward promised to give them a prince who could not speak a word of English. Evidently the prejudices of language existed then as they do to-day. Anyway the offer seems to have pleased the Welsh, but they discovered that the canny old king had played them a trick. It was true that the eldest son of the royal household could not speak a word of English, but when he was presented to the Welsh chieftains, they found that their prince was a new born baby, who spoke no word of any language.

An opal freshly taken from the mine is so soft that the finger nail may be pressed into it.

Presents Pitiful Spectacle.

The return to France of the women, children and old men who were sent out of that part of France which was occupied by Germans for more than four years presented pitiful spectacles. Many of these refugees were little tots whose fathers and mothers had been taken away by the cruel Boche to work in Germany or behind the fighting lines. Others were orphans.

THE PRINCE OF WALES

YOUNG MAN IS GREATLY BELOVED BY BRITISHERS.

Three Times in the History of Our Country, the Heir to the British Throne Has Paid a Visit to the Dominion of Canada. Thus Cementing the Bonds of Empire.

THREE times in the history of the Dominion of Canada, the Prince of Wales has visited our country. When the statesmen in the Mother Country began to realize the Canadian conception of the Empire as a federation of self-governing dominions, they felt more keenly the need of those bonds of affection and loyalty which hold the British Empire in a solid whole. It was the Prince of Wales, afterwards King Edward VII, who first crossed the ocean to visit our young country of great areas, and he did a thing that will probably be imitated by all his successors. The visit of King Edward VII was a rather formal affair, largely because the institution of royalty in England was not as democratic in the middle of the last century as it is to-day. King George and Queen Mary, then the Duke and Duchess of York, visited Canada immediately after the Boer War, and their tour is still fresh in the memories of our people. It is perhaps not too much to say that Canadians are more excited over the visit of the present Prince of Wales than they were on either of the other occasions. Our experiences side by side with the Motherland in the Great War have cemented our relationship in blood. Then the Prince of Wales is little more than a boy, and a boy always wins more affection and sympathy than an adult. What is more he is a magnetic and manly youth. He was associated with the Canadian Forces in France, and every Tommy who saw anything of him "over there" speaks with admiration of our future king.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

The officials who have arranged the Prince of Wales' itinerary in Canada have shown a quite unofficial sympathy with the natural desire of a young man of twenty-five to escape occasionally from the round of public functions. The duties of receiving and replying to addresses, opening buildings and exhibitions, visiting institutions, attending innumerable luncheons and dinners, and exposing himself to the public view will be pleasantly varied by fishing in the Nipigon, that king of trout streams, duck shooting near Regina, moose hunting in Northern Ontario, and mountain climbing in the Rockies. The prince will need these recreations to shake off the fatigue of a journey of 8,800 miles in seventy days. The tour as outlined will take him into every province except Prince Edward Island—though surely Prince Edward ought to see the Island—and nearly every important city in the country. He is a good-natured prince, and no doubt he will perform his daily and nightly tasks with his habitual smile. He has already served his apprenticeship in ceremonial formalities, and is graced for the ordeal. In his first trip from home, or at least out of Europe, he will have a human interest in new scenes, and would be wanting in imagination if he were not impressed by the vastness of a Dominion over which he some day will reign. But he will be forgiven if he finds a relief in disappearing from the public eye once in a while to enjoy the truly royal sport of the Canadian wilderness.

REPRESENTS CANADA

SIR HERBERT AMES.

Ottawa, Aug. 13.—The creation of the League of Nations involves the establishment at the seat of the League, which will probably be Geneva, Switzerland, of a permanent secretariat, and Canada, being one of the signatory parties to the treaty of peace, has been invited to nominate a Canadian as financial director to that organization. It is announced at Ottawa that the Prime Minister has offered this important position to Sir Herbert Ames, M.P., for St. Antoine division of Montreal and that Sir Herbert has accepted the appointment.

Will Not Resign Seat.

It is not Sir Herbert Ames' intention for the present at least to resign his seat in Parliament; as Canada will be called upon to make an annual contribution towards the upkeep of the permanent organization of the League, and it may be deemed advisable that Sir Herbert should be able to give information from his seat in the House on the work of the League when this item is discussed in supply. Then too it is pointed out that as the League of Nations must be regarded as somewhat of an experiment there is an element of uncertainty as to the permanent character of the position which would justify Sir Herbert in retaining his seat for a time at least.

Will Leave in September.

Sir Herbert expects to be present at the opening of the Parliament and during the first few days of the discussion of Canada's acceptance of the Peace Treaty, and will sail for England about the 8th of September. Lady Ames will join Sir Herbert later as the secretarial is established in its permanent home in Geneva.

SAILING FROM ENGLAND

Major E. F. G. Ward of Peterborough Booked for Home.

Mr. R. W. Ward, 467 Downie street, was pleasantly surprised this morning when he received a cable message to the effect that his son, Major E. F. G. Ward, R.A., M.C., was sailing from England today by steamer Baltic. Major Ward enlisted in February, 1915, sailing from Halifax the following month, and has been in active service ever since. In 1917 he was sent east and placed as medical officer in charge of a small pox hospital at Bagdad, Messopotamia. This position he held until June, 1918, and he arrived in London and requested to be sent to France again, where he remained on active service until the signing of the armistice. Major Ward is expected to arrive in Peterborough the later part of next week.

INSPECT CAMPS ON RIVER BANKS

SANITARY INSPECTOR ON STONEY AND CLEAR LAKES ALSO ADVISED.

Dr. Clinton, Medical Officer of Health for the district, was present at the local Board of Health meeting last night and stated that conditions in Stoney and Clear Lakes are good but advised that the Cottagers' Association get a sanitary inspector for the summer months to be absolutely certain the waters are not polluted.

To Inspect Camps.

Dr. McPherson was requested to inspect the camps on the river banks across from the power station, and see if they are in any way polluting the water of the city, and, if so, to take necessary action.

INQUEST ADJOURNED

Inquiry Into Responsibility For Railway Tragedy at Toronto.

Evidence submitted last night at the inquest into the death of the late John C., and Mrs. Bell, for nearly 60 years resident in Petreborough the aged couple who were struck and almost instantly killed by a C. P. R. transfer engine on the Riverdale Park level crossing a week ago, indicated that obstruction of view was the cause of the fatality. Several witnesses testified to the fact that strings of freight cars had been left on a siding both north and south of the crossing in such a position that it was impossible for pedestrians to see approaching traffic until they had almost reached the track on which the accident occurred.

Amos Samis, aged seventy-two, a flagman employed by the C. N. R. to guard the crossing in the day time stated that he had seen Mr. and Mrs. Bell approaching the crossing and had waved his danger sign and shouted to them to stop. They apparently did not hear or see his warning, and they were evidently not aware of the approach of the train until they reached the centre of the track. The engine, which was running tender foremost, struck them while travelling at a speed estimated at fifteen miles per hour and threw Mrs. Bell a distance of thirty feet down the embankment. Mr. Bell fell underneath the engine and was crushed beneath the wheels before the engineer could bring the train to a stop.

Testimony of the train crew showed that the usual precautions were taken.

In order to obtain further evidence, Coroner W. A. Young adjourned the inquiry until Monday, August 18.

SWIMMING AT LAKE ST.

Good Programme of Racing Events is Staged for Friday

A program of races for boys and girls will be staged at the Lake Street Bathing Beach, Friday afternoon at 2.30, under the supervision of the Playground directors.

It is planned to hold five events each, for boys and girls of the ages of 8, 12 and 16 years and under.

Some interesting competition should develop since there are many capable swimmers among the children who have frequented the bathing beach.

Flattery makes people sick unless they are able to swallow it.

There isn't much hope for a man so deaf that he is unable to hear the noise of a paper dollar.

How Officer Avenged Honor

Of all the abnormal events which crop up in these days of high tension none has been more extraordinary than that which happened at Cambridge a few days ago.

In the early hours of the morning, opposite the hostel of the Young Women's Christian Association in Harvey road, a highly respectable quarter of the university town, a young man was found by the police chained by his neck to a tree, himself entirely naked, tarred and feathered from head to foot.

With the broadening daylight, in the heart of the town and elsewhere, were found leaflets, all of which were in the same words, saying:—

Sub-Lieut. Desmond B. Kinahan, of the Royal Navy, son of Mrs. Kinahan, of Wing, Oakham, Rutlandshire, has been to-day, at 3.00 hours of the morning, tarred and feathered.

What had happened was a tale of a few words. Mr. Kinahan was one of the naval officers undergoing a special course at Cambridge, and the allegations is that he had been paying attention to the wife of Lieut. Francis Thomas Wright, a Cambridge man, who has won the M.C., and who has been attached to the Intelligence Staff at Salonica.

Hearing of what was passing, Lieut. Wright came home on leave, with the result that this extraordinary punishment has come about.

Lieut. Wright's wife had been serving as a member of the Women's Royal Air Force; she had stayed at the Y.W.C.A. hostel, and that, no doubt, was the reason for chaining Lieut. Kinahan to the tree in front of it.

About the judgment passed, and the method inflicting it, no disgrace is made. Lieut. Wright's brother, who took part in the punishment, has openly stated the facts. He himself is a recently demobilised officer, with a wooden leg and a damaged arm, and he has defended himself and his brother from the charge of taking the law into their own behalf.

"Had Kinahan been a big man," he said, "my brother would have thrashed him first and shot him afterwards. But he was such a rabbit that we decided to do the other thing. He is about twenty years old. But, if a boy, he was old enough to know what he was about.

"He had plenty of warning. It is two months since I went to him and told him to keep away from my brother's wife, saying all Cambridge was talking about it. He gave me a written promise not to see her again. Even then I would have thrashed him but for my wooden leg and damaged arm, because at first he said he would not see her till my brother came home. I asked him what he meant, and he said it could be arranged then. Arranged!

"At last I had to write to my brother. He only married her in October last, and they were together less than six weeks. It might have been all right, perhaps, if he had been able to stop at home, but his leave was up and he had to go back to the East.

'When my brother came home and saw him he asked him what he meant and what he intended to do, and to everything Kinahan replied: 'I don't know.' Then my brother said, 'Have you any letters from her?' Kinahan said, 'Yes.' 'Give them to me at once,' said my brother, and he gave them up. 'Any photographs?' he was asked. 'Yes,' replied Kinahan, and gave them up. 'Any presents?' Kinahan gave them up, too. Then my brother warned and left him.

"We thought out the whole thing. My brother said he was not worth shooting, but he would make him talked about throughout all England.

"He wrote to his wife, offering to forgive her and take her back. She replied in a letter, 'Never, never, never!'

"People were beginning to say, 'What are you going to do?' The chains were my idea. My first intention was to turn him loose in broad daylight in the centre of Cambridge. But there was the river, and I thought if he had any pluck left he might drown himself and escape ridicule.

"Therefore, we decided to chain him up, and to do it at night. A gallon of tar we got from the gasworks and the feathers from a farmhouse.

"Then we asked him to come up and talk matters over. When we told him what we were going to do he made no protest at all. 'If you call out or struggle we shall tie you up and gag you,' said my brother, to which Kinahan replied, 'All right, then. I will take what is coming to me quietly.'

"Except his eyes, nose, and mouth we left nothing uncovered. We stuck feathers in his hair. Afterwards we took him by car to the tree outside the Y.W.C.A., where she had been staying.

"I think we let him off lightly. My brother and I have not the ideas of the older generation. He was lucky to escape shooting. We are prepared for any action he or the naval authorities may take."

With the aid of turpentine, ether, benzol, and other solvents, Lieut. Kinahan's friends did their best to remove the tar, after he had been delivered into his rooms at Trinity College by the police.

Subsequently Lieut. Kinahan was sent to barracks at Chatham, and Lieut Wright left Cambridge to visit a brother in the country.

Brazilians Like Perfume.

It is said that the people of Brazil use more perfume in proportion to the population than any other country in South America.

Princess Mary.

Princess Mary, only daughter of King George and Queen Mary of England and sister of the Prince of Wales, is colonel-in-chief of the Royal Scots. Princess Mary has the same strong character that has won the admiration of the British people for her mother. It is said that she also desires to pay a visit to Canada.

SLING IN WARFARE.

Was the Primitive Form of Long Range Weapon.

Popular sympathy has always been on the side of David in his little bickering with the giant Goliath. It ought to be quite the other way, because there never was a minute when Goliath had a chance against an agile antagonist who could choose his own position and distance, and who was equipped with a long-range weapon.

This is a problem which has been thoroughly worked out by modern military men and naval tacticians. A fight of this kind can have only one result.

We are accustomed to think of the sling as an Old World weapon, but there is no question of the fact that it was in common use among the natives of Mexico, Central America and Peru long before Goliath and David were born.

Dr. Philip A. Means has been looking up the subject for the Smithsonian Institution, and he says that the early Spanish conquerors in America found the sling a formidable weapon in the hands of the aborigines.

A Spanish historian, Del Castillo, describing a battle with Mexican natives, writes: "As we approached with our army they shot from above so many stones that they covered the ground. They had slings and plenty of stones, and they shot arrows and stones so fast that they wounded five of our foot soldiers and two horsemen."

In Peru have been dug up many ancient vessels that bear paintings illustrative of combats in which slings were used.

Xeres, another Spanish historian, describing the capture of a Peruvian city, says of the native troops: "In the van of their army came the slingmen who hurled pebbles from slings. These slingmen carry shields made from narrow boards, very small. They also wear armor jackets made of quilted cotton."

Many of the actual slings used by early and even prehistoric Americans have been obtained from graves or otherwise recovered. They are made of various materials, including human hair, wool, llama hair and vegetable fibre.

System Better Than Rush.

A great many pretty mottoes have been written about hard work being the key to success. Hard work alone never put any man anywhere excepting in a premature grave, or in the hands of a stomach specialist, says Thrift Magazine. The man who fumes and explodes and eats his lunch with his watch on the table is cheating himself out of many a good year of active service.

Careful planning and system will do more towards boosting you along to the goal of your ambitions than four-minute meals and a sincere endeavor to do three things at the same time. The men who really accomplish the most seem to be the least hurried and the least busy. It's the non-skid fellow who succeeds every time. The powerful engines that drive the mighty Leviathan across the stormy Atlantic make less fuss about their work than the little asthmatic peanut roaster on the corner that coughs to death every time a strong wind blows.

Poise and deliberation will do more for you than excessive perspiration and a sour stomach. In fifty years from now the world will have forgotten whether you partook of your noontime repast sitting down or on the run. No character of modern times has accomplished more than Marshal Foch, yet he is described as a man who never seems to be hurried, overworked or behind schedule. It is inconceivable that he could have succeeded in his tremendous undertakings if he had not, first of all, understood the value of getting himself systematized on a non-dyspeptic and unexplosive basis.

A Prescription.

If people always knew beforehand just what the doctor's prescription would be, most of the time it would be quite unnecessary to consult a doctor. A patient with a vague and indeterminate complaint sought out the late Dr. S. Weir Mitchell and elaborately described what she thought were the symptoms of imminent collapse. The famous physician heard her out with courteous gravity, wrote a line or two on a bit of paper and then said, "Take this to the drug store across the street and they will fill it for you." When the ailing hypochondriac showed the paper to the apothecary, he smiled and handed it back. "I'm afraid you'll have to fill this out yourself, madam," he said, deferentially. "What do you mean?" Then she read what was written. It was simply the Bible verse: "Greater is he that ruleth himself than he that taketh a city."

BERLIN GAMBLING MAD.

People In German Capital Are Seeking Excitement.

Monte Carlo was a gambler's kindergarten compared to "gambling Berlin" to-day.

If you are a stranger in Berlin, ask the chauffeur to drive you to one of the 500 gamblers "clubs." Your looks will tell the chauffeur the class of club to which he had better take you. There are all kinds, from the low class den to the most fashionable, with special rooms for ladies, where dinners, wines, liquors and coffees are served at half cost price.

At most clubs the play is "baccarat." The club owners get 5 per cent. of the sums raised from the auctioning of "the bank," taking place every hour. The "card money," or fees, together with the percentage, amounts to between 25,000 and 40,000 marks per night at the biggest clubs. The directors get 100,000 marks per year.

At some clubs 5,000,000 marks change hands each night. The gamblers want action out of their fortunes before tax collectors or the Bolsheviki get them.

One day a soldier, having lost 500 marks, arrested the bankholder and, attacked by the latter's friends, threw a hand grenade killing himself and wounding several others.

During the last few weeks about two hundred new clubs have been licensed.

Military authorities provide the clubs with guards.

The owners give weekly free dinners of a large number of courses and all the champagne you want to drink.

Pelicans and Flamingoes.

News that airplanes are being used for hunting flamingoes in the Bahamas has alarmed and disgusted the Audubon societies. It certainly does seem unfair that man, having surpassed all feathered creatures in the art of flying, should take up a merciless chase of them in their own element, the air.

Besides, the flamingo is a remarkably interesting bird. It is a sort of low-comedy bird, walking, as it were, on stilts, and with an enormously long neck. In "Alice's Adventures in Wonderland" it figures amusingly.

It is a tropical bird, ranging as far south as southern Brazil. In the Old World it is found (though of other varieties) in the equatorial belt of Africa.

Perhaps the only rival of the flamingo as a low-comedy bird is the pelican, with its absurdly enormous bill that carries a pouch beneath for the accommodation of captured fish.

The pelican, happily, has been rescued from threatened extermination by the Audubon societies, through whose influence the U. S. Government was persuaded to protect their principal breeding grounds by setting aside the latter as inviolable "refuges."

Most important of these breeding grounds was a tiny island in the Mosquito Inlet, Florida—a mud flat of less than four acres—more or less overgrown with salt grass and mangroves. There a once-numerous colony of brown pelicans was almost exterminated by egg-hunters and alleged sportsmen who shot the birds "for fun."

To-day, thanks to protection since 1903, the pelicans have greatly increased in numbers, extending their "rookery" to nearby islets. Nobody disturbs them, and the place has become a delightful attraction to tourists.

Films From the Cape.

The eastern province of the Cape of Good Hope will be celebrating its centenary in April, next year. It is an opportunity for the settlers to make their country better known to other continents, and a very good scheme is mooted by one of them. He proposes that films should be taken of the wild life of the province. There are plenty of first-rate subjects which would greatly interest the cinema and movie goers of Europe and America. A troop of baboons raiding a settler's pumpkin and mealie field would make a very entertaining picture, and it might be explained that the visitation is the exception and not the rule. The elephants of the Addo bush would make another first-rate film, and there are koodoos, spring boks, and many other wild creatures. Unfortunately the buffalo belongs too thoroughly to the genus "wild" to ever allow himself to be filmed. The settlers have ample time in which to get the pictures taken, and quite apart from centenary considerations, such a record of the fauna of the province would be valuable in years to come.

A Son-in-Law.

"After all, despite everything that has been said against him, a son-in-law has his admirable side," admitted Farmer Grimm. "If you free your mind in full to the hired man and tell him what you think of him and liken him to what he is, he will puff up and demand his pay and quit. If you boss and bully your son too systematically, he will run away. But, just as long as you feed your son-in-law and do not actually beat and maul him, you can say what you please to him, and he will remain faithful."

Only Four Miles Per Hour.

In 1900 New York automobile laws allowed automobiles to travel not more than four miles an hour around street corners.

WHY NO LIGHT?

Two weeks ago there was no power on for the electric lamps at the bandstand in King Edward Park when the G.W.V.A. band gave its concert, and last night the Temple band had to quit at dark (nine o'clock) for want of light. Three weeks ago there were neither chairs for the band nor illumination. These bands are anxious to give the two hours' concert agreed on in King Edward Park, Tuesday evenings, but surely the city's Parks and Property Committees do not expect them to memorize their pieces for want of electric light conveniences. It is hoped that by next Tuesday evening there will be light, and plenty of it; otherwise, in the natural order of things, the weekly concert for south end citizens will be curtailed to even a few minutes less than an hour the coming event.

CHATHAM'S TAX RATE 32 MILLS.

At a meeting of the Chatham city council the city tax rate for the ensuing year was placed at 32 mills. This is one mill more than the rate last year. The increase is accounted for chiefly by the increase in teachers' salaries, and the purchase of motor equipment for the fire hall. The assessment of the city has been increased this year over a million dollars, but the extra assessment does not keep down the rate.

BROCKVILLE BOARD OF TRADE

That Organization Has Just Secured Paper Plant for the Town.

Brockville, Aug. 13.—Plans for the immediate construction of a big paper manufacturing plant were discussed and endorsed by the Brockville Board or Trade, and a strong agreement entered into with the promoters, the chief of whom are C. F. Buss, of Mille Roches, and J. R. Buchanan, of Ottawa. It is proposed to give the company a site on which work will be commenced at once. The board is in touch with several other industries looking to Brockville for locations. Mayor Lewis, in addressing the gathering, stated that the Council intended taking advantage of the provisions of the Ontario Housing Act, in order to secure increased housing accommodation no wimperatively needed owing to local industrial expansion.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR

Editor Review: The time is approaching rapidly when we must take a stand regarding a great question. There is only one sure and certain light and example in all matters. Let us, therefore, write across our campaign flag these words: "Is God a prohibitionist, or do I know better?"

J. H. BURNHAM.

PRAISES NEW LEADER

Editor Review: The election of Mr. MacKenzie King to the leadership of the Liberal Party is, to my mind, the most momentous action of the Party since the day when, in Opposition, as it is now, it called into leadership the young Quebec orator, Wilfrid Laurier. Canada has had no real leadership since Sir Wilfrid Laurier was defeated in 1911 and the time is becoming ripe for the leadership which, I believe, Mackenzie King can give. If ever any man had the qualifications for the position of leadership of a great party in Opposition, surely he is the man. No man in the Dominion has had such training in economic and social questions as he has, and along with this, he has the experience in parliamentary life which fits him at once for the work which is cut out for him. As everyone knows he is one of the greatest speakers in Canada and for tremendous power in this respect is superior even to his late Chief. Added to this, he has a technical knowledge of economics, which Sir Wilfrid Laurier never had.

It looks now as though the new leader will become Premier at the next election. A blind man can see that the Union Government has few friends anywhere except among the money kings and profiteers. Unless a rejuvenated Conservative Party does the job first the Liberal Party will wipe the Union Government off the map at the next election. Mr. Burnham was shrewd enough to see the gathering storm when he repudiated the Union Government. His difficulty is that he has now no place to go. I suppose he will ally himself with the so-called "ginger group" at the next session.

The election of Mackenzie King to the leadership of the Liberal Party was not without its elements of tragedy for it marked the end of the cherished ambitions of N. W. Rowell. There is no doubt that Mr. Rowell coveted the leadership of the Liberal Party in Canada above everything else and there is a little doubt that if he had not given way to the vaulting ambition that over-reaches itself, this honor would probably have come to him. The one certain thing now is that the Liberal Party has put the brand of Cain on Mr. Rowell and out-lawed him entirely. It would be interesting to amuse oneself by guessing at his political future.

Mr. King will be the hope of the young men of Canada. He is a young man himself with the strength and vision of a young man and a future of immense possibilities ahead. As is well known, he is a bachelor of irreproachable character and unblemished reputation whose main task in life so far has been to learn well those things which go to make a statesman. His love for the common man is shown in his epoch-making book, "Industry and Humanity." It is an unsafe thing to guess at the future of a public man, but it looks as though we have a leader in the Liberal Party who will be even greater than hath been.

TORONTO PRAISE FOR OUR LOCAL FARMERS

EDITOR SMITH MAKES FLATTERING REFERENCE TO MEMBERS OF U.F.O.

W. L. Smith, editor of the Farmers' Sun of Toronto, attended the picnic held last week by the Peterborough branch of the U.F.O. and publishes in this week's issue of his paper an extended report of the proceedings. In his introduction Mr. Smith says:

"Speaking at a picnic held last week under the auspices of Peterborough Farmers' Club, R. W. E. Burnaby dealt effectively with the charge of party political partisanship still being made, but with ever lessening frequency, against the U.F.O.

"The picnic at which the president of the United Farmers' Co-operative Co. did this was, in some respects, the most remarkable of the many remarkable demonstrations held by the organized farmers of the Province during the passing summer. The addresses were delivered from a balcony and the crowd stood on the lawn below stood because a torrential downpour had made the ground too damp for sitting. And the crowd did stand stood steadily through three addresses and then clamored for more, although games and ice cream stalls offered counter-attractions a few yards away. It was the most striking demonstration of the earnestness of farmers and farmers' wives I have witnessed to date.

"The chair was filled by R. B. Rogers, and if a chairman's chief duty is to keep order, then no other chairman ever had so complete a sinecure as had Mr. Rogers on this occasion.

When the Cheers Came.

"Mr. Burnaby declared that the U.F.O. stood not only for public ownership of public utilities, but it stood as well for total prohibition of the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. And no other statement, made by any of the speakers, called forth such vigorous and spontaneous applause as did that statement."

Mr. Smith, with professional modesty, refuses to act as the Hansard of his own speech which was one of the best addresses of the day.

OMEMEE

(Special Correspondence)

Omemee, Aug. 13.—Rev. "Calvert" and Mrs. Carew, of Toronto, were visitors to Omemee last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur McCrea and son, Elmer, of Toronto, were the guests of Mrs. McCrea last week.

Mrs. Fishburn, of Lindsay, spent the week-end with her sister, Mrs. Bert Courtney.

Mr. Everett Tisdale and daughter, of Toronto, paid a brief visit to Omemee on Saturday.

Sergt. Ed. Herbert, who since his return from overseas has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Laidley, left on Monday for Cobalt.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Nugent left on Monday for a three months' visit with their son, Milton, of North Dakota.

Mrs. White, of Buffalo, N.Y., spent a few days with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. I. Glenney.

Miss Millard, of Fort Erie, was the guest of the Misses Laidley last week.

Mrs. Hill, of Mitchell, returned to Peterborough on Saturday after a pleasant visit with her aunt, Mrs. Parsons.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Dingman and Mr. and Mrs. R. Dingman, of Oshawa, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Morcombe, last week.

Dr. Belcher and Mr. Middleton, of Buffalo, N.Y., were among the many well-satisfied fishermen who visited the Pigeon River last week.

Mr. and Mrs. N. R. Murray and Mr. and Mrs. Jack Murray, of Peterborough, spent the week-end camping near Omemee.

Lieut.-Col. and Mrs. German (nee Annie Parsons) left on Monday morning amid the many good wishes of friends for their new home in Moose Jaw, Sask.

PORTLAND MAN HAS GAINED 30 POUNDS

COLLINS SAYS EVERYBODY WHO KNOWS HIM IS TALKING ABOUT HIS IMPROVEMENT SINCE TAKING TANLAC.

"Tanlac has made such a big improvement in my condition that I feel as well in every way now, as I ever did in my life, and I have actually gained thirty pounds since I commenced taking it," said F. T. Collins, who lives at 572 Bortwicth street, Portland, Ore., a few days ago.

"I began to have indigestion about three years ago" continued Mr. Collins, "and this condition just kept on getting worse all the time until it finally became chronic. My stomach was in such bad condition that everything I ate disagreed with me and caused me to suffer afterwards. Gas often formed on my stomach, and I would be so nauseated that I could not retain what I ate. I also suffered with pains in the small of my back, and if I stooped over I could hardly straighten up again. I was badly constipated all the time, and would often have headaches that would last for nearly a week at a time. I finally got so weak and run down that I had to give up my job. Then my nerves went back on me and I never got a good night's sleep after that. I tell you, I had just about reached the point where I was a complete nervous wreck.

"I didn't think any medicine would do me any good, but I thought I would try Tanlac anyway, and to my surprise I began to improve by the time I had finished my first bottle. Well, from that time on I just kept getting better right along until I am now as well and strong as I ever was. I never had a better appetite, and can eat just anything I want without suffering afterwards. I honestly believe my stomach is in as good condition as it ever was. The pain has left my back too. I am never constipated now and those awful headaches are a thing of the past. My nerves are as steady as a clock, and I get in eight or nine hours good, restful sleep every night. I have regained my strength, and have gained so much in weight that everybody who knows me is talking about it. I never lose a chance to say a good work for Tanlac.

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd., in Havelock by A. C. Denike, in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd., in Fowler's Corners by W. A. Hunter, in Gelert by A. J. Scott, in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

WINDSOR GRAPPLES WITH COAL PROBLEM

Windsor, Ont., Aug. 13.—If mine owners permit coal companies to sell 5,000 tons of anthracite coal to Windsor the city may purchase 10 cars at $11.95 a ton, according to word received by Mayor Winter. The Mayor, however, will not rely on a possible supply of fuel from outside companies, but has asked local dealers and the gas company to supply him with information regarding their ability to sell fuel to domestic consumers during the cold months.

CAR TURNED TURTLE

Mrs. J. H. Waltsonhome Slightly Injured in Serious Accident.

Mrs. J. H. Wolstenholme was injured in an automobile accident on Monday on the road to Omemee, not far from town. The car was running down a hill when the brakes refused to work. The car ran up a high bank on the side of the road and turned completely over. Mrs. Wolstenholme was taken to her home in Comstock's ambulance, and her injuries are expected to heal in a few days. Mr. and Mrs. Wolstenholme should be congratulated on their narrow escape from what might have been a very serious accident.

MINERAL OIL
For Chronic Constipation

By buying this product from us you can get the highest in quality that can be procured at an ESPECIALLY LOW PRICE. There are many thin oils on the market that are not suitable for internal use; other oils have irritating qualities which render them also unsuitable. The one we are selling is guaranteed thick and entirely pure.

It is recognized that a good grade of Mineral Oil is one of the best remedies for CHRONIC CONSTIPATION that is being used. It acts mechanically and does not irritate the intestinal tract, nor does the dose have to be continually increased, as is the case with ordinary purgatives.

It is much better and cheaper than Castor Oil as a laxative for children, since Castor Oil has two effects, the first of which is purgative, and the second or after effect, which is Constipating.

Maybe You're Rich.

Some men are rich and don't know it—rich in health, rich in a large and happy family, rich in friends, rich in influence and standing in their communities, rich in the spirit of charity and brotherly love. These same men may be poor in this world's goods, but they're rich, just the same.—Crosman.

Hired Man's Life Saved.

James was bowlegged and felt it his duty to whip every boy that reminded him of the fact. When he visited in the country the hired man laughed and told him he couldn't stop a pig if he tried. James told his mother what the man had said, then added: "He's pretty big, and I'm mighty glad he didn't say I was bowlegged."

A Glass Horn.

MUSEUM OF WAR TROPHIES.

Imperial Authorities Gather Relics of Past Struggle.

The remarkable progress which has already been made in the formation of the Imperial War Museum is described in the second annual report of the committee.

The report of the curator and secretary, Major Charles Ffoulkes, gives a comprehensive list of the exhibits which have come from the many theatres of war. Among the 470 in the naval section are relics of the battle of Jutland and of the attacks on Zeebrugge and Ostend, including a portion of the Zeebrugge Mole. Models were prepared immediately after the armistice to show the result of the Zeebrugge and Ostend operations, and a collection of six models has been acquired through the generosity of shipbuilding firms. The Admiralty have transferred to the museum the entire contents of the "Dazzle" Painting School, which includes some hundreds of model ships of all classes, each painted with a scheme of "dazzle" design. Special attention has been given to the surrendered German submarines and other craft.

Sir Roger Keyes' signal before the attack on Zeebrugge, "St. George for England," and Sir David Beatty's historic signal respecting the German flag after the surrender of the fleet are among the documentary exhibits of the naval section, which will include models of typical vessels and portraits by famous artists of officers and men who have distinguished themselves.

For the army section over 800 trophies have been received during the past year. One of the most interesting is the well-known "Lone Howitzer," of which a complete record is preserved from August, 1914, to September, 1917.

Owing to the system of collecting captured trophies from salvage dumps and forwarding them thence to England, it is difficult to attach any particular historical significance to a large number of trophies, but in the majority of cases they are claimed by certain regiments and deposited by them in the museum. A gilt wreath placed by the ex-Emperor William in 1898 on the tomb of Saladin, in Damascus, and sent to the museum by order of the Emir Feisul, a periscope 30 feet high, and Oriental weapons from Palestine and Egypt are among the acquisitions.

The Royal Air Force is represented by airplanes, models, and bombs (including a British missile weighing 3,000 lbs.), and there are many exhibits illustrating munitions, medical, women's and religious work.

The library owns 14,000 items, and the publicity records over 21,000, these including enemy proclamations respecting the executions of Capt. Fryatt and Nurse Cavell. Mr. J. S. Sargeant's "Gassed" is to form part of the collection of paintings and sculpture, and other sections are those for medals, photographs and models.

Men Blinded In the War.

Does blindness make the brain more acute?

Undoubtedly. That is the only conclusion one can arrive at after reading of the achievements of blind heroes told by Sir Arthur Peterson in his wonderful story "Victory Over Blindness."

Not only have the thousands of men blinded in the war, nearly every one of whom have passed through St. Dunstan's, the hostel for blinded soldiers and sailors, learned new trades and occupations and succeeded in overcoming their big handicap so successfully that they have been able to take up their old positions, but in some cases they have actually gained bigger appointments.

One blinded officer who has returned to his employer is now not only in entire charge of the correspondence of his firm, but is solely responsible for the buying of one of the largest departments. He has also started a new business himself and obtained a Government contract.

A brilliant example of the manner in which a man who has lost his sight can carry on in an important business position is afforded by a captain, who occupied the position of director of the foreign and colonial part of his firm's business. After studying at St. Dunstan's, he is now able to carry out his duties as though nothing had happened.

Furthermore, his fellow directors are dispatching him upon a world-tour to rebuild their foreign business, which has suffered from the war.

As masseurs, research chemists, solicitors, farmers, preachers, and writers, these blind heroes are, with indomitable courage and perseverance, competing with men who can see. Others are keeping shops, setting up as boot manufacturers and carpenters and joiners.

Never was a greater mistake made than to imagine, as many people do, that blindness means helplessness. After "learning to be blind," as Sir Arthur, who is himself sightless, so happily puts it, "they can do anything they think they can do."—Tit-Bits.

BEAUTIFY THE HOME

How to Grow Plants for Winter From Cuttings.

August Ploughing Destroys a Considerable Proportion of White Grubs and Wire Worms Infesting Old Sod Fields—Flax Is a Splendid Crop for a First Crop on Such Fields.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

TOWARD the end of the summer, the amateur flower grower often wonders how the stock of geraniums in the flower border can be increased and preserved by some other means than by taking up the old plants in the autumn; the last named method not having, perhaps, proved successful in past seasons. By starting fairly early, toward the end of August, before cold chilly nights appear, a nice supply of young plants, more especially of all kinds of geraniums of the flowering kind, or those having fragrant leaves, or even the bronze or silver-leaved kinds, can be had by starting cuttings or slips of these plants. First of all obtain a shallow box about three inches deep, ten or twelve inches wide, and from twelve to twenty-four inches in length, an empty haddie (fish) box will do very well. It should have some small holes bored through the bottom for drainage. Pack this box firmly with moist, clean, gritty sand; sand that will make good stone mortar will do. Then take the terminal or top part of the young growth of plants about four or five inches in length, each shoot or cutting having from four to six joints where leaves are produced. Make the base of the cutting just below one of these nodes or leaf joints, making a clean cut with a sharp knife flat across. Cut off some of the lower leaves, leaving two or three leaves at the top. Cut off all bloom buds and blossoms where possible. Make a hole or drill in the wet sand deep enough to set fully half the length of stems of cuttings in the sand. Water them well once and keep the sand moist until cuttings are rooted, which should be in five or six weeks' time. The box can be set out of doors in partial shade until the first week in September, when they can be taken into the window. When cuttings have roots about an inch in length dig them carefully from the sand without injuring the roots and pot them singly into small 2½ inch pots or set them about two inches apart in well-drained shallow boxes in a soil made up of one part sand, one part leaf mould, and about six parts of light loamy soil enriched with one part of dry pulverized cow manure from the pasture field. This last is one of the best possible fertilizers for soil for pot plants. Set the young plants in the window in a temperature of 60 to 70 deg. Fahr., an ordinary house temperature. — William Hunt, O. A. College, Guelph.

White Grubs and Wireworms.

White grubs are the larvae of the large dark brown May beetles, or "June Bugs," as they are commonly called, and, being underground feeders, are very difficult to control. A great variety of experiments have been made with chemicals of many sorts, but none has proved successful. The only method of control is the adoption of a system of rotation of crops. No field should be left in grass for more than three years. An old pasture, when broken up, is often found to be full of these grubs, and they will attack the roots of any plants that are sown in place of their ordinary food which has been removed. Corn and potatoes will suffer severely, but clover is least affected by them and may be seeded down with rye. After the second year any crop will usually be safe. Deep ploughing in October before the weather becomes cold will expose the grubs and destroy many. Pigs and poultry, crows and other birds and skunks greedily devour them. Where an old field is found to be badly infested, it is a good plan to turn in some hogs; they will soon root out and eat up all the grubs. If the field is large it would be well to confine them with hurdles to a small portion at a time, and when that is cleared move them on to a fresh feeding ground.

Wireworms are the larvae of Click beetles, so called from their curious habit of springing up in the air with a "click" when laid upon their backs. The beetles are long and narrow, rounded above, with very short legs, and usually dull gray or black in color. The grubs are long and round, with a very hard skin, from which they get their name of Wireworms, and yellow or whitish in color. Their life-history is very similar to that of the White Grubs, as they thrive in old pastures and take two or three years to mature. They feed upon the roots of any plants that may be grown where they are, and are especially injurious to corn and potatoes, in the latter of which they often burrow great holes. As in the case of the White Grubs, no treatment of the soil with poisons of any kind has been found effective. There is a prevalent idea that salt will kill them, but this is an entire mistake. The only remedy is a short rotation of crops as is the case of White Grubs. Ploughing in August and cross-ploughing in September will destroy great numbers. Clean cultivation, leaving no weeds or other shelter for the beetles, in fence corners and elsewhere is also of importance. Flax is a particularly valuable crop for sowing on old sod, as the worms injure it but very little.

Break up the old pastures is the advice all farmers should follow.—Dr. C. J. S. Bethune, O. A. College, Guelph.

BACTERIAL SOFT ROT

Disease Is Causing Great Loss of Vegetables.

Cauliflower, Carrots, Turnips, Celery and Tomatoes Particularly affected—How the Disease Spreads—Its Symptoms and Remedy—Great Care Necessary During Harvest and Storing.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

BACTERIAL soft rot is a disease liable to attack fleshy vegetables and flowers, particularly carrots, cauliflower, turnips, celery, tomatoes, iris and cala lily, and in a lesser degree onions, asparagus, salsify, sugar beet and mangel. Occasionally the disease results in heavy losses to the grower of these crops.

General Appearance of the Disease.

As the name signifies the disease results in a soft, wet rot of the plant attacked. The rotted portion of the plant is darker in color than the rest of the plant. The color of the diseased part varies from a light, reddish or greenish brown to a very dark brown.

Cause of the Disease.

The disease is due to the action of a certain species of bacillus known generally as the vegetable soft rot bacillus. This is a very minute organism about 1-10,000 of an inch long and 1-20,000 of an inch thick, but when it gets into the vegetable tissue through a wound made by the hoe or cultivator or insect bite, it feeds on the plant juice and multiplies rapidly and as it develops it produces an enzyme, which digests or softens the firm tissue, breaking it down into a soft, pulpy, strong-smelling mass, which is easily detected. In this soft-rotted tissue the bacilli will be present in millions.

In cauliflower the disease is found more often in the flower than in the leaves or stem; the latter parts, however, are also subject to attack.

In turnip, the disease most frequently enters at or near the crown, through caterpillar or slug attack, or through injuries received during hoeing or cultivation. It softens or rots the leaf petioles at their base, causing them to fall over, and spreads slowly in dry weather, rapidly in wet weather, through the tissue of the root, inducing a brown-colored soft rot, with strong odor.

In carrot the disease enters and develops in much the same way as described for the turnip. It is more apt to spread rapidly through a crop that is thickly sown and not well thinned out, the shade produced by the heavy tops making ideal conditions by keeping the ground moist for the development of the disease when once it gains entrance, and harboring slugs and caterpillars that spread the disease. Carrots which crack beneath the ground are liable to be attacked by the disease, the soft rot bacillus gaining entrance to the tissues through the cracked surface.

In celery the disease is not very common, but when present is most often found starting at or near the tops of the young growth.

In tomatoes the bacterial soft rot is very common during wet seasons. It is found most frequently in the fruits that are in contact with the soil after they have commenced to ripen. The bacillus will not readily penetrate through the unbroken skin of the tomato. But when a tomato is resting on the damp earth, that part of the skin in contact with the soil is frequently weakened, thus providing a means of access to the bacillus. This, however, is not the only means whereby the disease enters the fruit. Slugs are very partial to tomatoes just ripening. In their attack on the fruit they eat through the skin, leaving the interior flesh exposed. This exposed surface is an ideal medium for the bacillus of soft rot to develop in. The writer has found many tomatoes, particularly in wet seasons, when slugs are plentiful, that have contracted the disease in this way.

Eradication and Control of Disease.

Spraying with fungicides, which is so effective in controlling the fungous diseases of plants, is of no avail with bacterial diseases, as the bacteria which cause the disease act in the interior tissue rather than on the surface; hence the spray will not reach them.

Spraying with insecticides is helpful indirectly, as it tends to keep in check the insects, slugs, caterpillars, etc., which are one of the most common means of spreading bacterial diseases from one plant to another.

As a rule, the best method to adopt in dealing with a plant infected with bacterial disease is to carefully remove and burn it. Insects, garden tools, etc., coming in contact with it will spread the disease to the plants with which they come in contact later.

Therefore, in order to prevent losses from bacterial soft rot of plants, remove and burn affected plants, or parts of plants, as soon as observed; be careful during cultivation not to wound plants, and keep caterpillars, slugs and biting insects in check. Affected plants should never be put on the compost heap or manure pile.

Harvesting and Storing.

When harvesting and storing turnips, cauliflower, cabbage, celery, tomatoes, or other vegetables from crops in which the disease has been present, great care should be taken not to include any specimen that shows the slightest appearance of the disease, or to smear the healthy specimen with the soft rotted parts of diseased specimens. If these precautions are neglected, the disease is liable to establish itself and spread more or less rapidly through the entire crop stored.—D. H. Jones, B.S.A.

The poor man who is going down hill needs a substantial check.

A GREAT GAME BUT PETES LOST

BELLEVILLE WINS CENTRAL ONTARIO LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP.

Belleville are champions. By defeating the Petes yesterday with a score of 3 to 1, the Bay of Quinte bunch won the championship of the Central Ontario Baseball League.

It was a great game all the way through. The locals have came to the conclusion that there is a "Jonah" on the team. Saturday they outhit Belleville 8 to 5, but lost — the tenth; yesterday they again outhit them 8 to 3 and again lost. The only explanation that seems plausible is that Belleville got the breaks and take advantage of them. But nobody can deny the fact that Goyer is a wonderful pitcher, and the way he tightens in the pinches spells defeat to all who oppose him.

Lost Good Chance

The Petes lost a great chance in the ninth. They started a great last inning rally and had one run across and two more on the bases with one out. There were three chances to tie the score left, but Long struck out and Kirn struck out. This was a woeful finish to a great season.

Petes Died Game

The Petes are through now, but they surely died game, fighting all the way until the last man was put out in the last game. But there was something that stopped the Petes and that was the Belleville park-sider, Goyer, who just played with our left hand batters.

A fresh crowd witnessed the game yesterday, and at all stages excitement ran high. The two teams have certainly had a splendid series, but in the face of four defeats to one win, we must admit the best team won.

AS PORT HOPE SEES IT

Says Greatest Manager in Central League Fanned Wind.

It was in Bingville, says the Port Hope Guide, that the great and only Casey struck out, and it was in Peterborough last Saturday that the greatest manager in the Central League, Jake Solomon fanned the wind. With the bases full, two strikes and three balls, Jake reached for one of Goyer's high ones, and there was not a baseball bat in Peterborough long enough to reach the sphere. It was heart rending to watch, and it certainly took a lot of pep out of the Peterborough manager. But it was a grand exhibition of baseball and it was simply the flip of a coin which would win. It went for an extra innings and the boys from the Bay of Quinte won out by a 6 to 4 score. Both pitchers were in fine form and the splendid fielding of Kirn was a feature of the game.

PIONEER EXPORTER DEAD

Thomas Watkin, Aged Belleville Man, Called by Death.

Belleville, Aug. 13.—After a few days' illness, Thomas Watkin, pioneer cheese exporter of this city and district, passed away Tuesday. Deceased was in his 86th year and was born in Shrewsbury, England. For 45 years he had lived here, and for the greater portion of that time was engaged in buying cheese. On Thursday last he was stricken with illness whilst attending the Campbellford cheese board. Deceased was a widower and leaves no family.

BUYS WHOLE TEAM

MACK OF PHILADELPHIA AMERICANS PURCHASES PERSONNEL OF THE ATLANTIC.

Philadelphia, August 13. Manager Connie Mack of the Philadelphia Americans has announced that he has purchased the rights to the entire playing personnel of the Atlanta club of the Southern Association. He has already picked nine of the players to report to him at the close of the Southern Association season on Sept. 7. Mack also announced the purchase of Pitcher Zinn of the Waco, Texas, club, and Pitcher Rommell, of the Newark club. Zinn and Rommell will report Sept. 1.

TWO STAKE EVENTS

Third Grand Circuit Meeting on Belmont Club's Track.

Philadelphia, August 13. — Two stake events and two open classes made up the card for the opening yesterday of the Grand Circuit meeting at the old Belmont Driving Club's mile track at Narberth, Pa. Purses and stakes, including one for trotting teams, aggregate more than $30,000, and it is expected that about 150 trotters and pacers will start in the sixteen events on the four days' program.

MATTHEWS-B. WON FROM LINDSAY

FIRST GAME OF O. A. B. A. CHAMPIONSHIP SERIES—SCORE 10-7.

The Matthews-Blackwell won their first game in the O.A.B.A. championship series yesterday in Lindsay by the score of 10 to 7. The Packers played a different kind of game than they did in their last appearance here and it is hoped and expected that they will go a considerable distance in the championship series. Lindsay will be here Saturday afternoon to play the return game at 3 o'clock.

This is the only team we have now in any league, now the Petes are defeated and the fans should get behind this team to make a strong finish to a successful baseball years.

The packers lined up as follows:—Lefane, c; Frost, p; Cairns, 1st; Lowe, 2nd; Adams, ss; Holyman, 3rd; Shaughnessy, lf; Corsey, m; Cunningham, rf.

REGATTA POSTPONED

The regatta which the Chemong Park Cottagers' Association intended holding on Thursday, Aug. 14th has been postponed till Thursday, Aug. 21. A splendid list of acquatic events will be run off on this excellent course in front of Chemong Park.

British Tommy Amused By the Chinese Workers With Forces in France

AN interesting sidelight is thrown on a little known phase of army life in Flanders by a story contributed to the Manchester Guardian by an English ex-soldier signing himself F. A. V. He writes:—

"During the war a certain town in French Flanders was invaded by a horde of Chinese laborers. They wore blue quilted clothing, army boots and conical fur-lined caps. A raw wind was blowing the fine rain into their tanned faces. They all looked cold and hungry.

"Outside the town was a great assembly of bell tents, newly erected on a muddy field fenced in with barbed wire. A dozen Chinamen were shown into each tent by an English corporal and then left to do as they pleased. It was too wet and unpleasant to be in the open, so they just sat down on their haunches, forlorn and miserable.

"For a time nothing could be heard except a few brief snatches of whispered conversation. Then there was a sniff, and sniff was followed by sniff — some of them were actually weeping over their hard lot, discordant wails came from one of the tents. Voices from other tents joined in, and the sound increased in volume.

"It was vaguely mournful, although it did not seem to correspond with any definite human emotion. It varied greatly in pitch, it rose and fell, and it even had a kind of rhythm. At first we were puzzled by the weird noise, and then we realized that it must be song. We were, indeed, listening to Chinese music—music that authorities on Eastern culture have praised as subtle and beautiful, though quite unintelligible to the uninitiated. It certainly was unintelligible.

"So the poor exiles found consolation in song, and in time they got so used to their new existence that in later days they seemed to be always cheerful and animated.

"For several months our company and a Chinese labor company worked together at a woodyard and sawmill on the Belgian frontier. We called them Chinks and they called us Ingaleesha. Friendly relations were soon established, although there was on our side a small hostile element consisting of men who harbored an unreasoning prejudice against the yellow people and considered it degrading to work with a so-called 'inferior race.' Those who took this attitude lost much of the little fun and interest that relieved the dreary monotony of our own army life.

"At first the easy familiarity of the Chinks was quite startling. I happened to be leaning against a wooden shed when one of them came up to me in the usual shuffling manner. No intention of any kind was expressed on his face, and, without saying a word, he unbuttoned my tunic pocket, took out my pocketbook and examined my papers. Apparently he found nothing of interest, so put the book back again, buttoned up the pocket and shuffled off. Some time afterward another Chink approached me in the same delightfully informal way. He took my glasses off my nose and put them on his own. He seemed to find them satisfactory, and, evidently wishing to buy them, he asked me, 'How many flanks?' But I did not want to part with them for any number of 'flanks,' and conveyed as much to him. He looked at them for a moment, then carefully put them back on my nose, looked at them again and walked off with affected unconcern.

"The Chinks and ourselves would often collect in little groups and converse as best we could. One of the questions they invariably put was 'How many year?' meaning 'How old are you?' We would answer either in a few words of Chinese we had picked up or, more commonly, by indicating the number with our fingers.

"The Chinks seemed to attach great importance to the information supplied to them; they would discuss it among themselves in their rapid, sibilant patter, and then they would tell us their own ages in return. Another question they often asked was: 'How many mada?' meaning 'How many wives (madams) have you got?' We, of course, had either one or none at all, while they sometimes had 'thlee,' to their obvious pride and satisfaction.

"Whether consciously or unconsciously, they assumed that all men were equal, and that other men were just other men and nothing more. Thus the artificial inequality due to army conditions filled them with hostility, a hostility they often expressed with great frankness. One day we were talking to some Chinks when one of them tapped me on the chest, and said with an emphatic shake of his head, 'You gooda.' I was a private, and he meant to say that there was nothing wrong with pri[illegible]. Then he laid his two fingers flat on my upper arm to indicate the two stripes of a corporal, and said: 'No gooda.' Finally he pointed to my shoulder to indicate the pip of an officer and said with solemn conviction, 'No blooda gooda—'

"Sometimes when we were working with the Chinks the spirit of rivalry manifested itself. Once we were unloading a train of short, thick wooden planks and stacking them in the yard. We carried them in on our shoulders, two at a time. Suddenly one of our men appeared with three planks on his shoulder, shouting, 'Chinese no gooda!'

"The challenge was accepted with alacrity, for a Chink appeared with four planks and shouted, 'Chinesha gooda, Ingaleesha no gooda!' He was followed by one of us with five planks on his shoulder, and it was 'Chinese no gooda!' once again. Then came a Chink with six planks, but immediately afterward a soldier came along with seven, looking very hot and uncomfortable beneath such a heavy load. We all shouted derisively, 'Chinese no gooda!' and there was a long pause, and we thought the victory was ours. But suddenly the Chinks burst into gleeful laughter and clapped their hands in mad excitement.

"We did not know what had happened until we saw a Chink staggering under a kind of pagoda which his comrades had erected on his stalwart shoulders. It was built of sixteen planks! Perspiring, breathing hard and taking short, rapid steps, his pagoda on the verge of toppling over every instant, he reached the stack and then allowed the structure to collapse amid wild shouts of 'Chineesha gooda, Ingaleesha no gooda!' It was a warm day, and none of us felt inclined to dispute the final verdict at this meeting of East and West."

Northern Canadian Rockies and the Skeena River

In days no further back than five years ago, the glorious scenery of the Canadian Rockies in central British Columbia, which has been opened up by the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway, was reserved for the intrepid hunter or prospector and the native red man. Today this playground, so expansive that distances do not describe it, is virtually at the door of tourists, travellers, alpinists and sportsmen. This unspoiled wonderland may be penetrated to the very heart in luxurious, modern railway trains.

English Idioms.

The why and wherefore of English idioms and old expressions, which are so familiar to us that they no longer seem strange, must be a source of some perplexity to the foreigner learning the language. For instance, how should he know that when he wishes to say someone has started an undertaking and given it up before seeing it through, he can say that the man "threw up the sponge"? The phrase had its origin in the prize-fighters' ring. In former times, when a prize-fighter was badly injured in the first round, he often declined the sponge offered to him in the second, or, in a sudden fit, threw it up in the air, thus declaring that he had had enough of it.

At one time many years ago the sleeves of all outer garments were very wide. Hence, when a person covered his face with his hand, the suspicion always arose that he was laughing at someone else's discomfiture. That is why, when we are inwardly amused at another, we say we laugh in our sleeve.

A primitive way for a man to commit suicide was to tie the end of a rope around a beam or branch of a tree and the other around his neck, standing all the time on a bucket. By kicking the bucket away he would hang himself. Hence, a slang expression for "to die" is to "kick the bucket."

It used to be customary for the godfather of an infant to present him with a silver spoon at baptism. In the case of a child born lucky or rich, the gift was anticipated at the moment of entering life and the child was then said to be born with a silver spoon in his mouth.

Children are often much interested in the fact that puppies and kittens do not open their eyes for nine days after birth. They watch them with wonder until the little fellows develop eyesight equal to the old pets of the children's acquaintance. So a sensational event or a piece of public scandal which arouses uncommon interest for a few days and then gradually subsides is called a nine days' wonder.

When a tent is being put up it is necessary to secure its rope to the ground on all sides by pegs before the work can be left, lest the whole structure, caught by the wind, should be blown down. Hence the camping phrase, "peg away," arose. Now, whenever we see someone working hard in order to finish his job immediately, we say to him, "Peg away."

In olden times, when bread was purchased in the open market instead of in shops, the women took up the selling from door to door. They received from the bakers 13 loaves for the price of 12, the thirteenth loaf constituting their profit or commission. Hence came the term, "baker's dozen."

Customs of Ancient Inns.

Abroad, where many quaint and curious hotels, taverns, and inns of respectable antiquity abound, it is natural to find numerous odd customs. For instance, there is an inn in a town on the Rhine wherein whenever a patron is heard to swear he must place a coin equivalent to the bar on the counter.

Until recent years there was a most respectable old inn in Warwickshire, the proprietor of which was accustomed to invite all his patrons to accompany him and his wife on Sunday morning to a church directly opposite the inn. On returning from service each customer was expected to partake of refreshments offered by the hospitable landlord free of charge.

Those who put up at one hotel in Edinburgh obtain, if they are accustomed to the ways of the place, a first-hand knowledge of the Scottish disposition. Patrons of this hotel must remember to keep their shoes or boots in their rooms overnight, otherwise their footgear will be blacked, regardless of its original color.—Tit-Bits.

Ancient Furnace Discovered.

A lady member of the Cumberland and Westmoreland Antiquarian Society of England has had the good fortune to discover what is believed to be a Roman bloomery, or ancient smelting furnace. Her attention was drawn to the place by the work of moles, which recently exposed some of the remains, and again later by the burning of the whins formerly concealing the hearth and other features of the bloomery, near Forest How.

By some exploration with a spade, she traced the foundations of a large hearth, twelve yards in diameter, and a number of heaps of cinders, slag and ore; and she also turned up specimens of Roman tiles, with pottery, slag and hematite. The size of the hearth of the Forest How bloomery marks it as quite different from the ordinary north-country mediaeval iron furnaces, which run from seven to nine or ten feet in diameter, for the one just found is twelve yards across. This site appears to be worth further explorations and probably money for that purpose will be found.

EACH BROUGHT BACK BRIDE

Band Turns Out and Serenades Three Returned Men and Wives.

On Monday evening the Hastings town band gathered together and spent the evening in serenading three of our soldier boys, who have just returned from overseas, each bringing with him a blushing young bride.

Needless to say the citizens joined in the celebration and extended congratulations to the young people.

CONSERVATIVES MAKE A CHOICE

At the largest political convention ever held in the riding of North Grey, A. S. Donald, of Keppell, was nominated by the Conservative party for the forthcoming election. By this nomination Mr. Donald supplants the sitting member, Mr. C. S. Cameron, who won the riding in a spectacular contest a few years ago. The convention was enthusiastic and the contest close, Mr. Donald winning out by only a few votes.

LATE MRS. BARTLEY

Funeral Saturday Attended by Sympathetic Friends and Relatives.

The funeral of the late Mrs. W. G. Bartley was held on Saturday afternoon last from her late residence, 135 Rubidge street to Little Lake Cemetery. A large number of sympathising friends, including many relatives from out of the city were present. The service was conducted by Rev. Jas. A. MacKenzie of Knox Church of which Mrs. Bartley was an honored and much loved member. Her three favorite hymns, viz: "Oh God Our Help in Ages Past," "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," and "There is a Green Hill Far Away," were sung during the service.

The pall-bearers were: Mrs. Wm. Kirk and Robert Wilson, brothers of Mr. Bartley in the Orange Order. Messrs. John Buyers and Andrew McKenzie, representing Knox Church, and Messrs. Ernest Benson and John Walde, representing the Brotherhood Bible Class of Knox Church of which Mr. Bartley is the President.

The sympathy of the William Stock and Son Company was expressed by a generous gift. The floral tributes, numerous and beautiful, testified to the love and confidence Mrs. Bartley had gathered throughout her life.

The late Mrs. Bartley whose maiden name was Miss Sarah Jane Montgomery, was born in the township of Cartwright, sixty-four years ago. The last twenty-three years of her life she spent in Peterboro. She will long be remembered by those who knew her for her kindliness and her Christian faith. Her husband, Mr. W. G. Bartley, and family all survive her, Mrs. Parker, Mrs. Hillier Mrs Long of Peterboro; Mrs. Gordon Nicholls of Selwyn; Miss Eva, of Buffalo, N.Y., and Misses Maud and Bertha, at home, the sons are, Albert and Arthur, of Toronto, and Bruce and Leith, of Peterboro. Her brother Mr. Edward Montgomery, of Blackstock, Ont., and her two sisters Mrs Jos. Shaw, of Omemee, North Dakota; Miss Mary Montgomery, of Montana, also survive her.

Among the out-of-town sympathizers who were present at the funeral service were Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Montgomery, of Blackstock; Dr. Montgomery, of Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. William Thompson and Miss Edna Thompson, of Toronto; Mr. and Mrs J. H. Freeburn, of Purple Hill; Mr. Joseph Bartley, of Toronto; Mrs. John Johnston, of Port Perry; Mrs. James Wood, of Lindsay, and Mrs. Neales of Toronto; Mrs. Eliza Johnston, of Cartwright; Mrs. Elizabeth Saunderson of Cartwright; Mrs. John Reynolds, of Cavan.

SUPPLIES PULPIT IN ST. PAULS

Rev. R. J. M. Glassford of Toronto Here for Next Two Sundays.

Rev. R. J. M. Glassford of Toronto preached at St. Paul's Church at both services on Sunday and will occupy the pulpit for the remainder of the services this month. With Mrs. Glassford he is staying in the city. Mr. Glassford is esteemed as one of the most successful ministers in the Presbyterian Church in Canada, and his discourses Sunday were no disappointment to those who had heard of his reputation as a preacher. He is still a man in the prime of vigorous and active life, with many years of usefulness in prospect.

Mr. Glassford began his career in the early nineties, his first charge being at Streetsville, a church that is noted for the number of young pastors who have left there to enter wider fields. He was called to Guelph and in 1912 was appointed to a special position in Toronto, having to do with the educational branch of the church work.

SEPARATE TURK GOVERNMENT

May be Attempted by Halil Pasha, Former Turkish Minister Marine.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Constantinople, Aug. 13.—Halil Pasha, former Minister of Marine, and uncle of Enver Pasha, former Minister of War, has escaped to Asia Minor with Kritchelk Talaat, another leader of the Committee of union and progress. It is believed he will join Mustapha Kaimil Pasha in Erzerum. A Paris despatch on July 7th stated that Mustapha Kaimil Pasha and Halil Pasha might attempt the formation of a Separate Turkish Government.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

MAGEE—STINSON

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Stinson, Omemee, was the scene of a very pretty wedding, on Wednesday, July 30th, when their only daughter, Evelyn, was united in marriage to Mr. Frank Magee, son of the late John Magee of Orange Corners, Rev. Mr. James, officiating.

The bride, who was given away by her father, entered the drawing room, which was beautifully decorated with American Beauty Roses and sweet peas, to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by Miss Ina Rowan, cousin of the bride. Standing before a beautiful bank of ferns and flowers, the bride looked charming in a handsome gown of taffeta and georgette crepe. After the ceremony the guests sat down to a bounteous wedding luncheon.

SHOWER FOR COL. AND MRS. GERMAIN OMEMEE

The Methodist Church basement, Omemee, was recently the scene of a miscellaneous shower, given in honor of Mrs. Gerain, (nee Amy Parsons.) Flags, bunting and red white and blue streamers made gay the interior.

A patriotic programme of welcome home songs, etc., was given in honor of the bridegroom. Col. Germain, who is an Omemee old boy is well known to the people here. Following this programe, Col. Germain and his bride were invited to occupy a flag decked sofa on the platform, and the shower was presented by three returned men—Sergt. Harold Cunningham, Pte. Cecil Mills, M.M.; and Pte. L. Brooks, amid much merriment.

Col. Gerain thanked the young people on behalf of his wife, telling them that should they ever visit Moose Jaw, a warm welcome would await them at their home.

Refreshments were served by the ladies and another long-to-be-remembered evening spent by all.

Men listen when money talks. Probably that is why we sometimes hear of hush money.

MISS JEAN HARSTONE HOME

Serving as Ambulance Driver Past Four Years in War Areas.

Miss Jean Harstone, who has been serving as an ambulance driver for the past four years on various parts of the front, returned home unexpectedly on Monday. She was home last summer on leave, and returned to Europe while the armistice was being considered. She reports that those engaed in her work have been as busy, or even more so, since the cessation of hostilities, as before. She has come straight from Constantinople, after a trip through France and Italy to Constantinople, organizing with others new ambulance units.

There are large numbers of sick and wounded being brought back from the army of occupation, which keeps the ambulance drivers very busy. Also there is the work of removing the dead scattered over the battlefields to central cemeteries. This is work that will continue for a long time, and when relatives of the boys start going over to Europe this work will be greatly increased. The long distances it is necessary for them to drive adds greatly to their duties.

Any one who was at the front during war time would not recognize the country in its present state. In the city of Lens, which was completely destroyed by shell fire, there are at present 20,000 inhabitants living in the cellars of their homes. The fields are under cultivation, and if it were not for the presence of various portions of war units one would be unaware that there had been battles fought over some of the sectors. Around Ypres alone is the condition unchanged. This part of the country, which was not very good in peace time, is being carefully guarded in its present wrecked state for travellers.

Miss Harstone will return to Europe after a rest at home, because her work will continue as long as there is an army of occupation. She says there is no place to live equal to London, and will be glad to return in spite of the strenuous life and the in spite of the strenuous life and the many dangers she has faced over there.

BRIDE-TO-BE RECIEVED MANY BEAUTIFUL GIFTS

PRESENTED IN THE NATURE OF A SURPRISE SHOWER BY ADMIRING FRIENDS.

A miscellaneous shower wis given to Miss Evelyn Stinson at Omemee two days before her marriage, by the young people of the English church. An impromptu programme was rendered, Miss Stinson being called on for a piano solo, as the final number.

On turning from the piano the young bride-to-be was confronted by two young ladies bearing a huge clothes basket laden with many beautiful and costly gifts.

Miss Stinson thanked her friends in a few well chosen words after which dainty refreshments followed by cards and dancing brought to a close a most enjoyable event.

OBITUARY

MRS. ROBERT GARDINER

The death of Margaret Purcell, widow of the late Robt. Gardiner, formerly of Omemee, took place suddenly at Perrytown, on Saturday, July 26th.

Deceased was apparently in as good health as usual when she passed away, without being able to call anyone to her aid and her spirit returned to the God who gave it. She leaves to mourn her loss one son, William W., of Victoria, B.C.; one daughter, Mrs. Barton Rea, of St. Louis, Mo., and two brothers, William and Thomas Purcell, besides many friends who will miss her.

Mrs. Gardiner was well known in Omemee having lived there many years.

The funeral took place on Tuesday, July 29, interment being made beside her husband in Port Hope Cemetery.

MRS. WILLIAM WARD

The death occurred last evening after a lingering illness, at 362 Burnham street, of Mrs. William Ward, widow, in her 75th year. Deceased was a life long resident of this city and was well and favorably known.

She leaves to mourn her loss two daughters, Mrs. Albert Throop and Mr. Kent Throop city; three sons, Walter J. Patterson and Alex Patterson, of this city and William Patterson of Toronto; also one sister, Mrs. William Richardson of Fredonia, New York. The funeral will leave her late home, 362 Burnham street, tomorrow afternoon, at 3 o'clock and thence proceed to Little Lake Cemetery for interment.

Service at the house at 2.30 p.m. Rev. Mr. Rose officiating.

LATE MRS. JOHN NUGENT

The news of the sudden death of Mrs. John Nugent at their island home, Stoney Lake, on Monday morning last, came as a great shock to her family and friends, as she had been apparently quite herself the day before.

By her bright unselfishness and continual thought and care for the happiness of others, Mrs. Nugent had endeared herself to a host of friends to whom her city and Stoney Lake home were always open; and, besides all the activities of her private life, she was a member of the board of the Young Women's Christian Association and filled the position of convener of the Social Committee in it for many years. She has been identified also with the work of the Ladies' Aid of the George Street Methodist Church, and at different times has held all the offices in that organization. Durin gthe war she was also a supervisor in the work of the Peterborough Red Cross Society.

In the city of Peterborough and in the whole of the surrounding country, where both Mr. and Mrs. Nugent are so well known and so deeply loved, the most heart-felt sympathy goes out to Mr. Nugent in his terrible bereavement. It is hard to believe that one so active and full of life as Mrs. Nugent was, has gone from us, but we can truly say that she, being dead, still speaks to us in the innumerable acts of love and kindness by which she is remembered, and which are eloquent of her noble and loving spirit.

Laid at Rest.

The funeral took place this afternoon at 2.30 from the family residence, 205 Brock street, and was largely attended by relatives friends and acquaintances. Interment was made at Little Lake Cemetery. Revs. B. Greatrix and S. Cronsbanks officiated.

The pall-bearers were Messrs. J. H. Renwich, W. H. Meldrum, E. F. Mason, A. J. Johnston, W. J. Kent and Col. Jos. Mills.

And most women are Sadie-on-the-Spot when it comes to gossiping about other women.

BOLSHEVIKI DRIVE COSSACKS BACK BUT KOLCHAK'S GOVT. NOT ENDANGERED

Better News From South Russia, Where Russian Volunteers Are Closing in on Odessa—Evacuation of Whole Black Sea Coast by Bolsheviki May Be Looked For Any Moment Now—British Ammunition Being Rushed to the Front.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 14.—The retreat in the Ural mountains of the forces of dmiral KolAchak continues, according to news received here today.

South of Uralsk, at the southern end of the Urals, it is added, the Bolshevik have driven the Cossacks back sixty miles, and are endeavoring to separate them from the main body of the Russian forces.

No Material Weakening.

The Associated Press is informed, however, that the position of Admiral Kolchak and his Government is not believed to be materially weakened by th Bolshevik advance, and barring the unexpected collapse of Admiral Kolchak, the munition being sent should arrive in Siberia in time to aid in his recover. Nevertheless, it is admitted here that the reverse suffered by Admiral Kolchak are a serious blow to the policy of the Entente in Russia.

Trouble For Soviets.

Better news has been received from South Russia, where General Petluram, the Ukrainian anti-Bolsheviki leader, is progressing rapidly toward Kiev, with a view to cutting the railways southward towards Odessa, which probably will have to be evacuated by the Soviet forces.

Closing in on Odessa.

The Russian volunteer troops under General Denekine are closing in on Odessa from the northeast and the east, and it is believed that the whole Black Sea coast will be soon out of Bolsheviki hands.

MEETING TO-NIGHT TO ORGANIZE THE CITIZENS' LIBERTY LEAGUE

Official Here From Toronto to Address Gathering at Victoria Hall—Open Letter From J. H. Burnham.

A gentleman from Toronto is in the city to organize a branch of the "Citizens' Liberty League," and a meeting for such organizing is called for tonight, at 8 o'clock, at Victoria Hall, when it is hoped the organisation will be effected and officers appointed.

The movement is absolutely non-political and unsectarian. It is the object of the league to oppose all class legislation in every shape and form and to resist as far as possible the introduction into our home life of the word "verboten," the word that more than anything else brought about the recent terrible holocaust in Europe, and to put down which so many of our brave boys fought and died.

Mr. Burnham's Letter.

The following open letter has been sent to the league organizers by Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P.:

Citizens' Liberty League:

Sirs,—You ask me to join in your movement on the ground that it makes for the freedom of the people. I am absolutely against the bar and against all but firm governmental control, but within those limits I believe alcohol to be a necessary created by God for the benefit of mankind. We must beware of telling God that our system of morals is superior to His, and whilst total prohibition is equivalent to telling the Creator that He could have instituted it with regard to all means of evil but did not do so, yet egulation must be rigidly enforced.

In this way the man who goes to xcess and the self-controlled man will both be protected. Repression in personal matters by the tyranny of a majority [illegible] brute force and we cannot be surprised if it is answered by brute force which will produce a Bolshevik condition of brutality and chaos. With this explanation I will join your liberty league.

The crusade against tobacco, which is to follow, and against every other means of evil and benefit, if conducted on the plan of total prohibition, will further aggravate the feeling of resistance to force. We had at one time the craze that "I didn't raise my boy to be a soldier," and what became of it?

FORD LIBEL CASE HAS GONE TO JURY

Case in Which $1,000,030 Are Involved Will Soon Be Matter of Past History.

TAKING TESTIMONY 3 MONTHS

Judge Tucker Directs Jury That Right of Fair Comment by Mr. Ford Is Expected.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Mount Clemens, Mich., August 14.—The jury which for three months has been hearing testimony and arguments in the Henry Ford $1,000,000 libel suit against the Chicago Daily Tribune, retired today to consider its verdict.

Judge's Instruction.

Judge Tucker instructed the jury that "the right of fair comment" is expected in the case of Mr. Ford because his position as a great employer of labor and his entry as a propagandist into the discussion of the preparedness question, made him a public character. The judge held that a newspaper has no greater privileges in making comment than has an individual.

ONE HUNDRED GALS. GASOLINE EXPLODE TWO INSTANTLY KILLED MANY ARE HURT

Noise of Explosion Heard Many Miles Away—All Casualties Employes.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Kitchener, August 14.—In a terrific explosion of one hundred gallons of gasoline this morning, August Hapshield and Adam C. Bauer were instantly killed, Charles Scherer seriously injured, several others more or less hurt, and the impregnating plant of the Canadian Consolidated Felt Company was completely demolished.

A smaller garage building close by was also destroyed. The cause of the explosion, the noise of which was heard miles away, is at present unknown. All of the casualties were employes of the plant.

LATE ANDREW CARNEGIE LAID AT REST TO-DAY

NO FUNERAL EULOGY—INTERMENT IN LOT AT SLEEP HOLLOW.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Lenox, Mass., Aug. 14.—The funeral of Andrew Carnegie was held at Shadow Brook, his summer home in the Berkshires today. There was no eulogy and there were no pall-bearers.

Interment will be made this afternoon in a lot chosen by Mr. Carnegie some years ago at Sleepy Hollow, near Tarrytown, N.Y.

BRITISH TRANSPORTATION BILL IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

House of Lords Propose Several Important Amendments.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 14.—After passing the profiteering bill, by which the Government will be empowered to take drastic action in lowering the high cost of living, the House of Commons, which sat all night, took up the House of Lords' amendments to the transport bill this morning. Some of these amendments were not accepted by the Lower House of Parliament.

After being in continuous session seventeen hours, the House rose shortly after nine o'clock this morning.

TRAIN CREW ROBBED OF ALL THEIR CASH TO-DAY

MASKED MEN HOLD UP EMPTY TRAIN AT TONAWANDA.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Buffalo, Aug. 14.—Three members of the crew of a Lehigh Valley troop train were held up by two masked men between Niagara Falls and Buffalo early today and robbed of all their cash.

The train was returning from the west, and, expect for crew, the coacher were empty. The thieves jumped from the train when it slowed down near North Tonawanda, and have not been captured.

SERVE ULTIMATUM ON GOVERNMENT

BRITISH ENGINEERS AND FIREMEN DEMAND SPEEDY SETTLEMENT.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 14.—A demand for a speedy settlement of their wage dispute, which was construed as being in the nature of an ultiamtum, was made today by the locomotive engineers and firemen upon Sir Auckland Geddes, British Minister of Reconstruction.

About 65,000 men are involved. The letter states also that standardized wage scales offered to the men have been rejected by several branches of the railwaymen's organization, particularly at Liverpool and Manchester.

10,000 EMPLOYES FOUGHT AT FRUNT

European Organization of Canadian Pacific Bore Tremendous Share in Empire's Defence.

SERVED IN EVERY WAR AREA

Many Made Supreme Sacrifice, While Large Numbers Won Decorations For Bravery.

No other imperial organization played so important a part in the great war, perhaps as the Canadian Pacific Railway, which in men alone contributed over ten thousand of its employees to the armies of the Allies; and it can safely be said that of this fine contribution the European organization bore a tremendous brunt.

Served on All Fronts.

Out of a total number of about 250 employees in the various European offices of the company, no less than 190 served in different forces. These forces included the infantry, the cavalry, the artillery, the engineers, the air force, the navy, the army service corps, the "tanks", the machine gun corps the forestry battalions, the Indian cavalry, the French army, the Belgian army, the army medical corps, the East African forces, and the North Russia expedition. The venue of service seen included Flanders, France, Italy, Salonika, Gallipoli, Egypt, Palestine, Mesopotamia, Russia, Africa, India, the sea and the air.

Decorations Won.

At the recent re-union of the British staffs, held in London in early July for the purpose of congratulating the European manager of the company, Sir George McLaren Brown, O.B.E., on his knighthood, a feature of the banquet was a handsomely illustrated photographic souvenir with a roster of portraits, all of those who had "done their bit." Twenty-three had paid the supreme tribute of their lives, and the decorations won by the European staff include 3 Military Crosses, 2 Military Medals, 1 Meritorious Service Medal, 4 Croix the Guerres, 3 Croix de l'Yser and 3 Medaille Militaire.

OVER 2,00,000 ORPHANS

Serbia Suffered Terrible Loss of Life in Great War.

Belgrade, Aug. 14.—The war has made Serbia a country of orphans. There are 200,000 persons who lost their parents and 300,000 more who lost one parents, according to statistics compiled by Red Cross workers from records in the Serbian educational department. Some towns of 10,000 inhabitants have between 2,000 and 3,000 orphans.

The occupation of Serbia by the enemy and the deportation combined with the great retreat in 1915, which carried half a million children in its wake, separated numberless children from their parents.

WEEP NO MORE, MY LADY

The above is the title of the opening chapter in The Review's new serial story, the publication of which will begin Saturday. The novel is called "Seven Keys to Baldpate." It is by that popular author, Earl Derr Biggers, one of the leaders in American letters, and still holds its place as one of the best novels ever produced, according to the modern standard. The fascinating interest with which the story abounds is apparent in the opening chapter and lovers of high-class fiction are advised to start their reading at the beginning.

"Seven Keys to Baldpate" is the story, the dramatized form of which was presented at the recent Chautauqua entertainment in this city.

RETAIL MERCHANTS NOT ACTIVE IN BOOSTING GROCERY PRICES

The declaration that the Retail Merchants' Association has been particularly active in destroying the effects of cooperative associations in Canada to reduce the high cost of living, made by Dr. McFall, Cost of Living Commissioner, has aroused resentment both in Peterborough and Toronto.

Referring to these charges today one of the leading grocers in this city states that the accusation that the Retail Merchans' Association are active in destroying efforts to reduce the cost of living are false and unfair.

The so-called cooperative societies are really not cooperative societies he said. The only co-operation which can reduce the high cost of living is the co-operation of the people with the retailer. If the consumer would co-operate with the retailer to lower his expense of doing business prices could be lowered. But co-operative societies can not lower the prices or relieve the high cost of living. In one city of Western Ontario the co-operative society advertised sugar at $7.50 when it cost them $10.25 provided the purchaser took $20 worth of goods besides. The consumer paid the full price for his sugar and possibly more with the other $20 worth of goods.

Experience in Britain

Referring to the success in Great Britain of co-operative societies this local merchant pointed out that the situation was very different. In Great Britain the Government protects the retailer by reducing the freight charges, etc. In Canada the Government is apparently protecting the wholesalers and jobbers. In his report, Dr. McFall admits that the new law on combines specifically states that its provisions cannot compel any manufacturer, wholesaler or jobber to sell to any other class of persons than those accustomed to purchase from manufacturers, jobbers or wholesalers, respectively. However the law still makes it a criminal action to conspire to lessen competition.

Invites Competition

The Retail Merchants' Association are in no way endeavoring to lessen competition. Their chief object is to get permission for anyone who can buy from the manufacturer to do so. Were retailers allowed to buy direct from the manufacturers they could sell their goods at a reduced rate and make a living profit at the same time, neither of which they can do under present circumstances. The Retailers' Association is not against any form of legitimate business, but has done good service in putting a stop to such freak business methods as trading stamps.

Fighting Combines

The Retail Merchants' Association is also strongly adverse to combines. The members can prove that the system of competitive business is the only one which can keep prices down.

A look at the business of local retail grocers, the interviewed went on to say, will show conclusively that the blame does not rest with them. For the past two years retail grocers have not made interest on their money. Formerly the retailers made 25 cents on $2 worth of sugar. Now they make 25 cents on the same amount of sugar which sells for $6. Similarly they now make 2c on an 18c packae of cereals, where they used to get 2c on a 10c package. Thus they have but the same profits to meet the increased cost of doing business and increased interest on a larger capital. On the other hand, the wholesaler is making huge profits because he earns a commission on his business.

Boycotting Unknown

Referring to the reference of boycotting wholesalers by the retailers, such a thing declares this merchant, is unknown in this locality and is very rare anywhere. Certainly the blame for exorbitant prices was misplaced when shouldered upon the Retail Merchants' Association, which body is doing everything in its power to relieve the situation.

Inspection Invited

If the statements made here are doubted by anyone, the books of one of the largest groceries in the city are open for inspection at any time.

CHARGED REPRESENTATIVE RYS. WITH GIVING BIG STOCK BONUSES

Washington, D. C., Aug. 13.—Charges that eighteen representative railroads operating in all parts of the United States gave away stock bonuses aggregating $150,411,000 from 1900 to 1910 and have paid millions in dividends on these bonuses were made before the house interstate commerce committee by Glenn E. Plumb of Chicago, author of the Plumb plan for tripartite control of the roads.

Mr. Plumb charged, further, that "these railroads, which have so increased their property investment account at the expense of the public, are now controlled in whole or in part by the Morgan interests, the Rochefeller interests and the Gould interests."

Demands Inquiry by Congress.

"On behalf of all of the employes of these systems, of transportation and the public," said Mr. Plumb, "we demand that congress shall make a thorough investigation of the charges herein set forth, so that the American people may know to what extent it is sought to subject them to exploitation under the plans proposed to this committee of congress, plans which would make lawful the fixing of rates based on the now unlawful aggregate property investment accounts of these systems."

Specifically Mr. Plumb charged that the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St Paul, the Chicago & Northwestern, the Great Northern, the Illinois Central and the Southern Pacific railroads gave away in bonuses to their stockholders more than $250,000,000 during the ten year period mentioned, and "that the actual dividend disbursements on this excess capital for the year 1913 alone amounted to more than $11,000,000."

Says Bonuses Were Distributed.

He also alleged that the Pennsylvania, Baltimore & Ohio; New York, New Haven & Hartford; New York Central & Hudson River railroad, Boston & Maine and the Delaware & Hudson company "issued new stock for $101,000,000 less than its market value, or gave away this enormous amount in bonuses to stockholders," and that "the dividends on these fictitious stock issues in 1913 alone amounted to over $4,317,000."

Railway Trickery is Charged.

Washington, D.C., Aug. 13.—A. B. Garretson, former head of the Order of Railway Conductors, told the house interstate commerce committee yesterday that operating officials in charg of railroads during government control were actuated by the one de[illegible] demonstrating that government ownership was not best for the country. Exactly the same operating force that built up a great surplus before the war created a big deficit.

The Hydro-electric Commission has applied to the Dominion Government for reimbursement for extraordinary war expenditures totalling more than $1,900,000.

Canada's net debt is over 1,640 million dollars.

COAL SHORTAGE FEARED BY SOME

Plenty of Pea Coal in the City, but Other Grades Are Quite Limited.

U.S. SHIPMENTS SHOW INCREASE

Toronto is Optimistic and Dealers Do Not Expect Early Increase in Price of $12.00.

According to all reports, the coal situation in Peterborough is none too promising, nad some dealers fear a shortage. While pea coal can now be purchased almost anywhere, nut and stove coal are scarce. One local dealer is taking no orders at all, according to his clerk's response to inquiries. Pea coal is $11 a ton, and other grades $12.50, and dealers promise an increase in September. In Toronto, however, the dealers have no fear of a coal shortage, are selling at $12 the ton, and see no immediate prospect of an increase.

The city fuel yard has still on hand 1,322 tons of nut, pea and run-of-mine coal, but no stove. City Treasurer Adams is taking orders for this fuel, but the demand is not brisk. At the city yard nut and pea coal is selling for $11 the ton, and run-of-mine at $10.

Why Any Shortage?

Why there should be danger of a coal shortage is hard to understand in face of the big increase in shipping reported. From Philadelphia comes the announcement that shipments of anthracite for July as reported to the anthracite bureau of information aggregated 6,082,334 tons, an increase over June of 432,743 tons. Compared with July, 1916, the latest normal year in anthracite production, shipments last month showed an increase of 619,456 tons.

The shipments for the first four months of the coal year beginning April amounted to 22,608,555 tons, as compared with 21,146,536 tons for the corresponding period in 1916, an increase of nearly one and a half million tons.

WILL THE FARMERS STRIKE?

Talk of Doing so Unless Wheat Price Suits Them.

Winnipeg, Aug. 14.—What might be construed as a veiled threat on the part of the farmer to go on strike if the Government fixes the initial price of wheat at anything less than the $2.26 guaranteed by the United States to its producers, was made by J. K. McLennan, representing the United Farmers of Ontario, at the opening session of the Canadian Wheat Board in the Winnipeg Grain Exchange.

International Officers Threaten Striking Railway Shopmen With Expulsion From Order

CHICAGO GREAT STORM CENTRE

Sucess or Failure of Big Walk out Hinges on To-day's Meeting of Malcontents

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Cihcago, August 14.—The expulsion of all striking railway shopmen from the international organization was threatened in a telegram from B. M. Jewell, president of the organization, which is to be presented today by officials of the Chicago district council at a meeting of the striking shopmen called to vote on the question of returning to work.

With Chicago as the stronghold of the strike movement, which has been disapproved by the international officers, railroad officials, regional directors and strikers declared that today's meeting will mark the success or failure of the walkout.

MR. TOOMS' DELUSION.

MR. T. TOOMS, who holds the highly honorable position of business agent of the Laborers' Union, had a letter in The Review of last week, in which he deplored the fact that modern machinery was displacing hand labor to such an extent that it was becoming more and more difficult for a workingman to earn a living for himself, not to speak of supporting a family. The steam shovel was singled out by Mr. Tooms as an instance in point.

We take it that Mr. Tooms himself and the members of the union whose cause he champions would be averse to engaging in the line of work that is performed by the steam shovel. Put that machine in the store house, and the task it now performs would have ot be undertaken by foreign laborers, and to their presence in Canada Mr. Tooms would be as likely to protest as he does against the modern machine itself.

It has never yet been demonstrated that modern machinery tends to make work scarce. On the other hand it is easy to prove that such inventions increase operations in the very lines in which they are used. It takes labor, and skilled labor at that, to manufacture the machines to which Mr. Tooms objects. Men are better situated, better paid, infinitely better as to social position and in every other sense, in building steam shovels than if they were engaged with pick and spade working in competition with that machine.

Mr. Tooms has another letter in today's issue, in which he asserts that men now idle in the cities can be secured for urgent farm work if they are given adequate wages and other conditions that will raise them above the status of slaves. In this contention Mr. Tooms gives evidence that he is laboring under another delusion.

The man who works for wages on a farm today is vastly better off than the man who follows the lower grades of labor in the cities. Taking his board and lodging into consideration, his compensation exceeds that of the city worker. He is better fed and housed. He eats at the same table as his employer, stretches himself in slumber under the same roof. On Sunday, if he is spiritually disposed, he is free to ride to church in the farmer's wagon or auto, and to sit in the same pew as the man who rents it. In all respects he is treated as a member of the family. We venture that Mr. Tooms and the members of the union whose destinies he directs are accorded no such privileges by their employers in the city, live on no such terms of equality. What his men do on Sundays does not worry the average city boss. Their spiritual condition is seldom a matter with which he concerns himself.

Another delusion is that hours of labor on the average modern farm are excessively long. Reduction in these hours has kept pace with those in the cities. Mr. Tooms can convince himself of this fact by taking a trip through the country districts any day, even in the rush of harvest time, after 6 p.m., when he will see farm work suspended and farm machinery standing idle in the fields everywhere. It was not always thus, it is true. It is just as true that a few years ago workers in the city did not knock off for the day at 5 p.m.

The man who works by the year on a farm, works, when an average is struck, shorter hours than the laborer in the city. The average is still lower when wet weather and other time unavoidably lost, and for which the farm hand is paid, is taken into account.

SLIM CHANCE FOR RECIPROCITY.

THE RECENT SPEECH of Mr. George M. Young, representative from North Dakota, during the debate in the Congress of the United States on the bill to repeal the Reciprocity Act indicates that the agriculturists of the United States are moving for higher protection of their products against Canadian competition and that their demands relative to the tariff are based wholly upon consideration of their own situation. Mr. Young said in part:

> "The Underwood law did not get well under operation before the European war began. The conditions created by that war have acted as a high protective tariff. When we get back to peace conditions......the American farmers will raise a howl which, by comparison, will make the roar of protest against Canadian reciprocity seem like a feeble murmur. In other words, when the farmers really find out tabt the Underwod law lets down the bars as to agricultural products to a much greater extent than Canadian reciprocity, they will throw the men responsible for it higher than they did Mr. Taft."

Congressman Young in his address reflects the sentiments of the Republican party, which for the first time [illegible] control of both branches of the American Congress. The Underwood tariff to which he refers was a creation of academic statesmanship, of the politics learned from books and in universities rather than in the broad school of practical business experience. Of this type of statesmanship President Wilson is the outstanding exponent, and it is a type with which Canada now appears to be threatened.

The Underwood tariff put on the free list practically everything the farmer has to sell. Twice the country condemned that tariff by increasing the Republican representation in House and Senate, first in 1916 and then again two years later. President Wilson would beyond all question have gone down in the general crash of 1916, but his easy methods of dealing with the war problem of that period found favor in the eyes of, and won him the support of, the alien races in the United States. Pure Americanism was solidly against his return to power.

In view of the situation in the United States, why should Hon. W. S. Fielding, at the Ottawa convention, drag from the closet and place on public parade again the Reciprocity skeleton, the ghastly cadaver that wrecked the family household so thoroughly in 1911? What can he hope to accomplish by this move? Speeches of Congressman Young and other leaders in the American House and Senate furnish the answer. If Mr. Fielding thinks to delude the farmers of Canada into hoping that there is still a chance for Reciprocity, he is simply driving another nail into the coffin of his party.

TEH MEMORY OF SIR WILFRID LAURIER.

THE LATE Sir Wilfrid Laurier, now that he has passed from earth, is entitled to the same consideration as that which is extended to the humblest private citizen sleeping his last sleep. He should be remembered for he good he has done. His virtues should be recalled, his mistakes—and all men have erred in judgment—should no longer be dwelt upon.

The people of Canada have passed judgment on every public man time and again, and that verdict should be sufficient and final. Let the dead rest in peace. It is the living with whom we should concern ourselves.

There is today, apparently, an unfortunate tendency on the part of rabid party papers to drag the record of the late chieftain into current political discussions, to attempt to asperse the memory of a man who went to his grave mourned by thousands regardless of former affiliations and who to the last enjoyed the esteem of statesmen the world over. What Sir Wilfrid Laurier did or what he failed to do matters not now. It is what the living who take up his work have in purpose that interests vitally the Canadian people now. Why attempt to break into the silence of the grave?

MR. KING'S WAR RECORD.

(Lethbridge Herald, Lib.)

KING WILL FACE a good deal of criticism on account of his attitude on war policy. He will be attacked because as a single man of military age he did not offer his services during the war. That is personal, and Mr. King's motives were certainly not inspired by any lack of sympathy with the Allied cause. He may have had the very best of reasons for his course, but a public man must expect to have his personal actions, especially in a period like world war, subjected to attack. If he can defend himself successfully, all the better. Mr. King must expect to meet strong criticism for his failure in a crucial time in the world war, to support a measure to back up the Canadian forces overseas. The fact that the war is over will not bury the attitude taken by public men during the course of the war.

NOTES AND COMMENT.

WHAT IS WANTED is State rather than personal control.

• • • • •

"HE IS A KING among men" is no longer a popular platitude since the war.

• • • • •

WHY WORRY? Take no thought for tomorrow, for then prices may be up another notch.

• • • • •

THE DOLLARS wasted and the property destroyed during the war are the most inconsequential of all the losses.

• • • • •

MACHIN, PRATT, Maclean and otehr restless individuals should restrain themselves instead of attempting to rock the party boat.

• • • • •

A PARTY with its platform intact and its record above reproach would simply be wasting time by calling a general convention.

• • • • •

THERE IS a big crop of sugar in prospect, but this simply means increased opportunities for the profiteer, not any relief to the consumer.

• • • • •

NOW THAT Andrew Carnegie has gone to his reward there is more room than ever at the top of the ladder for ambitious boys and young men.

• • • • •

STRAWS SHOW how some men will vote on the referendum. A reader declares that he cannot feel sorry for Germany or any other country where the sale of beer is allowed.

• • • • •

THE LATE Andrew Carnegie had one advantage over the ordinary philanthropist. He could give away a million or two without entailing the necessity of cutting his own household expenses.

• • • • •

AN IRATE INDIVIDUAL called at a newspaper office and demanded to know "who wrote that article." The editor, with adjectival emphasis, told him the plain truth—that it was none of his business.

OF COURSE there are men who say that if given the opportunity they could reduce the high cost of living. Others merely believe in the theory of perpetual motion or persist in trying to raise themselves by the straps on their boots.

WORTH NOTHING.

It is worth nothing that "down-trodden, distressed" Ireland is bursting with prosperity under the hated British Government

ANDREW CARNEGIE AND THE CHURCHES

The two following quotations contain the gist of the late Andrew Carnegie's feeling about churches and religious services:

"One hundred and fifty differing sects are found in the United States, each fortunately certain that it has in its bosom the truth; and each has part of the truth. All truth is not to be gathered in one of all the sects. It is too vast too all prevailing to be cabined cribbed confined. As well might one country claim a monopoly of all the air of heaven as one sect all the truth of heaven. Each may have some, but none can have all.

"Without church-rate or tithe, without state endowment or state supervision, religion in America has spontaneously acquired a strength which no political support could have given. It is a living force entering into the lives of the people and drawing them closer together in unity of feeling and working silently and without sign of friction which in the mother country results from a union with the state, which, as we have seen, tends strongly to keep the people divided one from another. The power of the church in America must not be sought, as Burke said of an ideal artistocracy, 'in rotten parchments, under dripping and perishing walls, but in full vigor and acting with vital energy and power, in the character of the leading men and mutual interests of the country.' Even if judged by the accommodations provided and the sums spent upon church organizations, democracy can safely claim that of all the divisions of English speaking people it has produced the most religious community yet known."

Some of His Maxims.

Among Mr. Carnegie's maxim are the following:

To educate the people is the foundation of all true progress. They'll do the rest themselves.

I never was miserable. I don't see how any man can be if he does what he feels to be right.

"To save and to serve, not to maim and destroy"—that will be the text of the hero by and by.

There is no heritage like being born poor. The leaders and teachers of this nation came from the poor.

The only sure way to keep "the submerged tenth" from drowning is to teach them to swim for themselves.

Old age should be spent not in "making mickle mair," but in making good use of what has been acquired.

I believe in true democracy. When the people are really interested in anything their voice will be heard at the polls.

I think I am the greatest optimist ever born. Were I to choose a motto it should be: "All is well since all grows better."

I would rather be grandson to one who could teach me to make shoes than the descendant of thirty worthless dukes.

If you stand near a good thing, plunge well into it. Fear is old womanish; it has kept untold millions from making fortunes.

I do not believe in the socialistic idea of municipal ownership is as certain as that I am alive.

This republic is immortal. No matter what trouble it goes through it will weather it without having its foundations shaken.

I object to the term philanthropist when applied to myself. I have always understood it to mean a man with more money than brains.

Poverty develops us. It makes us work our hardest. It brings out the best in us. But bravery must go hand in hand with adversity, else we are doomed.

Economic League on Labor Problems

The National Economic League, with headquarters at Boston, has issued a report on the labor problem, as stated in a number of questions drafted under the supervision of a special committee of its members. The opinions of the members were indicated by answers "yes" or "no" as follows:

Is readjustment in industrial relations essential to American prosperity? Yes. 57; No. 3.

Should there be a general acceptance of union recognition? Yes. 42; No. 11.

Should there be active participation by employes or representatives of employes in all problems of management, affecting the worker? Yes, 48; No. 7.

Should the open shop principle prevail in American industrial life? Yes, 43; No. 8.

Should trade unions be incorporated? Yes. 39; No. 14.

Should public employment offices be established by the Federal Government and co-ordinated throughout the country? Yes, 45; No. 12.

Is there need for a Federal Industrial Tribunal to assume juridiction in dealing with potential and actual strikes? Yes. 41; No. 8.

Should women be given equal opportunities and equal pay in industry for similar work and efficiency? Yes, 50; No. 4.

Should labor in industry of children under sixteen years of age be abolished? Yes, 45; No. 10.

Should there be a National Industrial Parliament made up of representatives of the business and industrial forces and of organized labor, meeting jointly as a forum and industrial body? Yes. 37; No. 14.

Should the obligations of employes engaged in public utilities vital to the daily functions of society be different from those of employes in private industry? Yes, 48; No. 4.

NEW TEACHER FOR LAKEFIELD

Miss Jean Thomson Resigns. Miss Doris Burgess Appointed.

At the Lakefield Public School Board meeting held in the Council Chamber Miss Jean Thomson, teacher of one of the primary rooms, tendered her resignation, which, on motion, was accepted. The members expressed their regret at losing Miss Thomson's valued services. An application for the vacancy was received from Miss Doris Burgess who, on motion, was engaged for the position. The secretary was instructed to advertise for an assistant teacher for the Continuation School.

APSLEY GIRL GUIDES ONE WEEK IN CAMP

HAD ENJOYABLE OUTING UNDER GUARDIANSHIP OF MRS. (REV.) SPENCE.

(Special to The Review.)

Apsley, August 14.—The first Apsley company of Canadian Girl Guides, under the guardianship of Mrs. (Rev.) C. A. G. Spence, spent an enjoyable week of camp life on the shores of Loon Lake on Mr. Alex Woods' old homestead. Lean-tos of brush wer constructed to sleep in, and proved to be comfortable sleeping quarters. During the day time the hours passed all too quickly in lessons in tracking, stalking, signalling, swimming, cooking, first aid etc., while a merry hour was spent in games each evening around the camp fire. Not an untoward incident occurred to mar the enjoyment of an event which will not soon be forgotten by the Girl Guides. On the last evening Mr. and Mrs. Alex Woods visited the camp and regaled the company with lemonade and cakes, a kindness which was much appreciated.

Divine service was conducted at the camp on Sunday afternoon by Rev. C. A. G. Spence, when several visitors attended, after which those Guides who had passed their tests were enrolled and invested with the badge and neckerchief.

EDITOR'S MAIL

A PLEA FOR THE FARM LABORER

Editor Review: Mr. Merrill will be able to get all the men for the farm he requires, or any one else that wants to increase production, by applying at the employment bureau, also at Hunter street bridge at 8 a.m., the C. G. E. gate at 8 a.m. and 1 p.m. Men willing to work "on certain proper conditions." The farm has its attractions. One should there become the intimate friend of nature, understand her signs and pleasure; there one sees all that points to a democratic ideal. But the hired help on the farm is not free. The vast fields of beauty are but the areas of slavery. He does not enjoy the leisure of the cattle he attends, his work is exhausting, his hours long, his reward a pittance. These men could not interpret nature to us because they are bond men.

This sort of thing is changed in Britain, where fifty hours will be the maximum working week. Why not in Canada? If it is conditions, then start with the education, for an educated democracy is never a sweated democracy.

As to the farmer's cry against exorbitant demands: "I cannot pay," etc., I am not concerned. Far better that any industry that cannot provide for the workers in it a living wage and proper conditions all round should go out of existence altogether. But agriculture can, must and will yield to the worker that to which he aspires. If agriculture is not doing this, let us have an enquiry and get down to rock bottom, and find out where we are, for it is the premier industry in the interests of all. We recognize that the source of all wealth is the land, Mr. Merrill. In my narrow but straight way of looking at things I can picture the laborer a craftsman of the highest order, free politically and economically, taking a pride in his calling that will yield to him and the community happiness, contentment, beauty and health. The laborer IS NOT lazy.

Thanks, Mr. Merrill, for the decent burial you gave me.

TO-DAY'S STORY

Gr-rr-r-h! The train drew up with a mighty crash and shock between stations.

"Is it an accident? What happened?" inquired a worried-looking individual of the conductor.

"Someone pulled the bell-cord!" shouted the conductor. "The express knocked our last car off the track! Take us four hours before the track is clear!"

"Great Scott! Four hours! I am supposed to be married today!" groaned the passenger.

"Look here!" he demand. "I suppose you ain't the chap that pulled the cord?"

NOTES ON HEALTH

Do not wear a tight hat; it cuts off the blood from the skin of the head and induces baldness. A soft hat is the best. Do not cripple the feet with tight shoes.

Toothache may be relieved by rinsing the mouth with water in which a teaspoonfuls of carbonate of soda has been dissolved.

A little warm boracic lotion takes away the tired feeling from the eyes and is an excellent remedy for eyes which are inclined to stick together in the morning.

Strains are caused by stretching of the muscles or tendons in severe exertion. Apply hot fomentations as soon as possible. Absolute rest is a necessity in all cases where a speedy cure is desired.

A good remedy for corns is to take equal quantities of castor oil and vaseline, lay it on the corn and tie a piece of soft rag round it every night for a week, then the corn can be picked out by the hand.

WIT AND WISDOM

Domestic Amenities.

Mrs. Fuss—Strange that you men never put things back in their places. I suppose Eve had to nag Adam about that.

Husband—If she did I'll bet he retorted that he wished he could put his rib back in its place.

Not the Results of Matrimony.

Mrs. Johones was in search of a maid. She had been to the Labor Bureaux so many times that she had ceased to be too particular in her requirements.

But even she got a shock at the sight of the applicant the obliging clerk sent along. The woman was shabby in dress, uncouth in manner, and had distinct remains of a black eye.

"Ahem!" coughed Mrs. Johones, thoughtfully, wondering how much she dare ask from this belligerent-looking female. "Er—ahem—are you married?"

The applicant drew herself up haughtily.

"No, madam," she retorted. "I bumped into a door!"

Customers in View.

Business was very bad indeed and somewhat dejected the young doctor sat looking moodily out of his consulting room window. Then his expression took on some slight symptoms of interst, for about a dozen small boys crept into his orchard and began to eat—very hurriedly—his green apples. And they were green, too!

He was disturbed by the maid.

"There are a lot of boys stealing your apples, sir!" she exclaimed.

"I know there are," he replied, calmly, at the same time noticing a small boy swallow a large apple in two mouthfuls.

"Shall I tell the gardener to drive them off, sir?"

"No!" said the young doctor, as he got up and began to mix some stomach-ache cure.

"I dont see why old Smith is so angry with his son. The boy did just what he was told."

"What was that?"

"His father told him to go out and find an opening, and the next thing he sent his father word he was in a hole."

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

The course of true love has too many side tracks.

NEW LIBERAL LEADER

WILL SHOULDER TASK OF LEADING OTTAWA OPPOSITION.

Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King Has Been an Outstanding Figure in Public Life of This Country for Twenty Years and Possesses Unusual Scholastic Attainments—Sketch of His Career.

SCHOLAR, sociologist, and author, Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, C.M.G., M.A., L.L.B., Ph.D., newly-elected leader of the Liberal party of Canada, is a man of unusual scholastic attainments. The youngest man who has ever borne the mantle of leadership, he has yet been an outstanding figure in Canadian life for twenty years, and in that period has devoted his most untiring efforts to the cause of labor and to the realization of a spirit of co-operation between workman and employer.

His work as Deputy Minister of Labor, as editor of the Labor Gazette, as Minister of Labor, as mediator in a score of industrial differences throughout the Dominion, no less than his services as director of the Industries Relations Department of the Rockefeller Foundation and his authorship of such works as "Industry and Humanity," have all given proof of interest in the cause of labor.

William Lyon Mackenzie King was born in Kitchener—then Berlin—Ont., on December 17, 1874. His father was Mr. John King, K.C., one of the foremost barristers of that city, who later became lecturer in constitutional history at Osgoode Hall, Toronto. His mother was Isabel Grace Mackenzie. Both parents were of Scottish descent, and from them Mr. King derived his Presbyterian faith.

He received his early education in the public and high schools of the then Berlin, and afterward went to Toronto University, graduating in 1895 with the degree of B.A. A year later he attained the title of LL.B. and in 1897 that of M.A. Pursuing his studies at the University of Chicago and at Harvard College, he obtained the degree of M.A., in 1898, and, subsequently, in 1909, that of LL.B. Mr. King, at the age of 19, won the Blake scholarship in Arts and Law, while in his second year at the university.

HON. W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

Even as an undergraduate Mr. King manifested a deep interest in industrial and economic subjects, and devoted considerable time to a study of them. This interest was deepened by his experiences as a reporter, subsequent to graduation. Mr. King accepted a position on the Toronto Globe at a salary of $1 a day—"and it wasn't an eight-hour day, either," he himself states. He probably acquired his first taste for politics through his association, as a reporter, with the election of 1896, in which his future chief, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, was placed in power.

Mr. King served also on the Toronto News and the Toronto Mail, but other interests were asserting themselves and beckoning him forward to fresh paths and pursuits. In 1898 he went abroad, visiting Great Britain, France, Germany, Switzerland and Italy, and gaining a deep insight into the economic systems of each of these countries, which was later to serve him in good stead.

The career of the youthful sociologist had not passed unnoted in Canada, meanwhile, and during his stay overseas Mr. King accepted a commission from the Government to enquire into the methods of carrying out Government clothing contracts in Europe. So faithfully did he discharge this duty that, two years later, at the recommendation of Sir William Mulock, Canada's first Minister of Labor, he was offered the post of Deputy Minister, together with the editorship of the Labor Gazette.

Mr. King was in Italy when this offer reached him, and at first he declined, expressing a wish to continue his studies. At the request of friends, however, he reconsidered his decision, and finally agreed to accept the posts offered.

The years 1900 to 1908 were crowded, eventful years to the new Deputy Minister. His achievements during that period are too numerous, and the majority of them too well known to be mentioned in full. He was twice sent as a representative of the Government to England; in 1904, to interview the British authorities on the need for legislation by the Imperial Parliament to prevent false representations to emigrants, and in 1908, to interview the British Government on the subject of immigration to Canada from the Orient, and particularly from India. His other services during the same period included chairmanship of the royal commission which arbitrated the differences between the Bell Telephone Company and its employes in 1907, and of the commissions which inquired into the anti-Asiatic riots in Vancouver in 1908.

With these years of practical experience added to the foundation already laid by his early studies, it was inevitable that Parliament should beckon to Mackenzie King. Obeying its summons, he declared his candidacy in his home constituency of North Waterloo, and was elected in the general election of 1908. The following year he received recognition at the hands of the Imperial Government by being appointed a member of the anti-opium commission which met at Shanghai, China. In 1909 Mr. King also received the portfolio of Minister of Labor in the Laurier Government.

Hon. Mr. King's term as Minister of Labor was terminated by the general election of 1911, in which the reciprocity issue spelled disaster to the Laurier Administration, but in the brief two years which he held office the Minister gave abundant, earnest proof of his devotion to the cause of labor.

The most notable piece of legislation introduced by him was probably his bill providing for investigation of trusts and mergers. He was also instrumental in securing the passage of the bill guaranteeing an eight-hour day for Government employes. Settlement of the G.T.R. strike of 1911 is also ascribed to his tactful mediation, which resulted in reinstatement of men who had been dismissed for their share in the strike.

The next chapter in the public life of Mr. King concerns his association with one of the foremost industries of the century—the Rockefeller foundation, established by John D. Rockefeller for the promotion of closer and more sympathetic co-operation between capital and labor. On October 1, 1914, Mr. King accepted the chairmanship of the Industrial Relations Department of the Foundation, with the object of undertaking an investigation of economic conditions, "as wide as the North American continent."

"I would not have accepted this post," said Hon. Mr. King in a subsequent address, replying to criticisms of his affiliation with an American institution, "had it meant sacrificing my citizenship or renouncing my career in Canada."

One of Mr. King's duties as head of the industrial department of the foundation was supervision of the distribution among thousands of starving miners of Colorado of the sum of $100,000 appropriated by the foundation. Then followed a comprehensive study of industrial conditions in the same state, and painstaking efforts for the construction of machinery designed to bring a new relationship between employer and employe. The results of this investigation and study are largely embodied in the industrial representation plan first set in operation between the Colorado Iron & Fuel Co. and its employees.

The war having hampered to some degree the progress of the foundation, Mr. King in 1917 resigned his position upon it. The election of 1917 found him again aligned with his chieftain, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in opposition to Union Government. Hon. Mr. King contested the North York seat, but was defeated by J. A. M. Armstrong.

Since 1917, one of Hon. Mr. King's contributions to the cause of labor has been his book "Industry and Humanity," published last winter, in which he predicts the triumph of the principle of industrial representation. He draws a parallel in the growth of responsible government in the British Empire.

"Wherever, in the affairs of the state," Mr. King writes, "one class has sought to maintain a monopoly of government, there sooner or later, conflict has been inevitable. In the struggle for a wider freedom, mankind will not rest until in industry, as in the state, autocratic government, whatever its form, is superseded by a form of government representative of all the parties in interest, and, ultimately, by a system the corner-stone of which is responsible government."

It is not generally known that Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King is the hero of Mrs. Humphrey Ward's novel, "The Canadian Born," sometimes known as "Lady Merton, Colonist," but those who have made a close study of the book, state that the character of George Anderson, the virile young Parliamentarian and labor leader, is modelled after the ex-Minister of Labor. Semblance is lent to this belief by the fact that while in England in 1898-1900 Mr. King made the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Ward and won the warm friendship and admiration of both.

A biography of Mr. King by Robson Black, says:

"The champions of Mr. King hold him to be fearless, conscientious, thoroughly modern in his outlook, ambitious, keenly industrious, of cool and accurate judgment, with splendid scholarship and plenty of practice in the cause of public services. The political and other critics of Mr. King, admitting his academic distinction and his zeal, point to his lack of sense of humor as an awkward handicap in such human dealings as are the essence of his profession. Mr. King's extreme sobriety of mind constantly tempts the public to underestimate his known virtues and to mistakenly ascribe his purposeful demeanor to conceit."

The Smallest Nation.

The red and white flag of Monaco flies over the smallest nation on earth. The entire area of Monaco is only eight square miles. Although it is the smallest in area, however, there are three smaller in population. It has 12,000 inhabitants, as compared with 5,320 for Andorra, 10,716 for Liechtenstein and 11,513 for San Marino.

The Zabern Affair.

What is known as the Zabern affair occurred in the town of Zabern, Alsace, in November, 1913, and was the culmination of the brutal treatment of the populace by the officers and soldiers of the Ninety-ninth Prussian Infantry, commanded by Col. von Beteur. Lieut. Baron von Forstner, the most notorious of the officers, had provoked several clashes between the soldiers and the citizens, and ordered the soldiers to bayonet any one insulting the German flag. He, himself, sabered a crippled shoemaker, which raised a great storm. He was tried and sentenced to 43 days' imprisonment, although his conduct was strongly defended by von Reuter. Both von Forstner and von Reuter were reported killed in Belgium early in the war.

Two Letters.

The letters i e are an abbreviation of the Latin phrase "id est," meaning "that is., and the letters e g an abbrevation of another Latin phrase "exempli gratia," having the meaning of "for the sake of example" and "for instance." Vs is an abbreviation of the Latin word versus, meaning "against." Vice versa is a phrase meaning "the order or relation of terms being reversed."

Mining Plumbago.

Plumbago, Ceylon's most important mineral product, is known all over the world for its lustre, lubricating, polishing, and binding qualities. In appearance it is a strong black crystalline. There are now about one thousand plumbago mines in Ceylon, including all the shallow pits, open works, and deep mines. The depth varies from a few yards to as much as seven hundred feet. Most of the mines are worked by natives, the only important one controlled by Europeans being the meda pola. At the majority of the mines the only machinery used is the "Ada bare." This consists of a long wooden barrel with handles at each end. Round this a rope is given two or three turns and a bucket fastened to each end. It is worked by seven or eight men turning the handle.—Family Herald.

Preferred "Motorhouse."

In England during the early days of motor vehicles, there was a decided preference for the name "motorhouse" rather than "garage."

THEATRICAL

VIOLA PLAYS REAL MUSIC IN THE FIDDLER GIRL

Viola Dana, who plays a fiddler girl in "False Evidence," her latest Metro release, to be seen at the Grand Theatre tonight, tomorrow and Saturday, did not give an intimation when she was called upon to show some "action" of a girl with a violin. Instead she gave her fellow artists an unexpected treat by playing classical as well as poppular airs during the entire action of the scene.

Miss Dana, besides being a star of the stage and screen is also noted for her remarkable talent as a dancer. In adding music to her list she embraces nearly all branches of the arts.

VIOLA DANA GOES TO SANTA CRUZ FOR PLAY

Viola Dana, the winsome little Metro star who will be seen in the role of Madelon in "False Evidence," the feature to be shown at the Grand Opera House, tonight, Friday and Saturday, took a trip to the island of Santa Cruz to "shoot" some scenes for the play.

These pictures show the beautiful semi-tropic island which is one of the garden spots of the Pacific Ocean and which has been called an "earthly Paradise" by those who have visited it. Added to these scenes of beauty will be others of regal grandure showing the mighty redwoods of California. To film the big trees the company went on a two week trip into the heart of the redwood country and camped out like woodsmen, for the primitive village near whic hthey were situated had no accommodation to offer the players. Miss Dana voted it one of the most enjoyable experiences of her long picture career.

YOUR TWO SELVES.

One of Them Is Active, the Other Passive.

There are two of you.

It is an old story. Philosophers have often discussed it. You yourself have come at times to at least a half-realization of the fact.

Each human being is, in a sense, twins. He has a "double," contained within himself.

But the two of you, that are both yourself, are not alike. On the contrary, they are very different.

The notion used to be that these twin cities in a single human individual were respectively good and bad—that one of them was virtuously inclined, while the other had evil propensities. This idea is vividly expressed in Stevenson's story of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

It is a mistake. Psychologists have proved it an error. You can prove it to yourself by observation.

The truth is that one of you—one of your two personalities — does things, while the other stands by and watches.

The latter takes no active part whatever in your doings. On the other hand, it is not content with merely watching. It is a vigorous and severe critic, sometimes approving, often disapproving what you do.

You are fully conscious of the criticism, but frequently you disregard it when it is unfavorable. You may go ahead and do a thing even though warned by your second and judicial self that it is unwise or wrong.

Why? Apparently because your self that acts is less wise, or less moral, than your other self that looks on and criticizes.

Take a simple case. You smoke too much. The doctor's advice is not needed to acquaint you with that fact. Every time you light a cigar (or it may be a cigarette) beyond your safe allowance, that second self of yours says, "Don't do it!" You know that the advice is wise, but you won't take it.

Your second self has no vices. It frankly disapproves of whatever does you harm.

It always exercises a certain amount of influence over your doings; but this influence becomes less and less in proportion to the extent to which you ignore the advice and criticism of your second self. The latter in extreme instances may lose influence altogether. One is tempted to think that in the case of an habitual criminal it ceases entirely to advise or criticize. To do either has become hopeless.

As a matter of speculation, one is interested to reflect that conceivably the second self of a person hopelessly depraved may be discreet and highly virtuous. It looks on, but can do nothing. With action it has nothing to do.

Your second self is prompt enough to express contempt for you when you have done wrong. You feel, and are sorry to feel, that you have lost in some measure its respect.

It is precisely this that is meant when it is said of a person that he has "lost his self-respect."

When your second self reproaches you with moral delinquency, you call it your "conscience." A grievous foe to happiness is a recognition of the justice of such a reproach. It has driven many a person into the insane asylum.

WILL DRAMATIZE RELIGION.

English Clergyman Makes Very Startling Proposal.

An English clergyman is in the field with the slightly startling proposition of establishing a theatre in London exclusively for the Christian Church.

His idea is that the message now being given from the pulpit can be amplified and strengthened by means of dramatic representations, and that a theatre controlled by the church and presenting only uplifting and beneficial productions will prove a potent factor in the uplift for which all good men and women are hoping.

It is an interesting proposition, and one which, no doubt, will evoke a considerable amount of discussion. A good share of the discussion will be acrimonious, unless we miss our guess.

The stage was an instrument of the early church to impress religious truths or dogmas on the unlettered populace. The ancient mystery and morality plays performed a certain function in the religious education of the people and even the better educated classes derived intellectual refreshment and spiritual stimulation from them.

But to-day, in a more complex period of life, one is constrained to doubt whether a theatre conducted under ecclesiastical auspices and devoted frankly to religious and ethical uplift would prove the success which the good English vicar expects.

The English cleric believes that the people want the best and most uplifting things in the drama, and that the tawdry trash, the risque and sometimes frankly indecent productions which are offered in the theatres from time to time are an insult to their intelligence, which they resent.

To this the answer is that these plays are almost always successful from the standpoint of patronage. If the people did not want them they would not go to see them. And the managers, being astute business men, would speedily abandon such offerings.

The average sinner does not want to be preached to, even in church, very much. Which is the reason why so few of the average sinners attend church nowadays, and for the popularity of Sunday golf. And they will be likely to be much more chary of attending a church theatre, where they may justly apprehend they will be given preachments designed as entertainments.

On the whole, the general public, while many of them may be heartily in sympathy with a clergyman's idea of utilizing the undoubtedly great influence of the stage in the direction of religious development, will be inclined to feel that the experiment is foredoomed to failure.

And some of them will suggest that the clergymen who are getting down to brass tacks in their work, who are preaching the fundamental truths of life and religion, and who are gifted with the ability to present these truths so as to grip the minds and hearts of their hearers, do not require actors or theatres to help them in their work.

The theatre has one field of usefulness, and it is doing much good in that field, regardless of the more or less frequent occurrence of vicious and immoral productions. It could do much more, perhaps. And the church has its field of usefulness, which is susceptible of much wider development outside the ruts into which many of its leaders have slipped.

Mixing the two, however, will hardly appeal to the average man or woman, and it is the average man or woman to whom the proponents of any such plan must look for its success.

Great Alexanders.

Alexander Bell was the great American who invented the telephone, which is still called the Bell telephone; and Alexander Humboldt was a German traveler, statesman and the most distinguished naturalist of all times. One of his most important discoveries was the decrease in intensity of the earth's magnetic force from the pole to the equator. His most important book, "Kosmos," was written in his seventy-fifth year. He did much in his long life to further the science of the world.

Important Rivers.

Just as Egypt has been made by the Nile, so Mesopotamia has been made by the Tigris and the Euphrates. The view put forward with some authority that the rivers should be kept exclusively for irrigation and not be depended upon for transport is challenged on many grounds, one of which is that irrigation and navigation can be effectively combined, and indeed made mutually advantageous for many years to come.

COBOURG'S GREAT. HORSE SHOW

AUGUST 19-23, 1919

Besides the many attractive features of Canada's most popular Horse Show, the directors have pleasure in announcing that they have secured the 48th Highlanders' Band for the week.

ROYAL CANADIAN DRAGOONS

HIGH JUMPING AND TWO OR THREE EXCITING RACES EACH DAY

The Directors have arranged for Polo Matches each afternoon

This is also the week when all Soldiers who enlisted with Cobourg Garrison Artillery, 139th, 235th, etc., are being invited to revisit their old comrades at Cobourg. They will be the guests of the Town of Cobourg and of the Horse Show.

EACH NIGHT A FAMOUS BRITISH MILITARY TATTOO

will be held, in which the War Veterans' Association and Cobourg Artillery, assisted by hundreds of returned soldiers and by the 48th Highlanders and Cobourg Bands, will participate. The Dragoons will also take part.

If you are a lover of the Clyde, Percheron, Hackney Thoroughbred, High Stepper. If you are a lover of Steeplechase, Across Country Horse Racing.

If you are a lover of High Jumping (the world's record was made at the Cobourg Horse Show by Confidence, ridden by Jack Hamilton, 7 feet 10⅜ inches.

If you have or have not seen the Royal Canadian Dragoons in their Musical Ride and other military sports

If you wish to witness the British Military Tattoo each evening.

If you are a lover of good Music,

Then plan to see the Horse Show, which this year will eclipse its own wonderful record.

But far and above all, every effort is being put forth to secure the honor of a visit from

HIS R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES

during the Show

All these events promise to make the Cobourg Horse Show more attractive than ever. The charge for autos will be 25c, including parking

GOD SAVE THE KING AND THE PRINCE OF WALES.

FALL WHEAT GOOD AVERAGE YIELD

The following is a summary of reports made by agricultural representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

The harvesting of spring grains has been active during the week, and in some localities the crops of both barley and oats are already in the barn, while in other quarters oat-cutting is just begun. As a rule all spring grains are light in yield, with short straw, as the season was too hot and dry for best results. Early sown fields have done the best; those put in later have been more affected by rust, more especially in the eastern part of the Province. Grasshoppers in Essex have done injury to oats, and have also been stripping the leaves of sugar beets.

Beans are ripening very fast, and will be rather light in yield.

Essex reports that tobacco is late in growth, but the crop has been helped by local rains.

Corn will be later in yield than was expected earlier in the season. Frontenac estimates the local yield for the silo at about 60 per cent. of the normal.

Spring seeding of clover is turning out poorly. The second growth of both clover and alfalfa are light, generally speaking, but in Victoria alsike has yielded up to seven bushels of seed per acre.

The increase in the crop of tree fruits during the past week or ten days is giving much concern to orchardists. Peaches and apples have suffered most. On the other hand, Kenora reports that while 18 cars of blueberries were shipped from of blueberries were shipped from that district last year, this year the crop has been one-third better.

Pastures are not very satisfying at present, and cows have fallen off in milk to a marked extent. In some cases the grass has been supplemented by green corn grown for ensilage. Elgin reports the shipment of some heavy cattle, but the marketing of beef is generally slow.

Hogs are keeping up in value sales being reported as high as $24 per cwt.

Plowing and general cultivation is difficult on account of the ground being so hard and dry.

GOOD SHOWING OF POULTRY

Regular Meeting of the Peterborough Poultry Association.

At the regular meeting of the Poultry Association Wednesday evening there was a very good exhibit of young birds, including Buff Leghorns, White Wyandottes and Rhode Island Reds, brought by Mr. Meagher, which will be seen again at the Peterborough Fair next month.

A letter was read from Mr. Barnes, Ontario representative of the National Poultry Council, announcing that the Government had sanctioned the plans for laying tests and contests, and for the establishment of a Record of Performance for poultry similar to those for dairy cattle.

Poultrymen who have the facilities for transporting and who satisfy the demands of the government inspectors, may have birds registered, and will thus secure the benefit of their extra work and attention. The secretary of the local association expects to receive entry forms soon and will be glad to hand them out to anybody desiring to make an entry.

COMMERCE BOARD AT WORK ALREADY

Organization Is Completed With Judge Robson, of Winnipeg, as Chairman.

CALLS IT THE PEOPLE'S COURT

Any Citizen With a Grievance Is Certain to be Given a Hearing Says Judge

Ottawa, August 14.—The Canadian board of commerce has been officially constituted, with Judge Robson of Winnipeg as chairman and W. F. O'Cononr, K.C., former cost of living commissioner, as second member, and these two gentlemen have had a conference with the government and have already started work.

Judge Robson has arrived in Ottawa and has met members of the government. The third member of the board, it is expected, will be named shortly.

The board will act under the Combines and Fair Prices Act, and is given power to institute investigations on its own motion or at the request of the Minister or other responsible persons bringing matters to the notice of the board.

When seen by the Canadian Press Judge Robson was emphatic in his statement that there would be no fuss or formalities attached to the working of this board. "This is to be a people's court," he declared, "and to be so it must be easy to approach. Any bona fide citizen who has a just cause for complaint will find us ready to give him a hearing, and we will get down to work just as soon as possible."

To Investigate Facts.

The chairman of the new board stated, however, that the board would of necessity investigate the facts behind a complaint before sitting at any point. This was necessary, he stated, because the board has jurisdiction from coast to coast, and a complaint might take them from Halifax to Vancouver on a wild goose chase, if it were only made because of some one's theory.

The two members of the new body had a long conference and will be together most of the time during the next few days drawing up simple rules of procedure and getting together the necessary small staff and office organization for their work. Judge Robson expects to return to Winnipeg within a short time to finish his work as chairman of the royal commission investigating the recent strike disorders there, but will be back in Ottawa again within a very short time.

SWIMMING EVENT WAS ILLUMINATING

Y.W.C.A. YOUNG LADIES GIVE A MARVELOUS EXHIBIT IN WATER.

The swimmin exhibition last night, at the Y.W.C.A. swimming pool was a very interesting and entertaining event. About thirty pupils, ranging in age from 6 years up took part in the different contests and the competition was very keen. One special feature of the evening was the exhibit given by the Life Saving Class, which proved to be both educating and fun making, holding the close attention of the audience for the space of half an hour. The exhibit of fancy diving by Misses Jessie Cressman and Phyllis Young is worthy of special mention. These young ladies certainly proved their ability as competent mermaids and their clever feats added much to the pleasure of this occasion.

An exhibition of swimming by two of the youngest pupils of the classes was given by Mollie Wood and Mary Denne, respectively 6 and 8 years old. This not only speaks well for the athletic future of these pupils, but reflects credit on their instructor.

The Life Saving Pupils expressed their grateful appreciation to their instructor, Miss Littlefield, in a very unique and pleasing manner, by placing a large bouquet of American beauty roses on a life-buoy, to which was attached a cord which drew the bouquet over the water of the pool to the feet of the instructor.

MONARCHISTS ARE ACTIVE.

London, August 14.—A Bolshevik wireless message received here asserts that after a meeting of Russian monarchists in Siberia, the Russian throne was offered to the Duke of Romanowsky, a member of the cadet, or younger, branch of the Romanoff family, headed by former Emperor Nicholas. The despatch adds that the duke accepted the offer.

PRESIDENT TO VETO DAYLIGHT SAVING

Washington, Aug. 14.—President Wilson will veto the new daylight-saving repeal bill, it is stated authoritatively.

This will make it necessary, if daylight-saving is to be abandoned, for the House and the Senate to pass the measure over the President's veto by a two-thirds majority.

It is regarded as doubtful if this can be done, since his veto of the daylight-saving repeal, which was included in the Agricultural Appropriation Bill, was sustained when the second vote was taken in the House of Representatives.

It All Depends.

Ottawa, Aug. 14.—The continuance of daylight-saving in Canada depends largely upon action in the United States because of the necessity of having uniform railway time tables. If the repeal bill at Washington is vetoed and the veto stands Canada will still have daylight-saving.

RECALLED TO POLITICAL LIFE

Stratford, August 14.—North Middlesex Conservatives at Ailsa Craig selected George Elliott as their candidate for the legislature. Mr. Elliott represented West Middlesex in the House of Commons from 1911 until 1917, when he was defeated because he favored conscription.

In acknowledging the nomination Mr. Elliott announced that he has no apology to make for his stand in 1917.

Amsterdam, Aug. 14.—Roumanian troops are about to leave Budapest, in consequence of the note sent to Roumania by the Peace Conference, according to a wireless despatch received here.

PRESIDENT SENDS SYMPATHY

Mrs. Canegie Gets Message of Condolence.

Washington, Aug. 14. President Wilson sent the following message of condolence to Mrs. Andrew Carnegie:

"May I not express my deep sympathy at the loss of your distinguished husband?" the message said. "His death constitutes a very serious loss to the forces of humanity and enlightened public service, and takes out of the world a force which it could ill afford to spare."

BURY TELEGRAPH WIRES

That is congested areas of large urban centres telegraph wires should be put under ground is the opinion expressed in a judgment handed down by the railway board.

The judgment deals with the application of the city of Montreal for an order directing the C.P.R. and G.N.W. Telegraph Companies to place the lines and wires under ground on certain streets.

The First Gas Respirator.

The first apparatus to enable persons to enter a noxious inflammable atmosphere was called an "aerophore" and was the invention of M. Denayrouse, a French inventor and scientist. It was first tested at Chatham, England, 44 years ago, and was reported successful. Vast improvements on this device, which comprised an air-pump, lamp and flexible tubing, have since been made and these have saved the lives of hundreds in mine accidents and other disasters where rescue work would be impossible without their use.

The World Is Cheerful.

Doctor Johnson's old shoolmate said that he could not be a philosopher because "cheerfulness was always breaking in." Our world of mankind cannot be that kind of a philosopher, either for the same reason. It may have its moods and depressions, or prove to the utmost the reasonableness of despair; but there is an inexhaustible well-spring of vigor within it, and vigor is another word for joy.—From the Unpopular Review.

Sleep and the Brain.

It used to be thought that sleep happened because the circulation of blood through the brain grew so feeble that this, the seat of consciousness, could work no longer and sleep took place. Many years ago a surgeon studying the subject watched the failing circulation of the brain through a hole in the skull of a sleeping animal. Yet this is only effect, not cause. The brain has less blood because it sleeps; it does not sleep because it has less blood.

Dark Ages.

The term is applied to a portion of the Middle Ages, including the period of about 1,000 years from the fall of Rome to revival of letters in the fifteenth century. It is generally regarded as beginning with invasion of France by Clovis, 486 A. D., and closing with invasion of Naples by Charles VIII in 1495. Learning was at a low ebb during this period.

Time Is Money.

In Korea, both among prosperous Christians and among those to whom money is a hasty and infrequent visitor, a favorite subscription blank is one which says: "I promise to give ___ days to church work this year." The days thus given are devoted to evangelistic services or to the building of churches and schools.—World Outlook.

LADIES SPECIALLY INVITED

FAMOUS GRENADIER BAND TO GIVE A CONCERT AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE

Manager Dahn Has Billed This Attraction For Friday Evening, August 22nd,—Only One of Its Kind in Ontario—Civic Reception Planned.

It's an ill wind that blows no good:

As a result of the strikes at Liverpool, music lovers will have an opportunity of listening to the band of the Grenadier Guards. The Guards, who by consent of His Majesty King George, were engaged to play at the Canadian National Exhibition this year arranged to sail from England about August 12th. The labor difficulties intervened, however, and they were compelled to leave much earlier and as a result arrangements have been made whereby they will be able to give a special concert at the Grand Opera House on Friday evening, August 22nd, before being heard in Toronto.

The Guards Band is the most famous of all British military musical organizations and their services have been in great demand for the victory celebrations all over England and the Allied countries. They have a splendid war record, having spent a solid year in France in the thickest of the fray, frequently leading the brigade of guards into the battle area; at other times giving their best to lighten the burden of the men doing the actual fighting. The Guards will be led by Lt. Dr. Williams, senior bandmaster of the brigade of Guards Bands, who was also the conductor when they made their last visit to Canada in 1910.

This famous Band is already on the ocean and will arrive in Halifax within the next few days. They will give a concert in that city before leaving for Toronto. Their visit to Peterborough will not only be a treat to local music lovers but will afford the members of the Band a welcome relief by furnishing a break in a long journey. It was like the enterprise of Manager Dahn of the Grand Opera House to secure this attraction for Peterborough, as the concert in this city will be the only affair of the kind staged in Ontario. From Peterborough the band will proceed to Toronto to take part in the ceremonies when the Prince of Wales opens the exhibition on Monday, August 25th.

The Band's only former appearance in Canada was in 1910 when they took part in the opening of the Toronto Fair. On that occasion they were accompanied by Lord De Trafford and Lord Charles Beresford, the

After this engagement in Toronto the band will pay a brief visit to the United States where five concerts will be given at Buffalo, Detroit, Chicago, and Philadelphia.

The members of the Board of Trade the City Council and the G.W.V.A. will be asked to arrange a civic reception in honor of the distinguished visitors.

MOOSE HITTING OVER .300.

It is interesting to learn that five members of the Moose team, champions of the Western City League, Toronto, and who played here recently, are hitting over the .300 mark. Considering this, Kirn did excellent work in holding this hard-hitting squad to nine hits, many of which were of the scratch variety. Those of the team hitting over .300 are: Burt, .385; Belleghem, .378; Eagleson, .369; Donahue, .333, and Walker, .302. All these players took part in the game against the local team.

What Bradstreets Says :---

"Bradstreets" has been looking into the interesting subject of the relation existing between business failures and the advertising world. It has gathered statistics indicating the proportion of failures among business men who advertise, and it has discovered the highly significant fact that 84 per cent. of all failures are among "non-advertisers."

If any proof were needed of the truth of the old axiom that "it pays to advertise," here it is upon the very best authority. It is needless to draw a moral from the tale, because the moral is self-evident. It is worthy of remark, however, that "Bradstreets" speaks with an authority with no selfish motive, not being interested itself in the advertising business. It neither advertises itself in the ordinary sense nor does it deal in advertising in a general sense. It is simply an expert on finance and trade, interested only in discovering the truth relative to the value of advertising.

With only 16 per cent. of our business failures among advertisers and 84 per cent. among those who do not advertise, the average Peterborough business man should not be long in determining his policy.

SIR ALFRED SMITHERS HONORED

His Majesty the King has conferred the honor of Knighthood upon Mr. Alfred W. Smithers, chairman of the board of directors of the Grand Trunk System.

Sir Alfred is at present in Canada in connection with business pertaining to the Grand Trunk, and will make his official inspection of the road during the next few weeks. He has been intimately associated with the activities of the pioneer Canadian line for the past twenty-five years, having been elected a director of the company in 1895, and chairman of the board in 1909. A member of the London Stock Exchange for a period of nearly forty years, and chairman of the English Association of American Share and Bond Holders, Sir Alfred has been actively associated with Canada's interests overseas, and has visited the Dominion practically every year. Sir Alfred is a member of the British House of Commons, representing the Chislehurst Division of Kent.

HASTINGS

(Special Correspondence.)

Hastings, August 14 — Quite a large representation from Hastings attended the camp meeting Sunday afternoon and evening. The preacher at both services was Dr. Emery of Toronto, who delighted the large audience with his plain and forcible presentation of the Gospel. Rev. Mr. Sharpe, evangelist, took charge of the song service, and under his able direction the tabernacle was filled with the sweetest of music. The meetings will continue until the 24th of the month.

Mr and Mrs. Jack Wilson of Toronto have moved their household effects to Hastings and are settling in the apartments over the Union Bank recently vacated by Mr. and Mrs. J. Thomson. Mr Wilson purposes starting in the grocery business here.

The committee in charge of the Methodist Sunday school excursion have completed arrangements for the event to take place on Wednesday, August 20, to Hiawatha.

The I. O. D. E. of Warkworth held an excursion to Peterborough last week per steamer Stoney Lake, which was well attended.

Miss Helen Baker of Warkworth has been visiting Hastings friends.

The water has been drained from the race to permit of work in the interests of the Tanning Co.

Mr. Howard Firman of Campbellford spent a few days with friends in town.

Miss Black of Castleton has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Ghent.

The Hastings Star office is closed for the summer vacation, and the editor is holidaying out of town.

Miss Ivey Shorter of Toronto is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. V. German.

Sad Drowning.

The sad intelligence has come to hand of the death by drowning of Mr. Earl Varcoe, who had recently returned from overseas and had just gone to the West with a friend. His many friends here regret very much to learn of the disaster and extend deepest sympathy to the sorrowing parents, who reside in Campbellford.

Big Storm.

This vicinity was visited during the past week with an electrical storm and a refreshing shower. No damage is reported.

Narrow Escape.

An accident which might easily have proved fatal occurred to Master Louie Lambert on Friday last, when the bicycle on which he was riding in some manner shunted into a spirited team of horses on Front street opposite Hess' garage. The boy was kicked by the horses and a wheel of the wagon passed over his body. The lad was picked up by some one near by and hastily driven to the office of Dr. De La Mater, who attended to his injuries. It is hoped that nothing serious may result.

Ladies' Aid Meet.

The Ladies' Aid of the Methodist Church met on Thursday last at the home of Mrs. C. E. Jones. After the usual routine of business was discussed and disposed of a dainty lunch was served by the hostess and a pleasant social evening spent.

"MORE GOOD THAN ALL OF THE REST"

"You may know that Tanlac is doing me a lot of good or I wouldn't have come nearly twenty miles to get these bottles I am buying now," said Samuel Baon, a well known and prosperous farmer who lives at Boring, Oregon, while in the Owl Drug Store in Portland the other day.

"I have been trying for twenty-five long years to find a medicine or treatment that would overcome my troubles," he continued, "and Tanlac is the only thing that has ever done me any good at all. During all these years I suffered terribly from rheumatism in my back, and there were times when I was in such bad condition that I couldn't turn over in bed, and after sitting down for a little while I could hardly get up again. My kidneys bothered me a great deal, too, and I would often have to get up four or five times during the night and the pains in my back were so severe that I rarely ever got any sleep. My appetite was very poor, and what little I did force myself to eat would give me indigestion in the worst way. I lost a lot in weight and finally got so weak and run down that I could hardly walk or stand on my feet.

"Then I heard about Tanlac through my daughter, who had been greatly benefited by taking it. In fact, she was so pleased with Tanlac that she bought me a bottle of it and told me that she thought it was the very thing I needed. Well, sir, I began to feel stronger and better in every way before I had finished that first bottle. I have taken three bottles so far, and I eat so much that I actually get ashamed of myself sometimes. What I eat agrees with me, too, and I never have a sign of indigestion now. I have gained fifteen pounds in weight, and feel like a different man altogether. The pains have left my back, and my kidneys seem to be in first-class condition, and I never have to get up during the night any more. I am also free from rheumatism, and in fact I feel better in every way than I have for many years. I tell you this Tanlac is a good medicine, and has done me more good than all the rest of the medicine put together I have taken during the last twenty-five years, and I think that is saying a good deal."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd., in Havelock by A. C. Denike, in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd., in Fowler's Corners by W. A. Hunter, in Gelert by A. J. Scott, in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

OFFERED VETERAN $1.50 A DAY

Not By Pirvate Employer but By the Government Itself.

Windsor, August 14. — Sergeant Frederick Deneau, for twenty years a member of the 21st Essex Regiment, with four years of service in France to his credit, has returned home to find the government position he left to serve his country is not available to him at a living wage. Sergt. Deneau was formerly assistant caretaker of Windsor armories, a post he held for five years previous to the war. He was given a chance to return at $1.50 a day, but declined the government's offer.

Not a Complete Success.

Edward was a timid boy. He tried hard to overcome his timidity, but with little success. One day his father came home and brought him an Indian suit. After Edward had it on his father told him that he would be brave now, for Indians always were. Edward went out in the front yard to show it to a neighbor playmate when the big collie dog from across the street came bounding across. The "Indian" came rushing up on the front porch, crying, and sobbed out: "Take the suit back; it don't work on me."

Worthy Mate of Great Writer.

James Russell Lowell's first wife, Maria White Lowell, was also a poet. A small collection of her verses, printed privately by Lowell in 1855, two years after her death, is now almost forgotten. One copy of it is preserved in the archives of the New York public library. She was the daughter of a farmer in Watertown, Mass. In letters to a friend, when Lowell was first getting acquainted with Maria, he said: "She knows more poetry than anyone I know."

The Candle in History.

The cult of the candle plays a large role in Roman, Jewish and Eastern ecclesiastical history; and many are the customs that have their birth in some magical or ritualistic use to which the candle has been put. In some parts of Ireland, for instance, it was usual on Christmas eve to burn a large candle which no one was permitted to snuff except those who bore the name of Mary.

MILLBROOK

(Special to The Review.)

Rev. Dr. Jameson, of Detroit, who is to preach in Grace Church next Sunday morning and at St. Emoch's Church, Garden Hill, had the misfortune to lose two sons in the war, both being drowned in the river Jordon. The people in this community join in extending sincere sympathy to him in his great loss.

Mr. Wm. Pudsey has made alsike clover growing a success, having received over $600 for his yield off a little better than four acres.

Mr. Jas. Leitch, of Toronto, called on Millbrook friends last week and attended the big celebration on Monday.

The many friends of Mr. W. B. McCurick, G.C.B.A., who has been manager of Millbrook and Bethany branch of the Bank of Toronto, will regret to learn he has been called upon by the head office to move from Millbrook. Mr. McCurick has by his genial disposition won his way into the hearts of the people of this district. The Millboork Bowling Club, of which he has been the president, will lose a splendid official and good player. We all join in wishing Mr. and Mrs. McCurick and son, Master Bryce, continued happiness and prosperity wherever they may go.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

TRY GRANDMOTHER'S OLD FAVORITE RECIPE OF SAGE TEA AND SULPHUR

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the additions of other ingredients, at a small cost.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

A young man sixteen years of age took out a 15 years Endowment (No. 210380) in the Sun Life of Canada, which matured on the first of April. This young man paid annually $66.30 for fifteen years and he now has, through that investment, an immediate estate of $3495.00 in case of death.

DO YOU KNOW THAT THIS AMOUNTS TO ALMOST 15 PER CENT COMPOUND INTEREST ON EVERY DOLLAR PAID?

No wonder Sir Wilfrid said—and he might have added (no better place than the Sun Life of Canada)—"there is no better way to invest it than in LIFE INSURANCE."

(Special Correspondance.)

Downeyville Aub. 14.—A very large crowd were present at our hall here on Monday evening where the drawing for the five valuable prizes took place. Rev. Father Galvin requested Mrs. Victor Perdue, of Detroit, to do the drawing. The first prize, a set of dishes, was won by Gerald O'Neil, King's Wharf; the second, a barrel of flour, was won by Mr. Albert Lucas; the third, a fancy cushion, was won by Mr. Peter Galvin, Ennismore; the fourth, a fancy centre piece, won by Miss Adrian O'Neil, and the fifth, which was $3.00 in gold, was won by Mr. Edward Costello.

Two valuable prizes were offered to the gentleman and lady for selling the most tickets. The first, a gold watch, was won by Miss Pearl Herlihy, and the second, a fancy hand satchel, was won by Mr. Francis Lucas. The others who sold tickets, Miss Gertrude Perdue, Fergus O'Neil, Aubrey and Zeta Crowley, all got valuable prizes. After presentations were over speeches were made by Rev. Fthers Rogers, O'Leary and Galvin and Mr. Martin Carroll. The younger folks spent the rest of the evening in dancing, and other amusements. During the dances the guests refreshed themselves at the booth which was run by Messrs. M. Dorgan, J. Clancy and Percy Lucas.

Mr. Percy Lucas was in Lindsay on Monday.

Miss Flossie O'Brien is visiting relatives here.

Mr. John Fox, of South Ops, was a Sunday visitor to Mr. Walter Carroll's.

The Village Stocks.

The curious old habit of punishing offenders by placing them in the public stocks seems very far in the shadowy past, yet a number of these old wooden machines may still be seen in England. Usually they stand, or they stood, on the village green, near the church; and it is not such a long while since stocks ceased to be used in the land.

Appropriate Look.

Robert had lost his little pet dog and felt bad about it. His father told him poor little Fido must be dead or he would return home. His mother sent him on an errand, when he met a woman friend of his mother's who asked him if he was ill, as he had little to say. "Oh, no," he said, "but my little dog is dead and I am wearing a black look."

Fats in the Body.

Fats in the body occur under the skin in the muscles and around certain organs. They act as a protection for the body against injury and serve as a stored supply of fuel, in case food cannot be taken. Fats are liquid in the body and are stored in albuminous cells.

Early American Statesman.

Alexander Hamilton, one of our greatest statesmen, was sometimes called "Alexander the Coppersmith," because of the copper cents he had made in 1793, when he was secretary of the treasury. These pennies were very unpopular with the people. He was killed in a duel by Aaron Burr.

Just a Little One, Maybe.

While to be sure we believe George Washington never told a lie we always will wonder how he got around it if Mrs. Washington ever asked him if he didn't think her new way of serving parsnips made them perfectly delicious?—Macon Telegraph.

Mr W. Ogilvie is spending a few weeks camping at Mt. Julian.

Mr. John Edwards, Halls' Bridge, formerly of Lakefield, has purchased the blacksmith business of Mr. J. B. Isbister. The new proprietor took possession last Thursday.

The Warsaw football team journeyed to Lakefield last Friday evening and played a friendly game with the local team. The game resulted in a tie, the score being 1-1.

THE WONDERFUL NILE.

An Ancient River That Has Many Contrasts.

The Nile is a river of contrasts no less than of harmonies. On one side, mud-banks and cultivation are opposed to precipitous cliffs which rise abruptly from the water's edge a thousand feet into the air. Every geological feature is plainly shown in their perpendicular sides, the regular stratifications being broken here and there by some earthquake "fault" or a rock-hewn tomb. Close in to the rocks lie boats, dwarfed into insignificance by the tremendous mass above them, while the blue-clad quarrymen, toiling laboriously, load them with their cargoes of dazzling white. Eagles soar about the cliffs and are lost to sight before the top is reached, and along the narrow strip of shingle beach a small boy and his black flock of goats scramble warily in search of pasture. The whole is repeated in the water—a mass of shimmering, glittering light.

In mid-stream bustling steamers and quick-sailing "glasses" steer their course between lazily drifting "tibbin" boats, while others again from Guargeh or Sohag, heavily laden with a pyramid of water-pots, lie athwart the stream which bears them slowly to their northern markets.

No less interesting are the mud-banks themselves, crowned with the fresh green of the young Indian corn crop. You will notice how each successive fall of the water cuts the steep sides into terraces, from the face of which slabs of alluvial mud constantly break off like basaltic rock, and are swept away in the stream. Each fresh terrace as it is formed is brought under cultivation by the industrious farmer, who plants on its narrow area, onions, beans, and other vegetables.

Between Luxor and Karnak is the well-known avenue of sphinxes. Behind it to the east is another, half hidden among the palm trees, leading to a pylon now in ruins. At its base, standing upon a pedestal of granite, is a foot, well sculptured and of colossal proportions. Not much in itself, perhaps, but how imposing must have been the figure of which nothing else now remains but the scattered fragments of stone which are piled high around its base. Similarly the enormous columns of the great hall, the lofty obelisks, and the towering masses of the pylons inspire in the beholder a feeling of reverential wonder at the greatness of the minds which thought on such a scale.

The dominant feeling with anyone who explores these ruins is the bigness of it all. Big, not only in its conception, but in the overcoming of seemingly insurmountable difficulties of construction. Sixty feet in the air the columns are supporting architraves formed of enormous blocks of stone, each weighing perhaps twenty or thirty tons, but so accurately adjusted to their position as to require no cement or metal ties. How was it done. And what difficulties must have surrounded the transport from Assuan, a hundred and forty miles away of the monolith which stands one hundred and five feet in height! It is wonderful, and I believe I am correct in stating that no solution of this problem of construction is to be found in either hieroglyphic or papyrus.

Cleaning Wallpaper.

To clean and polish wallpaper, add two tablespoonfuls of ammonia to half a pailful of water, and wash the walls down with a flannel dipped in this. Take half a pailful of water and add two tablespoonfuls of turpentine. Wash the walls a second time with this and wipe as dry as possible.

A Profitable Art Education.

John McAllister was an artist. Falling from grace, he became a convict in Sing Sing. When he tired of captivity, his art training enabled him to construct the most lifelike "dummy" in the history of prison escapes. He made a head, resembling his own, from soap, dough, putty, and odds and ends of hair, and a body from a pillow, straw and waste. Each time the guard looked into McAllister's cell he saw this life like figure on the bed, and said "All's well." Meanwhile the prisoner was making good his escape. This ruse has been tried many times in prison history—the most famous occasion, probably, being when Napoleon III. left a dummy in his prison cell at the Castle of Ham and went off to become Emperor of the French.

An Orderly Mind.

H. G. Wells' habits are as orderly as his mind. Imaginative plans are tabulated and arranged with as much precision as his account books. He once showed a fixture of pigeon-holes in his study; he indicated the contents of three of these pigeon-holes; they contained the manuscripts of his next three books neatly typewritten by Mr. Wells, each labelled with the year in which it was to appear,

Flying Crooks.

Undoubtedly one of the problems which Scotland Yard will have cope with in the near future will the pursuit of criminals through air.

Plans for the organization of corps of aerial trackers, with special Scotland Yard airdromes from which detectives could make an immediate start in pursuit of wrongdoers who sought to escape the clutches of the law through the air are already being carried out.

It may be some time before criminals include private airplanes among their equipment, but it will be comparatively easy matter for the swell cracksman and wealthy murderer to arrange for an escape by air.

Whether he will succeede depends on the aerial organization of Scotland Yard and the alertness of the customs and coastguards. Quick communication between the police and the latter may result in an easy capture.

As a member of the Criminal Investigation Department points out, although the air is wide the flying criminal has got to come down somewhere, and by wireless his description and that of his machine can be flashed over the world in a few minutes.

One method of stoppage and detection will be through the medium of a series of sound-detecting instruments along the coast, linked up by telephones with each other, and also with corps of aerial police. The noise of the machine will be detected, and if it does not land for inspection, as required by aerial navigation rules, it will be located and reported and a strict watch will be kept at all points.

Control of flying machines is being so organized that every machine entering Britain, for instance, will have to land for inspection.

The watch will be so strict that the possibility of evading the cordon of guards will be very slight. Other countries, in accordance with the suggestions of the Aerial Advisory Commission of the British Peace Delegation, are adopting similar plans for the control of air traffic. The chances of the flying criminal escaping justice, therefore, are not of the rosiest.

Pope's Poetry.

His poetry is not a mountain-tarn like that of Wordsworth; it is not in sympathy with the higher moods of the mind; yet it continues entertaining in spite of all changes of mode. It was a mirror in a drawing-room, but it gave back a faithful image of society, powdered and rouged, to be sure, and intent on trifles, yet still as human in its way as the heroes of Homer in theirs. —Lowell.

The Singing Mouse.

The singing mouse is not a distinct species. According to descriptions of the common house mouse, "Mus musculus," and of the American woodmouse, "Hesperomys leucopus," they have been known to acquire the trick or habit of warbling a few notes in a high key and with a shrill wiry timbre, vocalizing in a manner that might be called singing

The Lee Family.

The Lee family of which Gen Robert E. Lee, commander of the Confederate army during the Civil war, was a member, was of English origin. One of his ancestors emigrated to Virginia in the reign of Charles I. and the family was prominent then, during and after the Revolutionary war.—Columbus Dispatch.

Mineral Lake.

A lake near Biggar, Saskatchewan, has been found to be saturated with sodium sulphate, and the deposits under the lake and alongside the edge to be nearly 97 per cent pure sulphate. The mineral is used extensively in the manufacture of sulphuric acid, in photography and other industrial purposes.

Austria Now.

Austria is left by the peace treaty a state of about 6,000,000 of people inhabiting a territory of between fifty-thousand and sixty thousand square miles. She recognizes the complete independence of Hungary, with its population of over 50,000,000 and its area of 260,034 square miles.

A Booster.

"Is Bliggins a good booster for the town?"

"Yes. But he works the wrong way. He is one of these landlords who are always threatening to boost the rent."

MEAT VS. VEGETABLES

DOES FLESH-EATING MAKE MEN MORE BRUTAL.

Old Controversy Has Been Revived and Two New Champions State Some Interesting Facts — Vegetarians Are Good Fighters, and the Rhinoceros, Although Living on Herbage, Can Make the Lion Run.

HOW did our ancestors take to eating flesh food? Did one of them suddenly conclude to serve up one of his enemies for lunch after he had slain him in combat? Or did he take to eating meat from physiologic necessity, after the stock of wild vegetable proteins had failed him? And has his meat diet improved his abilities as a fighter? Here, apparently, vegetarians and flesh-eaters do not agree. The war just ended has certainly demonstrated that there is still in man much of the wild beast. Dr. Harry Campbell, a London physician, who believes both in fighting and in flesh-eating, seeks, in an article in the Lancet (London), to find an explanation for human savagery and ferocity in man's acquired carnivorous habits. He says:

It was the conditions entailed by a hunting career which brought about the evolution of the prehuman ape into man. For, observe the curious situation assuredly one of the most eventful and dramatic in the whole of man's evolution—when this creature took to hunting. Here was a being lacking the stereotyped equipment for slaughter, instinctive and anatomical of the carnivora, but with an intelligence surpassing that of any other creature, and endowed with prehensile hands capable of giving effect to that intelligence.

The fact that carnivorism makes for ferocity and develops the fighting instinct has this interest that man is himself carnivorous. Indeed, in the matter of slaughter he leaves all other animals far behind. He is the arch-slaughterer. Since the time the prehuman ape took to hunting he and his human descendants have wrought ruthless havoc among the lower animals, and at the present day man not only hunts them, but breeds them for the express purpose of destroying them, chiefly for food, partly for amusement. Many a person of gentle nature would be amazed and horrified were he at the end of a long life to see en masse the hecatombs of living things done to death on his behalf."

The editor of Good Health (Battle Creek, Mich.,) commends what he calls Dr. Campbell's frank admission that flesh-eating, with the slaughter-house and other cruelties which its involves, tends to foster and maintain in man the brutal qualities which are manifested in the barbarities and cruelties of war. But he regards the doctor as wholly at fault in thinking that flesh-eating and hunting were essential to the development of the aggressive spirit in man, or even the fighting spirit, for—

"Man did not have to leave the forest and his frugivorous diet and become a hunter and killer of animals in order to develop his brain. Primitive man sought the plain not to find animals—there were plenty of animals in the forest—but to find food, and as rapidly as possible developed the art of agriculture so as to secure to himself and his family a certain food supply.

"Man's resort to the use of flesh food was doubtless prompted by his instinctive search for complete proteins when the nut trees (largely nut-pines, probably) were killed off by change of climate or some cataclysmic event which destroyed an essential source of complete protein without which development and life could not be maintained.

"Among the fiercest fighters of the forest are animals which are not flesh-eaters, as, for example, the buffalo of our western plains and the bison of India. Dr. Sanderson, the great elephant-hunter, said he would far rather encounter a lion than a wounded bison.

"The rhinoceros, which lives on the coarsest herbage, is so fierce a fighter that the lion flees before him. The elephant, though timid, is no coward, and often gives up its life in resisting captivity.

"The gorilla has long been known as the fiercest beast of the forest. It will kill a hunter by a blow with a club, and will snap his gun-barrel with a grip of its hands, but it will not eat him.

"The vegetarian is a good fighter, but he does not torture. Cruelty is a trait peculiar to carnivorous animals. The cat often tortures the mouse for a long time before she kills and eats it.

"A certain species of wasp paralyzes a fat caterpillar and shuts it up in a cell with its eggs, to be devoured by its young, piecemeal, while still alive, and incapable of making a motion in defence.

"Certainly man had abundant opportunity to develop fighting qualities in defending himself against his enemies, which the testimony of the rocks shows to have been great and numerous enough to call forth his highest means of escape and protection.

"The gorilla uses his hands as man does. He has learned to fight with a club and uses stones as missiles. He is so skillful in the use of these weapons as to be more than a match for a man armed with the same weapons.

"The idea that man had to eat his enemy after killing him, to acquire a hankering for flesh and a thirst for blood in order to be a good fighter, is preposterous. The only mental quality man has acquired through the appetite for flesh is the disposition to slay in cold blood and not in self-defence or the heat of rage, to take life merely for pleasure, for sport—to take delight in cruelty."

PRINCE OF WALES' FEATHERS.

Badge Worn by Heir to the British Throne.

"What is the origin of the Prince of Wales' feathers?" asked young hopeful.

"Something to do with the Battle of Crecy, I think," chimed in father.

Of course the most natural thing to do was to look it up and find out what the authorities had to say about the matter. The authorities seem to differ slightly in their theories.

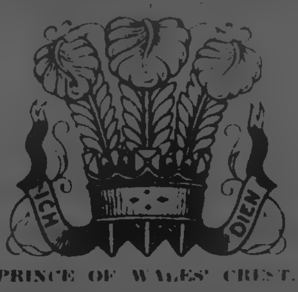
The three ostrich plumes are the badge of the Heir Apparent to the throne of England. The ostrich feathers must not be confused with the Coat of Arms of the Prince of Wales which is an entirely different insignia altogether.

The popular belief is that the ostrich feathers were won from Philip of Valois at the Battle of Crecy when the Black Prince so gallantly served his father Edward III and his country by defeating the French.

An authority on heraldry, Charles Boutell, maintains that there is no foundation for the belief that the feathers were won from King Philip of Valois. The theory, he says, is not supported by any contemporary. The first time the feathers are mentioned in any record is in a document which was dated A.D. 1369. The Battle of Crecy was fought in A.D. 1346.

In 1369 the three feathers were grouped together by Arthur Tudor, Prince of Wales, eldest son of Henry VII. The plumes appear to have been encircled for the first time with a coronet by Prince Edward who afterwards became King Edward VI, but who never really was Prince of Wales.

Edward III used the ostrich feathers as a badge with his shield of arms, and the feathers were also used by Queen Phillipia, his wife, as a heraldic device in 1370. The ostrich feathers appear on some, but not on all seals of the Black Prince and were omitted from some of his seals after the Battle of Crecy. The feathers were also used by all the other sons of Edward III., but each with some slight difference.



PRINCE OF WALES' CREST.

In his will the Black Prince expressed a wish that two armorial shields bearing the insignia of the feathers with the scroll and motto "Ich Dien," I serve, should be displayed in the procession immediately preceding his remains. "L'un pour la guerre de nos armes enteres quartelles," and the other for peace, "et l'autre pour la paix de nos bages des plumes d'ostruce." He further appointed in his will that his Chapel in Canterbury Cathedral should be adorned in various places with his Coat of Arms and likewise with the badge of Ostrich Feathers.

An old English poem written by Aleyn makes reference to the ostrich feathers in these lines:

"There lay the trophie of our chivalry
Plumed of his ostridge feathers, which the prince
Tooke as the ensign of his victory,
Which he did after weare and ever since
The Prince of Wales doth that achievement beare
Which Edward first did win by conquest there."

Randle Holme, another authority, deduces the three ostrich feathers from a totally different source. He asserts that they were the insignia of the Prince of Wales during the independence of Wales prior to the invasion of the English. After this event the eldest sons of the Kings of England as Princes of Wales continued the badge ensigned with a coronet with the motto "Ich Dien" to express the sentiment that although of paramount dignity in that country they still owed allegiance to the crown of England.

Richard II adopted the ostrich feathers and they were placed on either side of his crested helm in the heraldic sculpture of Westminster Hall. They were also placed on his Royal Seal and were habitually used for decoration and heraldic display. Richard II also granted them as a mark of especial favor to be borne as an augmentation of the highest honor to his cousin Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk.

Henry Stuart, eldest son of James I established the arrangement of the three ostrich feathers within a prince's coronet in place of the scroll. Ostrich feathers were also worn as a badge by all the sons of Henry IV, and by the Beauforts, and were held in high esteem by both the rival houses of York and Lancaster.

It is also recorded that the white ostrich feather with its pen golden is the King's; with the feathers entirely white, or silver, is the prince's; the feathers golden with its pen ermine is the Duke of Lancaster's, and the feather white having its pen Company is the Duke of Somerset's.

A Military Review.

When King George and Queen Mary, then the Duke and Duchess of York, visited Canada just after the Boer War, a military review of troops from all parts of the Dominion was arranged in Toronto. It was an impressive event, in spite of a dense fog, but in those days every Canadian family did not contain one or more soldiers, as is now the case.

CENTRALS DEFEAT KING EDWARDS

INTEREST AND EXCITEMENT RAN HIGH—SCORED OF 15 TO 5.

A baseball game in which interest and excitement ran high, was played yesterday at Central School playground between the Central boys and the boys of King Edward School playground, resulting in victory for the Centrals by a score of 15 to 5. In pitching Whitlow for Central team seemed to have the upper hand throughout the game, although Moore for King Edward showed remarkable control. When it came to hitting, Harrison and LeBarr did well for the winners, while McDonald, Killoran and Clarke handled the stick heroically for the losers. The King Edward boys put up a good fight to the end but showed lack of team work, and failed to "come back" in the final inning as they did in the previous game.

There was a large number of spectators at the game and at its conclusion volley ball, tether tennis, and a game of horseshoes were enjoyed. [illegible] schools were represented by junior baseball teams which staged a three-inning contest won by Central to the tune of 9 to 3.

GOLF FEATURE FOR WOMEN

Indianapolis Players to Compete for Championship of That City.

Indianapolis, Ind., Aug. 13.—A woman's golf tournament with the Indianapolis city championship at stake will be an innovation in state golf circles this fall. Arrangements are being made to have the tournament follow shortly after the city amateur tournament.

While some of the local golf clubs maintain women's departments and hold annual tournaments, the tourney this fall will be the first time the women of Indianapolis have had an opportunity to contest for a city title.

Play will be held over the South Grove course and probably will be for 18 holes, medal handicap.

Forty thousand Polish Jews have made application at Warsaw for permission to emigrate to America.

AMATEUR TRAPSHOOTING RECORDS ESTABLISHED

TROEH AND AUBURN BROKE THE ENTIRE 200 TARGETS THROWN.

Chicago, Aug. 14.—New records for the American amateur trapshooting championship and the professional championship of the Grand American Handicap Tournament were established yesterday when the winners in the respective events. Frank M. Troeh, Vancouver, Wash., and Bart Lewis, Auburn, Ill., broke the entire 200 targets thrown.

Never before in competition from eighteen yards had the entire programme been run without a miss. The best previous performance at 18 yards was by Troeh here two years ago when he won the event with 199 out of 200.

J. E. Jennings of Todmorden, Canada, was second to Troeh with 198. He ran 140 and then missed a pair, finishing out his string without a miss.

For the professionals, Charley Spencer, of St. Louis, Mo., and Fred. Gilbert, Spirit Lake, Iowa, each broke 198 targets with William Crosby, O'Fallen, Ill., next with 197.

Other Canadians who finished in the first flight in the South Shore Country Club event, with their scores are as follows:

Scores of Canadian shooters—J. E. Jennings, Todmorden, 198; J. Payne, Toronto, 179; J. Vance, Tilsonburg, 188; F. Kerr, Crediton, 193; S. G. Vance, Tilsonburg, 176; W. H. Hamilton, Winnipeg, 191.

OPEN SAILING RACE

Harold Knapman again won the open sailing race of the Stoney Lake regatta. His boat, the "Cygnet," with difficulty, won against the "Flirt," owned by Ediss. Only one entry was received for the dinghy race for the Senator Cox cup. This completes the events of the regatta.

CHEMONG REGATTA NEXT THURSDAY AFTERNOON

SPLENDID LIST OF EVENTS AND VALUABLE PRIBES — GOOD MUSIC FOR DANCE AT NIGHT.

The Chemong regatta, which was to be held this afternoon, has been postponed until Thursday, Aug. 21. Every effort is being made to make this the regatta of the season. The Chemong regatta has always been a popular one, and this year it promises to be bigger and brighter than ever.

Features of this event will be a championship sailing race over a 6-mile course for the Chemong championship cup; also an open sailing contest for a cup to be provided.

The regatta will include rowing, paddling, sailing, swimming and motor boat races. Races will be run off for boys, girls, men and women and a good list of prizes will be presented. There are also listed hurry scurry races and probably canoe tilting, both of which add greatly to the interest and excitement of a real acquatic day.

A large crowd is expected to come from Stoney and other lakes as well as a big half-holiday gathering from Peterborough.

In the evening the prizes will be given out and excellent music is being provided for the dance. Chemong regatta offer the last opportunity for Peterborough people to see water sports this season, so a very large number will take advantage of the excellent list of events.

GOOD LACROSSE GAMES SLATED

BRACEBRIDGE TO MEET WINNERS OF TORONTO DISTRICT.

Toronto, Aug. 14.—The Orillia players wanted to stage a game yesterday with Bracebridge, but the former management refused as the latter have won the district, in addition to which there were some old scores to settle and a dirty game would sure to have been the result. Had the game taken place it would have marred an otherwise fine season of lacrosse and left a bad impression for next season, when it is hoped the game will be flourishing.

Bracebridge, who have been playing consistent lacrosse all season will likely be stacked against either New Toronto or Weston, whoever are declared winners of the Toronto district. The boys from the North shape up as a fine team, with plenty of weight on the defence, speed in centre, and aggressiveness on the attack. Weston are not showing the pep of former days on the home end, but can condition themselves to sturdy defence. New Toronto have some youngsters from the junior ranks and lack experience, but are trying all the time. Manager Brown should have a good line-up for next season, even should he not land the silverware this year.

St. Mary's Meet Dufferins.

St. Mary's and Orangeville will come together on Friday and it looks as if the Blaney Maguire bunch will cop the first of the games, if not the semi-final. Orangeville have now practically their 1913 team intact, with Bert Brown, Brother Blythe and Stevenson working like well-oiled machinery on the attack, while their defence leaves nothing to be desired. St. Mary's have built a good team up around Billie Lavelle and though lacking experience in intermediate circles, will give a good account of themselves. Both these teams plays fast clean lacrosse all the while.

The handiwork of past president Percy Lancaster is to be seen in the group which has just been started between Norwood and Tweed. The winner will likely be sent against one of the western district winners. Percy Lancaster has done much for the game down east and his efforts this year are to be crowned with success. He deserves the thanks of the O.A.L.A., and which he already has from past performances.

President "Bill" Armstrong, of the Maitlands, is firmly convinced that his Veterans from France can take a fall out of Eddie Longfellow's touted champions next Saturday at Scarboro Beach. In 1913 Maitlands lost to the East-enders at the Island in the play-off. Will history repeat?

Baron Sonnino Not Reliable

NATURALLY one regrets to see so staunch a comrade as Premier Orlando have to fall out after the long, hard journey of the war and drop into private life or into opposition just at the moment when all his dreams are realised. Premier Orlando has played a straight game from the beginning and even with regard to Fiume and Dalmatia, when he found himself unable to see eye to eye with the other Allies, he sought diligently for a compromise, and that one was effected is due to him rather than to Baron Sonnino. Indeed, the latter is blamed in many quarters for the trouble that has befallen Orlando, and is suspected of having sought his personal glorification and political safety rather than a fair solution of the ticklish problems involved in the final settlement. He, too, has had to retire, and if his retirement is permanent there will be no profound regrets either in Italy or elsewhere. He has given much trouble to his associates in the past few months, and even before the war was viewed with distrust.

Sidney Sonnino was born in Egypt of an English mother and a father who was an Italian Jew converted to Protestantism. He was successful in business, a remarkable linguist and an astute politician, and has lasted in the Italian Cabinet for an unusually long time, having been Foreign Minister since the spring of 1914. Like many other clever men he was inclined to underestimate the abilities of his colleagues, and one of the reasons for his unpopularity was his habit for acting independently of all advice and then confronting his chief with a fact accomplished. Whether the influence of Germany at Rome had anything to do with keeping him in office is not certain, but there can be no question that Berlin did exercise unusual influence in Italy, although Austria was disliked, and even hated. Indeed, according to a writer in the New York Sun, it was a libellous offence to call an Italian an Austrian; and it is ancient history that Bismarck sought to keep both Italy and Austria on the verge of a quarrel so that Germany should have the credit of smoothing out differences, and increasing her own prestige as senior member of the Triple Alliance.

It is said to have been partly due to Sonnino's influence that Italy so long delayed her declaration of war upon Austria and did not declare war upon Germany until German divisions had actually been identified on the Isonzo front. It is known now that Germany did assist Italy when the latter made her negotiations with Austria to ensure Italian neutrality throughout the war, but this was less through regard for Italy than for herself. Hard as were the terms, Austria agreed to them, but no sooner had she done so than Sonnino put forth more extravagant demands, which neither Austria nor Germany could swallow. Then Sonnino hied him to London, where he found that Italy's continued neutrality was regarded as helpful to the Hun, so the Foreign Minister had definitely to declare himself. The bargain he made then on behalf of Italy is contained in the Treaty of London, which has given so much anxiety to the Peace Conference in the past few months.

However, a bargain is a bargain, and the British and French Governments were ready to carry out their promises to Italy had she insisted upon the exact fulfilment of all the terms. Orlando, it is said, was willing that modifications should be made in view of the newly constituted states that had been carved out of the Austrian Empire. Sonnino, on the other hand, remained obdurate, and took the ground that the internal condition of Italy was so bad, as a result of lack of raw materials and the high cost of living, that the only way the Government could survive the storm was to emerge from Paris with both arms full of spoils of war. Matters were at this critical stage when President Wilson issued his unfortunate appeal to the Italian people. Orlando could have done nothing less than he did, and he and Sonnino returned to Italy to find themselves the lions of the hour, a position most unusual for the Foreign Secretary. It is due largely to the advice of Francesco Nitti, formerly Secretary of the Treasury, and now Premier, that the Italian people saw how suicidal it would be for them to remain aloof from the ratification of the treaty, since their whole future depends upon the goodwill of the Allies.

It is now recalled, in estimating Sonnino's course, that on one occasion when Mr. Balfour was answering a question of foreign policy which had nothing to do with Italy, referred to the other allies and omitted mention of her. Sonnino interpreted this to mean that the Allies had decided to ignore the Treaty of London. The result was a flying visit to England, where he was rather smartly rebuffed for attributing bad faith to Great Britain. He is also suspected of having entered negotiations with Turkey before the end of the war in order to obtain concessions for Italy at the expense of the other Allies. It was Sonnino who caused the landing of Italian troops at various points in Asia Minor a short time ago, in the hope of accomplishing his favorite manoeuvre and confronting the Allies with the accomplished fact which they might acquiesce in rather than dispute. In this he failed and the troops had to be withdrawn. Whether his suddenly acquired popularity over the Fiume question will help him in the coming election will be known shortly, for a general election will be held in a few days.

A Parallel.

Not since the Middle Ages has there been such a popular Prince of Wales in England as the son of George V. People going back over history remember how the youthful Henry V was beloved by his subjects. Strangely enough it was also a war in France that gave him his opportunity to show his metal, but in those days the English were fighting against the French, instead of side by side with them. When one takes into consideration that Henry V lived in the days when the medieval idea of an autocratic king existed and the present Prince of Wales belongs to the most democratic royal household that the world has ever seen, there are many parallels between the two young men. Both won the love of their fellow-countrymen during the days of a great war; both were young and magnetic; both were fearless in the field and had the well-being of the nation at heart; and both of them accepted popularity in a straight-forward manly way.

To enable those unacquainted with any sign language to converse with deaf mutes a Frenchman has invented a device resembling a typewriter which raises letters to spell words as keys are pressed.

Military Searchlights.

The military searchlight has proved of enormous usefulness during the war for a great variety of purposes, and, as a result, it has undergone very important development.

There has appeared, as one product of its evolution, a portable electric searchlight, weighing only 143 pounds, which can easily be carried by a couple of men or by a mule. Provided with a powerful arclight, it throws, with the help of a bowl-shaped mirror of glass, a beam of brilliant intensity.

There is a tendency, however, to get rid of glass mirrors for war searchlights. They have two important disadvantages. One is that a chance bullet will put them out of commission; the other, that properly made glass reflectors cannot be quickly, or easily obtained. Nothing short of a first-class mirror-making plant is capable of turning them out.

Accordingly, since we entered the war, our army has taken to using reflectors which are simply shallow bowls of thin sheet iron plated on the inside with silver. They are not equal to mirrors, but they can be turned out quickly in indefinite numbers anywhere that silver plating is done. A rifle bullet will not break them, and they have the additional advantage of cheapness. Glass reflectors are very expensive.

The French during the war have been making trial of searchlight reflectors plated with gold, which, it is claimed, have greater brilliancy. They are most costly, of course, but do not require daily polishing.

NEVER SHIRKED DANGER.

Heir Apparent Took Active Part in Great War.

Twenty-five years ago the bells rang forth the news that the direct succession to the British throne was ensured by the birth of a little prince. The great-grandsons of Queen Victoria were already numerous, but none were English; and of all, perhaps the greatest destiny lay before this small babe. Until his birth it seemed possible that the throne of Britain might once more be occupied by a woman; for failing the birth of a son to our present King, the Princess Royal and then Princess Arthur of Connaught, at that time Lady Alexandra Duff, would succeed.

In spite of the good reign of Queen Victoria, her subjects rejoiced with her in the birth of a male heir, and with her watched with loving interest the growth of the future King-Emperor. Named after the Prince of Wales and the King of Denmark, he was then given those of the patron saints of the United Kingdom, Edward Albert Christian George Andrew Patrick David. As David he has always been known by his family and intimate friends. A curious coincidence that the name of our future King should also be borne by two of Britain's greatest men—Admiral Beatty and Mr. Lloyd George.

With his brothers and sister he lived a happy, secluded childhood, and when sent to Osborne as a naval cadet he was popular with all, not on account of his position, but as a natural, jolly, and kind-hearted boy. A great favorite of King Edward, the King's death was a very real sorrow to his young grandson, who after a short cruise at sea had to abandon his sailor's career to learn the ways of men, and study at Oxford the history and the law and the politics that were to help him in the years to come. Hunting and golf and rowing were not forgotten either, and friendships were being made with other undergraduates.

Imploring his father that he might stay longer at Oxford, sanction was hardly given when the great world war broke over Europe, and in a few days, while the fate of many lands and peoples lay in the balance, Britain found herself at war.

The prince was one of the first to "join up," and personally implored Lord Kitchener to send him out with the Expeditionary Force; but even King's sons must learn, and so soon as his training was complete, he was sent overseas to fight his country's foes.

Never shirking danger, he was often under fire. A fellow-officer told how once when carrying despatches the enemy barrage lay between him and his destination; the chauffeur, knowing the risk, refused to continue, so the prince, remarking that he anyway would fulfil his job, proceeded on foot. At another time he was only stopped by main force from quitting a dugout when heavily shelled.

The outbreak of war found him a shy and rather reserved boy of delicate physique; after five years he has emerged, though still extraordinarily boyish in appearance, yet with happy confidence and thought for others that many a man has found on active service. "There I found my manhood," as he said the other day, and there indeed this bronzed young warrior has in reality found not only his manhood, but himself, and the worth of men and things.

And returning full of the joy of life, yet having witnessed many of its sadder sides, he is filled with determination to be worthy when time shall call him to represent the greatest people in the world.

A busy young man this, as needs must be one who has so many interests—at one moment he is seated with his father learning the duties of state, the next maybe he greets some honored guest, receives soldiers or maybe sailors, followed, perhaps, by a city luncheon in his honor. One day he is visiting his lands in Wales or Cornwall, or talking with those that inhabit the worst slums of London—and, indeed, visiting these homes of ill-repute. Getting to know men and women of all ages and all classes, this unassuming lad, with the happy knack of putting everyone at his ease and of saying the right thing, has already won the hearts of all with whom he comes in contact. For recreation, polo, and tennis, flying, riding, and motoring, or rowing, are all enjoyed. With a deep affection for parents, sister and brothers, none even in these democratic days will do aught but wish him a long life and a happy one—and every Briton from his heart proclaims "God Bless the Prince of Wales."—P. F. S., in London Sphere.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

SLIGHT—FORSEY

The home of the bride's parents, 1325 Lansdowne avenue, Toronto, was the scene of a pretty wedding at half-past two o'clock yesterday afternoon when Bessie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Forsey, was married to Mr. Percy W. Slight, formerly of Peterboro. The bride looked charming in white georgette, tulle veil and orange blossoms, with a shower bouquet of white roses and sweet peas, and the groom's gift, a pearl and diamond bar pin. The bride entered the drawing-room with her father to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by her sister, Miss Eleanor Forsey, who wore a frock of green satin and white georgette. Miss Eva Sharpe as bridesmaid wore a frock of pale pink silk and black picture hat and carried sweetheart roses. Mr. Earle Johnston of Peterboro was the best man. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. E. Crossley Hunter. The drawing-room was prettily decorated with palms and tea roses.

The groom's gift to the bridesmaid was a pearl bar pin and to the best man gold cuff links. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs.. Slight left for Kawatha Lakes, the bride travelling in a navy blue suit with hat to match.

NICHOLS—BRISBANE

At 626 George St., Peterborough, on August 9th, by Rev. S. Crookshanks, Miss Gladys Brisbin and Wm. David Ross Nichols, both of Peterborough, were united in marriage. After a short wedding trip, the happy couple will take up their residence in the city. The young couple were unattended.

Mrs. Fred Brown, Stoney Lake, is spending the day in the city.

PETERBOROUGH CANDIDATES PASS LOWER SCHOOL EXAMS. TO NORMAL

Forty-Eight From This City Make the Steep Educational Grade—Six Who Failed in One Subject May Still Qualify.

The Peterborough candidates named below have passed the Lower School examination for entrance into the Normal Schools and Faculties of Education.

In addition to the above they require to pass the Middle School examination before they can be admitted to the Normal Schools, and the Upper School examination before they can be admitted to the Faculties of Education. Those who have already passed either of these examinations are reminded that the Normal Schools open on Tuesday, September 16th, at 9 a.m. and that application therefor must be made to the Deputy Minister of Education not later than Wednesday, August 20. Application should be made at an early date. If applicants will state clearly on the forms when and where they passed the Lower and Middle School examinations of entrance into Normal School, they need not delay mailing such applications on account of information concerning the Faculties of Education, applicants are referred to the registrar of the University of Toronto or of Queen's University, Kingston.

Answer Papers Re-Read.

The answer papers of each candidate whose marks would appear to justify an appeal have already been re-read by the appeal examiners. Where such a candidate has still failed, the statement will be stamped as re-read and no further appeal will be allowed. In all other cases made before September 1st, and accompanied by the fee of $2. If made after September 1st, the fee is $5. No appeal received after September 10th will be entertained.

Certificates and statements of marks obtained by unsuccessful candidates are in the course of preparation, and will be mailed in due course to the Principals, to whom all candidates are referred for further information.

The total number of successful candidates at the Lower School examination this year is 2,514, compared with 1,492 in 1918, an increase of 1,022 or 68.9 per cent.

This year 56.8 per cent. of those who wrote were successful, as against 44.3 per cent. last year

FORTUNES MADE IN WHISKEY

Diamonds and Valuable Furs Bartered for it in Russia.

London, Aug. 14.—Three silver fox skins, for which $2,500 has been refused in London, were obtained in Archangel for six bottles of whiskey by a British officer who has just returned from Northern Russia. Another officer traded a case of champagne for a diamond necklace, said to be worth thousands of dollars. Returning soldiers ~~say~~ any possession a native has may be obtained with intoxicants.

The hunter who parted with his fox skins had little pleasure out of the whiskey, however. Immediately on obtaining it he went into a room and drank it all. He was found in a serious condition, and required hospital treatment to save his life.

DIRECT STEAMER SERVICE VANCOUVER TO SIGNAPORE

Inaugurated by the Canadian Pacific Ocean Services Ltd.

The inauguration of a direct steamer service to Singapore by the Canadian Pacific Ocean Services Ltd., indicates that that company is reaching out with a bold initiative to develop between Canada and the farther East. It is equivalent to emphasizing that this country is now in a position to exchange Canadian products for the more tropical, but very necessary products of that far British colony of Singapore, and the countless islands tributary to it—such products for example as tea, hemp, rubber, etc. The service was begun by the C.P.O.S. steamer "Methven," which left Vancouver July 14th with a large argo for Singapore and the Federated Malay States, calling at intermediate ports, in Japan, China, and the Phillipines. The "Methven" is a cargo modern cargo ship of recent construction with a carrying capacity of ten thousand tons, and will maintain a regular service between Vancouver and Singapore. Not the least important part of this new service is that it will save trans-shipment at Hong Kong.

EASY FOR QUEBECKERS

Highest Fine for Draft Evaders is Only $100.

Montreal, Aug. 14.—Judge Leet had a busy day dealing with alleged draft evaders. No fewer than 90 were summoned before him, and of the 60 cases disposed of, six were found not guilty and the others guilty, with a fine ranging from $25 to $100. The total of the fines imposed in the day was exactly $1,515. The other 30 cases were postponed to the 15st instant.

OBITUARY

FIRST FORMAL RECEPTION TO THE PRINCE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Lands at St. John, N.B., Welcomed by Premier Borden and Governor-General of New Brunswick Province—Weather Not Very Auspicious.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

St. John, N.B., Aug. 15.—The cruiser "Dragoon" anchored in the harbor here at 9.30 with the Prince of Wales on board. The Governor-General immediately went out to the ship with greetings to the Prince. Landing has been deferred for an hour until eleven o'clock.

Cheering Crowds.

From the landing place to the armories where the Prince of Wales was given his first formal reception on Canadian soil, the route of His Royal Highness was thronged with cheering crowds.

Canada is Loyal.

The procession was led by local police, followed by an automobile, in which rode the Prince, the Governor-General and Lord Hastings. Then followed in other autos Premier Fisher of New Brunswick, Governor Milliken of Maine, Sir Robert Borden and other dignitaries. The streets were gaily decorated. Addresses of welcome presented to the Prince at the armories, from both the Province and city, emphasized congratulations to His Royal Highness for the part he had taken in the world war, and expressing the loyalty of the whole of Canada to King George and his representatives.

Weather Not Auspicious.

A royal welcome was extended to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, as he set foot for first time in Canadian soil at 11 o'clock this morning.

The weather was not auspicious, rain commencing to fall shortly before the Prince left his ship, but the adverse conditions in no way affected the warmth of his reception, nor lessened the enthusiasm of greetings extended to the heir to the British throne.

City of Loyalists.

It was eminently fitting that the Prince's first glimpse of Canada should be the city founded by loyalists who had sacrificed so much to remain beneath British flag, and the heartiness of the welcome showed that the same spirit still animated those who have come after them. Dense crowds were on route of the procession. Owing to a misunderstanding regarding time arrangements the Prince landed an hour later than had been expected, as he followed the Atlantic standard time, while the local arrangements had been made on daylight time. This made it necessary to defer all arrangements for an hour, but the crowds waited patiently and good-naturedly. The Duke of Devonshire went early aboard the cruiser "Dragon," which brought the Prince from Newfoundland, and later landed with His Royal Highness. The Prince was received with great enthusiasm when he landed. He smilingly acknowledged the applause.

Replies to Addresses.

His Royal Highness replied feelingly to both addresses and said he was deeply touched by the depth of loyalty and welcomed expressed. He referred modestly to references to his service in France, and declared that it was in that service, in trenches, billets and camps of the war zone that he gained his first real knowledge of what the Empire means to its own people and to the world at large. He valued that service deeply also for the opportunity it gave him of becoming acquainted with Canadian brother officers and men. He said he shared Canada's pride in the achievements of her soldiers, and mourned with Canada the heavy losses which the Canadian homes have suffered.

In Naval Uniform

His Royal Highness was dressed in naval uniform without any distinctive trappings. He is twenty four years of age but looks younger. He showed keen interest in all around him and there was a touch of self consciousness in his manner, almost suggestive of shyness.

The Prince and party will board the cruiser tonight for Halifax.

SWISS MUST HOLD BELA KUN SAFE

ALLIES TO DEMAND HIS SURRENDER ON CHARGE OF SHOOTING HUNGARIANS.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Geneva, Switzerland, Aug. 15.—Allied Governments have informed the Austrian Government that it will be held responsible for Bela Kun, Hungarian Communist leader, and for his delivery later for trial by an Allied tribunal.

Bela Kun, it is added, will be tried for hanging and shooting Hungarians during his reign in Budapest. Extradition will be resisted by Bela Kun, it is said.

London, Aug. 15.—King George has given assent to the bill passed by Parliament ratifying the German peace treaty. The act thus becomes law.

MOULDERS STRIKE

The local moulders have been out on strike fifteen weeks now, and still no settlement is in sight. Many of these strikers have hecured positions out of town, while at least one manufacturing concern is securing its castings elsewhere than in Peterborough.

BRITISH GOVERNMENT TO SUPPRESS ALL SINN FEIN AND KINDRED ORDERS

Troops Man Walls of Derry To-Day For First Time Since 1689.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Londonderry, Ireland, Aug. 15.—Troops manned the walls of Londonderry today for the first time since the historic siege of 1689, as part of a military effort to prevent a Nationalist and Sinn Fein Lady Day demonstration set for today. This demonstration had been forbidden by the British commander, Gen. Hacket-Pain.

A number of members of the House of Commons, representing the Irish districts left for Ireland last night, after it was announced that the Government had decided to suppress all Sinn Fein and kindred organizations in County Clare, as result of increased disorders there.

WIFE SUES HUBBIE

Says Her Consort is Victim of Leisure and Altogether Too Rich.

Chicago, Aug. 14.—Walter H. Petersen is one of the unfortunates who have money, Mrs. Dagne A. Petersen, his wife, says. He has too much wealth, she declares, being heir to one-third of a $2,000,000 estate, and, consequently he has nothing to do, no business cares or worries. His time is all his own—too much his own to suit his wife, who says he spends it drinking and in the company of other women. These habits made him an infrequent visitor at his wife's home, she says, so today she filed a suit for divorce in the Circuit court, charging drunkenness, cruelty and neglect. She asks that Petersen be compelled to pay her enough to live comfortably. They were married in April, 1917. Mrs. Petersen declares she was forced to flee to her parents' home on July 29, 1919, for protection.

IN DEFENCE OF TRUE PERSONAL LIBERTY AND AN INHERENT BRITISH FREEDOM

Local Branch of Citizens' Liberty League Organized Last Night—Sergt. C. E. Haight Opens up Anti-Prohibition Campaign in Peterborough—Col. Machin Coming Shortly—Twenty Local Men Enroll as Paid-Up Members.

At a preliminary organiation meeting of a local branch of the Citizens' Liberty League, held in the Victoria Hall last night, Sergt. C. E. Haight, of Toronto, explained the objects of the league to be as follows:

To uphold the established constitution of the British flag.

To uphold the liberties of the individual in accordance with the teaching of the Bible, and the traditions of the Anglo-Saxon on race.

To oppose the tyranny of organized minorities.

The league is absolutely non-political and non-sectarian. Its interests are positively neutral, no being a member for personal gain.

It is opposed to a return of the open bar as it existed before the war, and it advocates the sale of beer that is beer and wine in well, regulated refreshment rooms.

It also advocates the sale of pure spiritous liquors by Government vendors, under proper restrictions, without a doctor's certificate.

The Liberty Leagues' membership fee is $1, or as much more as one wishes to give.

There are no liquor interests whatever behind the movement, and not a dollar representing liquor invested in it.

Members Enrolled.

About a hundred people attended last night's meeting, including two or three ladies.

Twenty men enrolled themselves as members, and others may do so from now on at Mr. J. Guise-Bagley's office, 440 Water street. Toronto Citizen's Liberty League has a paid-up membership of 10,000 with forty or fifty thousand awaiting their membership cards when the league's officials can catch up with their enrolment demands.

Protection of Liberty.

Mr. J. Guise-Bagley, who had undertaken the responsibility of calling the meeting, assumed the chairmanship, and in a brief opening address, introduced the speaker of the evening. Mr. Guise-Bagley explained the objects the Citizens' Liberty League had in view to be, briefly, protection of inherent British liberty. It represents, he said, no party, creed or particular section of the community, but is composed of all sects and classes.

Back a Thousand Years.

Sergt. Haight, prefaced his address with the declaration that to call a liberty meeting of this kind might be understood in Russia and Central Europe, but the need for such a gathering in Ontario is almost paradoxical, and surely quite absurd in this land of so-called freedom. Canadians, he went on to say, have been fighting for liberty overseas only on their return to find that liberty threatened by fanatical prohibitionists in an attempt to thrust a free-born people back to bondage conditions of a thousand years ago.

Originated in Cobalt.

The Citizens' Liberty League, or the idea it represents, has existed in many thinking minds, he said, a long time, and the present movement originated in Cobalt, and was subsequently consolidated in Toronto. Its honorary president is Sir Edmund P. Osler and Col. H. A. C. Machin, M. P., is its active head. Tre league's executive is composed of bankers, lawyers, K.C.'s and men of weight in the country and to its membership the laboring man is as welcome as the millionaire.

Must Have Freedom.

The speaker here characterized the prohibition movement as dominated by church influence, powerfully organized, to force upon the public its own narrow principles as to individual inclination. This is what the Liberty League has to fight, not alone on anti-prohibition lines, but also on all questions where a minority of citizens would unduly force its aims on an unwilling public in regard to matters affecting one's personal liberty. He had confidence in victory for the league at the referendum, and declared its committee of 100 in Toronto to have more power than any political party. The league's weight, he said, has in its policy of "freedom to do as one like in the matter of individual liberty as laid down in the Bible and the same privilege to be extended to others."

Damnable and Unfair.

Turning to prohibition activities in America, the speaker here instanced three states, in which he characterized the movement as damnable and unfair. Anything was sacrificed, he asserted to gain prohibition's end, and in Alabama a power bill bitterly opposed for years was put through the legislature on the shoulders of prohibition. 2,000,000 American soldiers were in camp, and 3,000,000 overseas and states went dry without their voice, in the matter. And when prohibition legislation was put into force in Ontario, we soldiers overseas, he complained, had nothing to say either for or against the measure.

STRIKE AVERTED OVER WEEK-END

Sir Arthur Geddes Promises Locomotive Engineers and Firemen New Government Offer.

DISORGANIZED RAILWAY SYSTEM

Threaten to Tie Up Transportation of Whole Country Unless Settlement Effected.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 15.—The threatened strike of locomotive engineers and firemen, which would have disorganized railway system of the whole country, has been averted for the week-end.

Sir Auckland Geddes has promised to communicate to the men on Monday a new offer which the Government is preparing.

Situation Serious.

The demand made by locomotive engineers and firemen upon Sir Auckland Geddes, British Minister of Reconstruction, that their wage dispute be settled at once threatens, less a settlement is reached to disorganize railway system of Great Britain.

ST. MARTINS CHURCH, ENNISMORE HOLDS IT'S RECORD LAWN SOCIAL

Large Crowd Gathers From City and all Parts of County—Brief History of Successful Parish Covering Period of Seventy Years

St. Martin's Church, Ennismore, has added another successful year to its long and honorable record, the event being marked by a social gathering held yesterday, the best of a long list of such annual functions for which the parish is distinguished. The country church may be passing in some parts of Canada, but not so in Peterborough County. Here are found rural places of worship creditable to the people who maintain them, community centres in which the social as well as the spiritual life of the old and young alike is developed. In such communities the matter of keeping the young people on the farm is not so acute a problem as it is in places where they are left to their own devices.

The history of St. Martin's Church covers a period corresponding to the scriptural allotment of a human life, three score years and ten. It is an offspring of the older parish of Downeyville. The first building was a modest structure that was built of pine logs cut from the grounds on which the social gathering was held yesterday, the work being donated by the sturdy pioneers of that date. The logs, some of them showing a three-foot face, were hewed by experts as smoothly as though they had been planed. The lumber used was sawed in Scott's primitive mill on Lake Chemong.

The church contained no seats except a bench on either side of the altar for the accommodation of the very aged and those who assisted in the services. The pioneers who stood during the exercises regarded that as no hardship, many of them having been in the habit of walking the 11 miles to worship in the Peterborough churches.

The first priest to officiate was Father Burk of Downeyville. After him came Father Bernard McCoy of the same parish, who died where he labored, and is buried in the Downeyville parish. After him came Fathers Hogan and Kielty, the latter being the first resident pastor, and for whom the present commodious parsonage was built in 1880. Father Kielty was an ardent temperance worker. When he went to Ennismore there were four barrooms in the township, and he never rested until the last one was closed.

Other priests were Father Dan O'Connell, Father McColl, now of Ashburnham, Father Fitzpatrick, at present out West; Father Peter Mc-McGuire, of Peterborough, and the present incumbent, Father McAuley, formerly of the Sacred Heart Church and a worthy successor of a long list of distinguished ancestors.

Graduates of the Parish.

St. Martin's parish has turned out men who in the church and other lines of endeavor have brought honorable fame to their native place. Bishop Scollard of North Bay was reared and trained in that parish, as was the late Bishop McEvay, of the London diocese, who afterward became Archbishop of Toronto. Bishop O'Brien's father was at one time a resident of Ennismore. Father Galvin of Downeyville, and Father Costello of Toronto and John E. Sullivan, inspector of separate schools in London, are natives of the same parish. Bishop Scollard's mother is still a resident of the parish and an active church worker. She was at the social gathering yesterday, accompanied by her daughter, Mrs. (Dr.) Maloney, who is on a visit to the old homestead.

The Passing of Time.

There are few living today who worshipped in the first church, and since the auspicious occasion of the opening many a grave has been made in the little cemetery on the hill. Patrick Crough, now 78 years old, was eight at the time of the building of the church, and can recall the early scenes. He was out yesterday, still hale and active. Another veteran on the ground was Richard Davis, who has passed his ninetieth year. Mrs. John Gannon, who will be 102 years old if she lives until next Christmas day, was in the days of her active youth one of the pillars of the community and the church. The present brick structure was built fifty years ago, the Bishop of Kingston officiating at the laying of the corner-stone, as the Diocese of Peterborough had not been established at thato time. The grounds are beautifully appointed and well kept, the whole presenting a pleasing landmark in the county.

TELEPHONING BY WIRELESS SOON?

BELL CO. REPORTED TO BE PLANNING LONG DISTANCE EXPERIMENTS.

It is reported that the Bell Telephone Co. are about to experiment in long distance wireless telephony across Canada. Mr. Frank Kennedy, the company's manager in Toronto, states that he was unable to confirm or deny the report, "but," he said, "I am aware that the engineering department in Montreal have been keeping in the very closest contact with all developments relative to wireless telephony and the matter has recently been brought to a high state of perfection by telephone engineers in the United States. Long distance telephone communication has proven to be mechanically practical over long distances recently and developments along this line are bound to come in Canada sooner or later."

Mr. Kennedy has several clippings and papers on the subject in his files but refused to discuss the financial side of possible trans-Canada telephone communication on a comparative basis with present long distances charges. "If there is any thing in the rumor it will all be handled from Montreal and be under the direction of the engineering department," was all he woud say.

Some experiments conducted in the United States recently showed that wireless telephone communication was mechanically practical over six thousand miles while the distance from Halifax to Victoria is considerably under that, and at the present time trans-Canada telephone communication is not in operation on the Bell Telephone lines although there is a trans-continental service from New York to San Francisco.

CREW OF STEAMER WERE ALL DRUNK

CAPTAIN OF TANKER INCAPACITATED, HIS CREW MUTINY.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 15.—A wireless despatch received at Queentown, from the British tank steamer, "War Khan," says that the tanker had picked up another steamer in mid-ocean, and found the crew drunk, the captain incapacitated from injuries and some of the other officers in irons. The crew of the "War Khan" arrested the mutinous crew of the other steamer and supplied enough men to take her to Brest, where it was bound.

Next year's Cuban sugar crop is estimated at 4,500,000 tons, valued at $1,500,000,000, breaking all records.

STOMACHICAL LIBERTY.

THE TASTE of some men runs not to the arts or to literature, but is confined to their palates. Others who insist upon liberty of conscience have too often mistaken the seat of their digestive apparatus for the other delicate portion of their make-up.

"Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work," says the Divine law that, amid a flash of lightning and a roar of the artillery of heaven, was promulgated from Mount Sinai more than forty centuries ago, a law which is still standing. This is a clear case of prohibition, but it has been found necessary time after time to reinforce the Divine decree by human enactment. Parliaments have appointed the day of rest and provided penalties for its disregard. Members of various sects have different ideas on this point, but all are expected to observe the day, under penalty of fine or imprisonment, that is set by statute as the time during which all secular labor must cease. Municipal bylaws frequently are framed making it an offence for the barber to pursue his calling or the retail merchant to sell necessary articles of food after a certain hour, even on the other six days of the week, and the community struggles along under these regulations without serious complaint as to inconvenience or interference with personal liberty.

The law as to Sunday labor is probably the easiest of all human enacments to enforce. This is beyond question due to the fact that so many mortals are born with an inherent aversion to physical exertion. With these people, the ox or the ass that falls into the pit on Sunday is generally reduced to the necessity of taking his chances and waiting for rescue until a more convenient season.

It is only when the law decides what is good for humanity in the matter of eating or drinking, especially drinking, that some men begin to clamor for freedom of action and to insist that their personal liberty shall not be tampered with. Usually such men search the Scriptures for warrant for their attitude. Favorite portions of Holy Writ with them have to do with the wedding feast at Cana of Galilee and the medicinal advice given Timothy by the Apostle Paul.

Indulgence in the beverage miraculously prepared at that feast had no effect but to promote good fellowship. With regard to the case of Timothy, the man who insists on personal liberty is apt to exceed the record. His stomach is invariably in a chronic state of disorder which the innocuous prescription of St. Paul fails to appease. What the average personal liberty man insists on is a beverage that kicks three ways at once, like the mule that, supporting itself on one foot, makes a weapon of offence of each of its other pedal extremities.

THEORY VERSUS PRACTICE.

> The Peterborough Review says: "And now having settled to apparent universal satisfaction that increased production is required to reduce the cost of living, why not stop talking and get busy?" What about The Review itself? It does a good deal of talking. It may plead, of course, that it talks very well, but that is not growing potatoes.—Orillia Packet.

WITH ITS HAMMER always handy the Packet is never at a loss to find its own nail, and with consummate tact to drive it home. The editor of The Review spent his vacation this summer pitching hay on the farm in Halton county on which he was raised, and where, we flatter ourselves, we re-established our reputation acquired years ago, for some prowess in this strenuous pursuit. We believe in the philosophy of the late Mr. Wackford Squeers, which provided for practical demonstration of theories. As to talking, well, it is as a rule the final word that clinches the argument.

DAYLIGHT SAVING IN THE U. S.

IN CANADA, in the United States, in fact the civilized world over, the farmers are coming into their own, are beginning to assert themselves, and their claims are being recognized as never before by the elected representatives The agriculturist across the border is as firmly set against the daylight saving scheme as is his brethren in Canada, and for the same good and sufficient reason. Daylight saving is a hindrance to country work, an obstacle in the way of production. If it is a benefit to any one, it is to the members of the leisure class, whose morning hours of rest are not interfered with, who can rise at 8, 9 or 10 o'clock, according to inclination, and who under daylight saving have more time for indulgence in their favorite pastiems at the heat of the day.

The American Congress recognized the objection of the farmers to daylight saving and in the bill making an appropriation for the agricultural department incorporated a clause abolishing for all time the new method of reckoning hours during the summer months. Because of this clause the President vetoed the entire bill. Congress failed to carry it over the Presidential disapproval.

Two separate measures were then prepared. President Wilson affixed his signature to the agricultural appropriation, but again threatens to veto the daylight saving repeal, thus for the second time within a month flying in the face of Congress. The issue now becomes a matter of graver import than a mere Presidential veto. It resolves itself into a question as to whether the legislative or the executive branch of the governemnt is to be supreme, whether President Wilson is a czar in effect or simply the temporarily elected head of a democracy. Aside altogether from the merits of the question originally in dispute, the Presidential autocracy is sure to arouse congressional opposition. Presidents have vetoed bills before this, but Mr. Wilson has established a precedent by sending back, marked "disapproved," a measure twice passed in a brief space by the elected representatives of the people.

THE HIGH COST OF SHOPPING.

THERE IS GRIM TRUTH in the statement made in The Review yesterday by a leading retailer in this city who asserts that the consumers themselves can reduce the high cost of living by co-operating with the merchants. If there is any popular impression to the effect that the retailers are amassing fortunes by the aid of the present high scale of prices, that delusion can be exploded by an investigation of all the circumstances. If there are profiteers in Canada, they are not to be found among the men who deal directly with the consumers. In normal times, when prices are within reason, the sales of the retailer are of greater volume and the return on his investment is higher.

The present day consumer insists on an expensive delivery system. The housekeeper is no longer satisfied to carry her purchases from the grocery to her home. The "cash and carry" plan has been tried out in various cities, but was abandoned owing to its unpopularity. Habits once acquired, even in the matter of purchasing household supplies, are hard to uproot.

There is another class, foot loose and otherwise immune, in the community, the members of which, unthinkingly perhaps, but nevertheless effectively, contribute their quota to the high cost of living conditions. That is the professional shopper, or rather the individual whose chief pastime is visiting the stores of the city enquiring as to prices, examining goods, taking up the time of clerks, but seldom making a purchase. These individuals are to be catalogued with those who attend auction sales in the country in the capacity of spectators or with other members of society whose chief relaxation appears to be found in attendance at a funeral.

The merchant may advertise the pleasant fiction that "it is no trouble to show goods." But it costs money just the same. Clerks so employed look for their weekly pay envelope. If the services of a clerk are estimated according to the amount of his or her sales, then the professional shopper is really working as serious mischief to the wage-earner as to the merchant himself.

SIX CENTS FOR HENRY FORD.

THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE called Henry Ford an anarchist, and Mr. Ford sued the paper for one million dollars damages. After a long trial, in which the best available legal talent was employed by both parties to the suit, the jury has returned a verdict in favor of Mr. Ford for the sum of six cents.

Do not smile at the imaginary discomfiture of the plaintiff or in your haste pronounce the verdict of the jury a burlesque. Mr Ford has achieved his purpose. He has been vindicated, and vindication was all he sought. A jury of his peers has pronounced him a safe citizen. The damages mentioned in his suit constituted a nominal amount, just as the six cent verdict is significant.

According to American law, a verdict of six cents carries with it the payment of all costs by the party losing the suit. Had the jury found for Mr. Ford to the amount of five cents, he would have been left to pay his own costs. The extra cent did the business. The expense of the suit must have amounted to at least a quarter of a million dollars, and all of this must be borne by the offending newspaper. Mr. Ford gains his point. The defendant wins nothing but publicity that is scarcely worth the price.

"THE RICH MAN ALSO DIED, AND WAS BURIED."

RICH OR POOR, high or low, talented or mediocre, aristocratic or plebeian, the Grim Reaper eventually gets them all. The millions that were left out of the unconscionable fortune acquired by Andrew Carnegie, after millions had been given away in charity, could not save the aged capitalist from death. On the day of his demise thousands of lower estate passed away, many of whom were laid to rest in the Potter's Field. "The rich man also died."

And yesterday he was buried. The obsequies were simple and in elegant taste. There was no vulgar display of wealth, no unseemly ostentation of mourning, no paid orator or humbler preacher to extol the virtues of the deceased. The great Victor of mankind had scored again, and with becoming humility the friends of the departed acknowledged defeat.

It is further stated that there is to be no imposing and costly monument to mark the last resting place of the man who in the later years of his career served his fellow mortals, mistakenly and with questionable judgment, perhaps, and with belated regard for their welfare, but who acted in this according to his light.

Costly funerals are becoming unfashionable. Death makes all men equal. One man under the sod is as helpless as another. Why not carry that idea still further and recognize this equality in a greater degree? If unostentatious obsequies are to become the vogue, then let the display of wealth stop with the memorial to the dead. If all men in death are brothers, there should be no distinction in the marking of their last resting place.

In Flanders field, where the poppies grow, there is in the vast cemetery the greatest fraternity in death that this world has ever witnesses. Side by side, the rich and the poor, the officer and the private, slumber together. The men who gave their lives that democracy might be safe in the world rest now in the greatest democracy the mind of man has ever pictured.

MARSHALL FIELD'S WILL IN COURT

Death of Grandson Has Called For New Interpretation of Document —Fortune of Two Hundred Milliors.

These are the millions made by Marshall Field, the Chicago merchant and pioneer in the organizing of the huge departmental stores as they exist in Canada and the United States to-day.

Marshall Field died in 1906, and left the great bulk of his property to his two grandsons. But, with the wisdom of age, he stipulated that forty per cent. of the amount bequeathed to each with part of the income should be held in trust until they reached the age of fifty years. In the meantime one of the grandsons has died, and the survivor is appealing to the law courts to interpret, and perhaps even amend, the provisions of his grandfather's will.

One clause reads: "If either of my said grandsons shall die after my decease and before the distribution to him of his said share of the capital of said trust estate as herein directed, without leaving any issue him surviving. I give, devise and bequeath the entire trust estate to the other of my said grandsons and to his issue, said issue to take per stripes and not per capita."

A point arises here. The elder grandson, Henry Field, at his death left a son, now four years old, but there is no proof that he was ever married. This little boy—too young to know anything about the money battle in which he was concerned, is the child of Peggy Marsh, an actress, who has been liberally dealt with by the executors of the estate. A few months ago $100,000 was settled on her, and that amount was not considered final.

The claim is made in her behalf that her son is entitled to his father's share of the millions still unpaid—say, a little matter of $75,000,000 or so.

The other grandson Marshal Field 3rd takes the ground that it is clear that his grandfather, in using the word issue in the clause quoted above, meant "legitimate" issue. It is on this one word that the disposition of the $75,000,000 hangs.

Marshall Field 3rd, who was a captain overseas with the United States army, is also trying to set aside the drastis trusteeship of the estate, which limits his benefits to a portion of the income until he is fifty. He is only half-way there yet, but he thinks he is old enough to be trusted with the untrammelled use of the entire fortune. And of course, the decision of the courts, as to whether his little nephew has any legal rights to his great-grandfather's fortune will make a great deal of difference to the captain.

It seems to be human nature that if one has $125,000,00, one is still very anxious to get $75,000,000 more.

Of all the great United States fortunes, that of Marshall Field probably made the least noise in the making. There were no big operations on the stock market, no panics, no corner-herald the millions as they poured in-ings, no alleged restraint of trade to to the coffers of the son of John Field, the farmer's boy who left the country town of Conway, Mass., bent on a career as a merchant. He had been in Conway, but the good man who kept it told his father that he would not make a merchnt in a thousand years! Still, in spite of this, he stayed on for four years. Then he went west to Chicago. Sound, persistent business methods, the strictest business integrity, coupled with a keen sense for real estate investment in Chicago and an excellent understanding of men, did the rest. Marshall Field emerged from the bottom of the ladder to the station of one of the richest men in America, with huge interests all over the world.

During the Civil War he and his associates made a small fortune when the price of all merchandise rose to great heights. At the same time he began investing in real estate, always obeying his maxim of paying in full. He was one of the great believers in the business growth of Chicago, and all his beliefs were realized.

As for his business, not even the Chicago fire of 1871 could stop him. Over the ruins of his old store he built a still larger building, but the actual business of this establishment, which finally had transactions on its books amounting to $25,000,000 annualy, became only a small part of his interests.

Marshall Field was one of the largest stockholders in the Pullman Company. He also established factories on the British Isles and through Europe. The strict business compliances he demanded of his customers did much to help the whole business tone of Chicago. If he was exacting in demanding payments, he was just as exacting in the demands he put upon himself. But it has been said that Marshall Field never needed a loan.

With an aversion to publicity almost amounting to a mania, it is one of life's little ironies that his will, drawn up as carefully as business experience and legal assistance could do it, should now be before the public in this way.

DOWNEYVILLE

(Special Correspondence.)

Downeyville, Aug. 14.—A very large crowd were present at a meeting in the hall here on Monday evening, where the drawing of the five prizes took place. Rev. Father Galvin requested Mrs. V. Perdue, of Detroit, to draw, the first prize being a set of dishes, which was won by Gerald O'Neil, King's Wharf; second, a barrel of flour, won by Albert Lucas; third fancy cushion, won by Mr. Peter Galvin, of Ennismore; fourth, a fancy centre piece, won by Adrian O'Neil; fifth, $5 in gold, won by Mr. Edward Costello. Two valuable prize were offered to the gentleman and lady selling the most tickets, a gold watch being won by Miss Pearl Herlihey, and fancy hand satchel won by Mr. Francis Lucas. The others who sold tickets, namely, Miss Gertrude Perdue and Fergus O'Neil, Aubry and Zeta Crowley, all got valuable prizes each. After the prizes were distributed addresses were made by Rev. Frs. Rogers, O'Leary and Galvin and Mr. Martin Carroll. The balance of the evening was spent in dancing and other amusements.

LIQUOR $5 A BOTTLE

At Lindsay a resident of Uphill was charged with selling liquor to four men who had driven out to accused's home from the north. On their arrival, it is alleged, they asked accused if he had any liuor, and he said, "Wait until I see if I have any left." All went into the house then, and the accused, then, got out four bottles of liquor. The spirits were to cost $5 a bottle, so the men paid him $20 for the four bottles.

They then drove the car back to home, drinking freely on the road home. One of the bottles was produced in court.

The case was adjoured for summing up.

Five persons were killed when a train struck their auto near Clementon, N.J. The car was carried half a mile on the front of the engine.

WEEP NO MORE, MY LADY

The above is the title of the opening chapter in The Review's new serial story, the publication of which will begin Saturday. The novel is called "Seven Keys to Baldpate." It is by that popular author, Earl Derr Biggers, one of the leaders in American letters, and still holds its place as one of the best novels ever produced, according to the modern standard. The fascinating interest with which the story abounds is apparent in the opening chapter and lovers of high-class fiction are advised to start their reading at the beginning.

"Seven Keys to Baldpate" is the story, the dramatized form of which was presented at the recent Chautauqua entertainment in this city.

EMPRESS EUNENIE BLIND

It is reported that the Empress Eugenie, last Empress of France, is slowly going blind.

Only two months ago the woman who once ruled the French empire, with her husband, Napoleon III., passed her ninety-third birthday at her home on Farnborough Hill, Eng. Her health is still good and her falling eyesight is her only apparent physical weakness. She tells her visitors that she still believes the empire will be restored in France and that her only wish is to live to see the day when another Napoleon will sit on the throne of France. When she was a little girl a gypsy fortune teller told her she would one day occupy a throne and live to be ninety-four.

Usually the Empress rises at 10.30 in the morning and breakfasts at 11. Then she calls her secretary and goes through her correspondence. Almost every day there comes a request for an appointment from a visitor to Farnborough Hill. Each visitor must sign his name in a book and state the object of his call. The aged empress herself passes upon these requests and if she sees fit to grant them instructs her secretary to forward formal invitations for a call.

When she has finished with her morning mail she visits the hospital for wounded allied officers, which she constructed as a wing to her home, and often spends an hour or two chatting with wounded officers who can tell her about familiar spots in France which she has not seen since she fled to England nearly half a century ago, after Napoleon III. abdicated in favor of the Republic.

She rarely speaks, even to her most intimate friends, of the days when she sat on the throne, but she still retains some relics of royalty about her, in a museum attached to the house are some of the court dresses she wore and the carriage she rode in on the day when she married the Emperor of France. Though she speaks perfect English, her servants, numbering fifteen, are required to converse in nothing but French.

Eugene was born in Granada, Spain, May 5, 1826, the daughter of the Spanish Count de Montijo. With the coming of the revolution that forced Napoleon II. from the throne in 1871, she fled from Paris under the protection of Dr. Thomas W. Evans, dentist from Philadelphia, and sought refuge in England. The Emperor followed her, after his release, but died two years later. In 1879 the Prince Imperial was slain in Africa while fighting with the English army against the Zulus.

VIVID STORIES OF EVERYDAY LIFE

HOLD THE INTEREST OF LARGE AUDIENCE AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE.

The screen at the Grand opened last night with one of Lyons and Moran comedies. As usual, they two got into some very tight corners and the way they wiggled out of them provided much merriment for the audience. This time they are newspaper reporters and the story is their dream as they smoke one of Countess Oranoff's cigaretts.

"Search of Arcady."

"The Search of Archady" was a very interesting story and excellently told. It is the story of a very pretty young heiress who hates nobility and style. It is her mother's wish that she marry a title, especially a certain Earl who avoids meeting young heiresses because he is naturally girl shy. The girl changes clothes with a gypsy fortune teller and heads for the woods with the gypsy wagon. She appears very beautiful in her gypsy clothes amongst the wild woods of high majestic trees and bountiful vendure. The Earl, who has gone to the woods on a hunting expedition to get away from title-hunters, meets this young gypsy and grows strongly attached to her. He buys a wagon and load from a travelling beggar and follows the beautiful young gypsy to a gypsy camp. Eventually the gypsies endeavor to detain the heroine in hope of a ransom but the young Earl jumps on to a horse with her in his arms and after a very exciting race they make their escape. Great is their surprise when they meet the next evening at a garden party and one turns out to be an Earl and the other an heiress.

"False Evidence."

"False Evidence" was the feature picture of the evening and visualized a sadder, sterner side of life than the preceding one. It is a Scotch story. Sandy McTavish has pledged his daughter to marry Lot, a neighbor's rich son. She loves Burr, the cousin of Lot. Lot, however, is determined to hold her father to his pledge and, of course, a McTavish does not lie. On the way home from a party from which she has fled, the young girl encounters Lot who kisses her. She stabs him with a knife her brother had given her, and then Lot's cousin Burr comes on the scene and takes her home. The cousins are found. Burr is charged with stabbing Lot, and remains silent to save the girl he loves. Finally, as Lot is reported to be dying, his lumber jack friends take the law into their own hands and prepare to hang Burr. By promising to marry Lot if he should recover the girl gets him to free his cousin, Burr. Lot gets well but on the evening of his wedding is too drunk to get to the scene on time. Old Sandy McTavish declares his girl will never marry him, as no man will ever make a fool of a McTavish. So his daughter and Burr are left free and his son is free to go with the girl to whom Burr had been pledged to marry by his parents.

This story is interesting as seen on the screen and the acting is of the very best kind. Viola Dana taking the part of the daughter is especially beautiful in her simple Scotch clothing and amid rugged surroundings. It is such offerings as these that make picture plays so popular.

Vaudeville Pictures.

There were some original vaudeville pictures shown between the stories. These depicted trapeze work of the most thrilling kind, rope work, dancing and miscellaneous feats of great strength and juggling skill. These pictures give the people of smaller places a chance to see some of the most skilful stunts of the [illegible] in the world.

PETERBOROUGH GUNMEN SHOOT AT PORT HOPE

FRANK MORRIS, AN EX-BISLEY MAN WAS ALSO A SPECTATOR.

The Port Hope Gun Club held a shooting match Wednesday afternoon, when teams from Peterborough and Lakefield were present.

The presence of Mr. Frank Morris of Bowmanville added great interest to the affair. Frank is an ex Bisley man and is now representing the Dominion Cartridge Company. His score was 46 out of 50, and Hank Reynolds of Port Hope came along with a 48 score, and in the first round of 25 making a clean sweep. Following are the scores in the team shoot, the possible being 50 in two rounds of 25 each:

Port Hope

Colwill	18	23	41
Roper	21	18	40
Reynolds	25	23	48
R. Watson	24	22	42

A. Outram, Port Hope	19	17	36
Tate, Lakefield	16	14	30
F. Morris, (guest)	24	22	46

Freak shooting caused considerable amusement. In one stunt the members carried their guns at their side and the men in charge of the traps could pull whenever they desired.

The visitors were the guests of the local club at dinner at the Queen's Hotel.

WAR VETERANS' ASSEMBLY HALL NOW READY FOR USE

Beautiful Hall Completed Yesterday and is a Credit to Orangization

It is a spacious room which will seat about 600 people. It has a high ceiling and is well lighted. A platform at one end can be used for speeches, concerts, etc., and the seats can be removed to allow the excellent hardwood floor to be used for dancing. Pictures are hanging around the walls, many of which remind one of the noble spirit the association stands for.

Next year the War Veterans' Conference will be held in this room and will be the first occasion for a vets' conference to take place in the hall of the veterans' own club house. The local branch are always near the front in their activities, organizing early and now having one of the most complete club houses in the Province.

LABOR OUT TO RETAIN SEAT

Effort Will Be Made to Secure Re-Election of St. Catharines Man.

St. Catharines, Aug. 15. The Executive Committee of the Independent Labor Party of Ontario have set the date for the convention which is to nominate the Labor Candidate for St. Catharines riding.

The nomination will be held in Merriton Town Hall, Saturday, Aug. 23, at 2.30 p.m. The vote will be taken from the membership roll-call.

Apparently the contest will be a very keen one, as there is a number of prominent labor men and farmers who will let their names stand for the nomination.

In the recent election here between Longdon and Parnell in this riding the Labor candidate, W. F. Longdon, hauled down a 1,500 majority to 156. As this was the first time in the history of this riding that a straight Labor candidate ran for a seat in Provincial or Federal House of Parliament, it is apparent that with proper organization this riding will be represented in the Provincial House after the coming election by a Labor Member.

MAGNIFICENT NEW 1920 DODGE BROTHERS' TOURING CAR

The Duffus Garage have just received a new 1920 Dodge Brothers' touring car which embodies a number of new attractive features: sloping windshield, new style top with side curtains arranged to open with the doors, [illegible] winter top; [illegible] upholstering, genuine leather cushion 10 inches deep and complete new instrument board.

The Dodge car is equipped throughout with famous Timken Bearings and has long since been recognized as the acme of mechanical perfection in motor car construction. Mr. Duffus states they have six new Dodge Brothers' car sold to customers who are waiting delivery and that he anticipates many new sales in the immediate future owing to the likelihood of an increase in price.

HAS GOOD WORD FOR SNAKE

New Yorker Points Out How Unpopular Reptile Aids the Farmer in Growing Crops.

The pretensions of the snake, as a domestic animal of great value, were advanced by Allen B. Williams, president of the Reptile Society of America, at New York.

The society, of which Mr. Williams is the head, middle and end, has undertaken a campaign of education on behalf of the snake, claiming that as a destroyer of rodents and other small pests on the farm he is the friend and benefactor of man. For the poison-bearing snakes Mr. Williams holds no brief and concedes the necessity for their obliteration from the earth; but of the nonpoisonous ones he had this to say at the banquet while you could have heard a pin drop:

"To the lay mind, the idea of the black or the garter or any one of a thousand varieties of harmless snakes being of any service to mankind may appear preposterous and unworthy of discussion. But the facts are otherwise. The snake has a very important bearing on the question of food production, a matter which, even since the signing of the armistice, grows more important daily. The snake is the great small-pest destroyer of the American farm. Every person who kills a nonpoisonous snake might just as well destroy one hundred times the snake's weight in wheat."

Mr. Williams proposes that the value of the snake be taught hereafter in the farm schools and agricultural colleges and says he intends to become the editor of a publication devoted to snake conservation and culture. He advocated the introduction of a small snake or two into every household in the land, saying that the snake, contrary to popular belief, made an ideal household pet, and in the course of every year represented many times over a saving of his weight in mousetraps.

BETTER THAN ELECTRIC FAN

Punkah System Said to Have Advantages Not Possessed by Its More Modern Competitor.

Electric current for fans is not generally available in Aden, Arabia, and the old-fashioned punkah system is the only relief from the almost unbearable heat and closeness of the atmosphere which prevails at certain seasons of the year. A punkah is a large ceiling fan operated by a coolie, who pulls a rope attached to it. This rope generally passes over a small pulley through a hole in the wall, so that the coolie may work unseen by those in the room to be ventilated.

Often a series of fans is operated by one coolie, this system prevailing in hotels, clubs and other places where there is a large space to be cooled. The actual cooling effect is usually considered more satisfactory than that of an electrically operated fan in the respect that the air currents are more gentle and much more evenly distributed.

A punkah walla, as the coolie who operates it is called, receives in Aden an average wage of $3.50 a month for working from eight to nine hours a day. However, during the hot season, when it is desirable to have the punkah in operation night and day, a force of three punkah wallas, working eight hours each, is necessary.

Pioneer in Her Profession.

The first woman physician in the United States was Dr. Elizabeth Blackwell, who received the degree of M. D. at Geneva, N. Y., 70 years ago. Miss Blackwell was a native of Bristol, England, but came to the United States in her youth. When she was 21 she determined to become a physician, but her application for admission was refused by nearly all of the leading medical colleges of the United States and Canada. A little medical college in Geneva, however, accepted her, and she became one of the most brilliant students of the institution. She suffered, however, from social ostracism in the town, as the Geneva hostesses regarded her either as insane or wicked. Miss Blackwell, after finishing her course, attended medical colleges in Europe and practiced in several continental hospitals. She then returned to New York, where she opened an infirmary for women and children and organized a woman's medical college.

Cards in War Service.

Having helped many a soldier through weary hours in trench and hospital, playing cards are now being pressed into active war service, says the London Chronicle. You may have noticed the new and neat little cloth badges on the sleeve of our men from the front, but possibly have failed to understand the designs. They are nothing but the familiar club, spade, heart and diamond of the playing card. Under the new scheme regiments are divided into packs, each company having its own symbol in a certain color to serve as an identification mark, all other badges being removed before going over the top.

Three Kinds of Stones.

This happened near Bedford and in the county which sends away such beautiful limestone. The teacher was giving a geography lesson. She began with shale, told of the way in which it was obtained, of its uses and showed a piece to the children. "Name several different kinds of stone, Fred," she said.

Fred rose with alacrity. "Whetstones, grindstones and tombstones," he answered.—Indianapolis News.

SHE SUFFERED FIVE YEARS

Finally Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Key West, Fla.—"For five years I suffered from irregularities, with terrible pains and awful weakness in my back. The doctor gave me different medicines but they did me no good. A friend asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I found it to be the best medicine I ever tried because it made me well, and I can now do my housework. I am telling my friends about it."—Mrs. J. M. CAMUS, 7[illegible]6 Caroline St., Key West, Florida.

Many women at some period in their life suffer from ailments peculiar to their sex and which in most cases may be readily relieved by this famous root and herb medicine, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, just as Mrs. Camus found it helped her after suffering for years and trying everything else in vain.

If you have any annoying symptoms you fail to understand, write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The results of their 40 years experience in advising women on this subject is at your service.

GOLD IN NEARLY ALL LANDS

Yet It Is Today, to a Very Large Extent, the "Mainspring" of a Nation.

Gold has been much talked about during these years of war, and every one-pound and ten-shilling note is a monument to the power and value of gold. It is to a great extent the mainspring of a nation, says a writer in London Answers.

And yet in spite of its being counted among the rare and precious metals it is surprising how universally it is found. Almost every country in the world can boast of a gold mine.

Gold is found in the ground in rock formation when its presence is often discovered on the surface. The fine particles of gold are extracted by crushing the rock and amalgamating with mercury. Another place where gold is found is in river beds and ditches, when the gravel is collected and the gold separated by washing.

In the British Isles gold is found in small quantities. There are a few mines in North Wales, where it is won from rock of poor quality.

The greatest mines in the world are in Africa, the Rand mines, which are worked by large limited companies. Up country, in Rhodesia, and also in West Africa, there is plenty of gold.

America is the next largest gold-producing country. Extensive operations are carried on in Alaska and California, and the metal is obtained in many other American states.

Australia is one of our colonies whose reputation as a gold producer is known to many. Gold was first discovered in 1851 in New South Wales and Victoria, and there are possibilities in gold mining in Queensland and Western Australia.

PUTTING THE CASE MILDLY

Condemners of Brutal Murder Could Not Be Accused of Undue Denunciation of Crime.

The example given in recent issues of the Companion of understatement of facts reminded a reader of a glaring instance of such caution in speech. One Monday morning, she says, our colored laundress came to us all agog with the gruesome particulars of the brutal murder of a little girl that had happened a few hours before. As she was the bearer of the first intelligence, I listened intently, interrupting her tale with due exclamations of horror. At last she turned to the washtub:

"Ya-as'm," she drawled, bending over steaming suds, "it suttinly was a mean thing to do—a right mean thing!"

At the time that seemed to me the acme of moderation, but—strangely enough—I was later to meet it exaggerated in the mother of the little victim of that mad assassin. When I paid my visit of condolence to the poor woman, she spoke at length of all the sad circumstances of the tragedy. It was when she came to sum up her conclusions that language failed. Pulling out her handkerchief, she sobbed into its neat folds:

"It was so—uncalled for!"—Youth's Companion.

GIANTS WIN TWICE

The Giants took both ends of the double header yesterday from Cincinnati thus tieing up the series. This leaves Cincinnati just 4½ games ahead of the Giants in the championship race. Great interest is being felt in this important series as it will have a decided bearing on the final result. Sentiment seems to be in favor of Cincinnati winning the pennant as it is felt the money grabbing Giants have had enough honors for one team for some time.

NEGRO WANTED FOR MURDER OF WOMAN IN A LONELY LOCALITY

Been Friendly With Victim For Some Time—Was Stabbed to Death.

Chicago, Aug. 14. The police dragnet was spread in Evanston and Chicago today for Thomas A. Hamilton a colored barber wanted in connection with the murder of Mrs. E. L. Watkins. Hamilton had been friendly with Mrs. Watkins for several years.

Detectives were dispatched to Hamilton's home at, West Railroad avenue and Emerson street, a block from the place where the murder occurred. He was not there and evidently had not been there during the night. The bed had not been used. Officers found in a room an insurance policy for $200 made out in favor of "Mrs Effie Watkins."

Fails to Appear for Work.

Hamilton has been head barber at the Knights of Pythias Club, Evanston. He did not report for duty this morning and none of his associates has seen him since last night, when he was observed waiting at the Davis street elevated station.

Officers are searching the colored quarters of both Evanston and Chicago and are confident of capturing their man. He is about 45 years old, short and stocky and has brown skin.

Mrs. Watkins had been friendly with Hamilton for a long time. She became acquainted with him when he was running a barber shop at West Van Buren and South Halstead streets.

It is believed the capture of Hamilton may lead to the arrest of a woman also. Witnesses who heard Mrs Watkins' screams last night as she was being stabbed to death believe they saw a woman flee from the scene of the crime. This belief is born out by Robert Moore, a barber, who passed three persons walking in East Railroad avenue near the corner where the murder occurred shortly after 11 o'clock. One of them, he is convinced, was Mrs. Watkins. Her companions were another woman and a man, who fits the description of Hamilton.

The unfortunate victim was stabbed to death.

A Lonely Spot.

The murder occurred in a lonely spot near the edge of a section inhabited chiefy by colored persons. Chief Leggett indicated his intention of canvassing this district thoroughly for evidence.

When Ray Iredale, the first white man to reach the dying woman's side arrived on the scene of the murder six colored men were standing about the prostrate figure.

Identity of the slain woman was established through a prescription which she had in her pocket. She had been living with her daughter and son-in-law.

At the undertaking rooms, where the body was taken, the woman was described as attractive looking and well dressed. She was about 35 to 40 years old, had dark brown hair, weighed 140 pounds and was 5 feet 7 inches tall. She wore a dark blue tailored serge suit, black shoes and stockings and fine undergarments. She was a widow.

PRICES ON ALL KINDS OF BISCUITS ARE ADVANCING

Increase of Two and Five Cents Per Pound to Go Into Effect.

The price on biscuits has taken another jump, and the local stores will be forced to raise their price on plain biscuits from 18c to 20c, while fancy biscuits will be advanced 5c per lb. immediately. Although the price of flour dropped thirty cents on the barrel in July, biscuit manufacturers point out that the increase in price has been necessitated by the increase in the cost of manufacture, and the same margin of profit is being maintained.

Biscuit manufacturers also claim there is no profiteering in the biscuit business. They state they have no combines, but are endeavouring to give the public a fare deal. In one biscuit concern at least a clerk is kept whose duty it is to keep an account of the cost of manufacture. From this account the selling price of the biscuits is regulated to make a fair profit.

The increase in the cost of biscuits is due to the increase in the cost of raw material, in the cost of labor, a shortening of working hours and a slightly lower production.

Biscuit manufacturers say they can prove that the cost of biscuits in Canada is less than in any other country and there is no profiteering in the biscuit business.

This explanation goes to prove it is asserted, that the increase in cost of biscuits is due to natural conditions, and are not forced up by combines or any unfair methods.

St. Martin's Church

The educational and social advan- Te edhucational and social advantages of the young people of the parish are carefully nurtured. Ennismore has an excellent continuation school that every year turns out a number of graduates as teachers and as candidates for higher academic honors. Miss Clara Young, the popular and efficient principal of this school for a number of years, retired at the end of the last term. The other member of the staff is Miss Bessie McNamara. Miss Virginia Caughell of Norwood is the teacher in the separate school, a building of handsome architectural design that was built near the church two years ago. Over the continuation school is a commodious public hall, which is the scene of many a pleasant social gathering.

Bishop Scollard, Plowman.

The starting of the work of building the separate school was an event in Ennismore that is still recalled by those who took part in the ceremonies. Bishop Scollard, a trained plowman in his youth, was present, and held the plow with old-time skill to break the sod for the foundation. The team was driven with the efficiency of an expert by Father McAuley. They were a pair of handsome bays, the property of Dan Brough, who has guided them to many a victory in township and county plowing matches.

The Roll of Honor.

St. Martin's parish has a roll of honor with thirty-seven names on the list. Not all of those who crossed the seas returned to their former homes. There are men hobbling around that neighborhood today as a result of their military service. One of the young men fo cross the seas with Canada's first offering to the Empire was James Cadigan, son of Dan Cadigan, the only helper his father had on a large afrm. He left home quietly in the early weeks of the war and, going to Kingston, offered his services and was accepted. He came through four years of active warfare without a scratch.

Yesterday's Workers.

A record crowd attended the social yesterday and the arrangements for the entertainment of the visitors were perfect. It was 1 o'clock this morning before the affair broke up, and it is expected that when the returns are all in the receipts will exceed those of any former year. The most important of all the committees was that in charge of the spacious dining room, where the gueses were regaled at the rate of over a hundred at a sitting. The head of the committee was Mrs. Sam Killen, and the other members were Meadames J. Flood, W. Harrington, W. Young, and M. Doran. The other workers were as follows:

Ice cream booth—Miss C. Young, Vincent Hickey.

Soft drinks booth—John Flood, J. Killen and M. W. Cavanaugh.

Fish pond—Misses Nellie Killen, Cadigan and Quinlan.

Fancy work booth—Misses V. Galvin, J. Burk, S. Hickey, M. Kennedy, J. Murphy and L. Killen.

Mr. George Lynch as auctioneer disposed of the articles on sale with his usual success.

Clergymen Present.

Among the clergymen present were Father Galvin, Downeyville, Father O'Leary, Lindsay; Father McGuire, Peterborough; Dean McColl, Ashburnham; Fathers Costello and Rogers, Toronto, and Fathers O'Gorman and Guiry, Peterborough.

Guests From the City.

Senator McHugh of Lindsay was one of the guests of the day. Among those present rfom Peterborough were ex-Mayor J. J. Duffus, Joseph Picard, Jake Solomon, A. H. Stratton, Mr and Mrs. T. J. Lane, Vincent Eastwood, C. R. Widdifield, Manager Campbell, of the Union Bank, P. A. Ferguson, A. A. Fowler and Robert Fair.

Corp. C. P. Kennedy made a record of 45 consecutive bull's-eyes at 600 yards in competition at Caldwell, N.J.

During the week of Nov. 3 the U.S. Red Cross will conduct a drive to raise $15,000,000 to complete its war work.

HENRY FORD IS VINDICATED AND ALLOWED SIX CENTS DAMAGES

End of Five Months Hearing During Which H ge Costs Have Accumulated— Both Sides are Satisfied

Mount Clemens, Mich., Aug. 14—The jury in the Henry Ford-Tribune million dollar libel suit has found in favor of Mr. Ford, giving a verdict of six cents against the defendants. The jury retired at 10 a.m. in charge of Deputy Sheriff Kelly, after the reading of the charge by Circuit Judge James G. Tucker.

The Judge's charge was marked by a number of striking points. The most striking was his ruling permitting the jury to consider whether The Tribune was exerting the right of "fair comment" in its editorial headed "Ford is an Anarchist." The Tribune attorneys had contended that the right of fair comment is involved; the Ford attorneys had contended that it is not involved.

Judge's Charge

The charge was 7,700 words in length, and occupied more than an hour in the reading; the actual typewriting of the charge was not completed until yesterday. The evidence in the case comprises more than 2,000,000 words.

The jury communicated with the court only once. That was after one hour, to ask for a copy of the editorial calling Mr. Ford an anarchist.

Judge Tucker went to dinner at 6.30 and returned shortly before 8. Attorneys went to dinner in relays. Alfred J. Murphy was in the room for Mr. Ford when the verdict was announced, and Weymouth Kirkland, Horace K. Tenney, George Stevenson and Thomas G. Long were on hand representing The Tribune

Verdict For 6 Cents

The newspapermen and a few men and women spectators stayed through. At 8.10 a rap was heard on the door and was answered by 80-year-old Court Officer, Henry Kelly. Judge Tucker came from his room. The jury filed in, and County Clerk Walter S. Steffens asked them if they had reached a verdict and who would speak for them. Harvey Hullett of Armada, Juror No. 9, responded:

"We find the defendant, Solomon News Company, not guilty, and a verdict of six cents against the defendant Chicago Tribune," he announced.

Before the clerk could put the verdict to the jurors in regular form spectators were congratulating Mr. Liebold and the Ford attorneys.

Costs Amount to Fortune

Unless The Tribune appeals which is unlikely it stands to pay the costs of the litigation, which are variously estimated, the highest tentative figure being $150,000.

Orvy Hulett, foreman of the jury said they took "nine ballots that I can remember," the first one, according to Leonard Measel, another juror, standing 8 to 4 in favor of awarding Mr. Ford some damages.

"Does the award of six cents about express the feelings of the jury as to the case," a reporter asked Mr. Hulett.

The Vindication

Attorney Alfred J. Murphy for Mr. Ford said: "The important issue in this case has been determined favorably to the plaintiff. He has been vindicated.

"Money damages were entirely subordinate and were not sought by Mr. Ford. He stands not only vindicated, but his attitude as an American citizen has been justified after a trial which raised every issue against him which ingenuity and research could present. His friends are entirely satisfied

Weymouth Kirkland, of counsel for The Tribune said: "We consider it a victory for the reason that Attorney Alfred Lucking, in closing for Mr. Ford stated that anything less than substantial damages would be a defeat for his client."

Result of First Ballot

The jury stood seven to five for six cents on the first ballot, but one man found he had made a mistake in his ballot and changed, making it eight to four, where it hung for six hours. Then two men changed to Ford. The last two jurors switched over shortly before 8 o'clock, and the verdict was announced as soon as it could be formulated.

To tell what the total expenses of The trial will amount to would be impossible for any outsider. It is undisputed that the Ford-Tribune cast is one of the most costly pieces of litigation in the history of the American Bar.

Costs Are Huge

The initial papers were filed in the Federal Court in Chicago September 7, 1916, and since then the best talent of three of the country's leading law firms have been constantly employed, with one more large firm brought in six months afterwards, and numerous other lawyers added to the list up to the time of the beginning of the trial, since when there has scarcely been a day when fifteen attorneys were not at the counsel tables.

The defendants' case has been handled from the start by The Tribune's own regular attorneys, Shepard, McCormick, Kirkland, Patterson & Fleming.

When the case came to Michigan, Stephenson, Carter, Butzel & Backus, were made attorneys of record and Elliot G. Stevenson and Thomas G. Long have worked constantly.

How much these attorneys have received in fees and expenses is largely a private matter, but it is admitted that the legal cost alone will make a severe dent in $1,600,000.

FOUND STOCK OF LIQUOR

And Now Owen Sound Man is Charged With Illegal Possession.

Owen Sound, Aug. 15—To find a bag with nine bottle of whiskey in it beside the road and then to be arrested for having liquor in his possesion was the sad fate of James Richardson of Lion's Head. He was coming to Wiarton, and while passing through a swamp saw a bag beside the road. In the bag were nine bottles of whiskey of the swampi st swamp variety. So Richardson put the bag in his buggy and brought it along, hiding it later near Wiarton. The Wiarton constable heard of the find, and when Richardson on his way home unearthed the firewater he was arrested for having intoxicating liquor in his possession. He was remanded before Magistrate Miller of Wiarton until an analysis is made of the hot stuff.

LABOR WORK SCARCE

The local branch of the Provincial Labor Bureau reports that 31 laborers have been employed through them on the Hunter street bridge. This bridge is practically the only work in town for laborers, so it is a welcome relief to the labor stress in the city. There have been none placed in employment this week and the bureau does not expect any activity till after the week-end.

SALTS FINE FOR ACHING KIDNEYS

WE EAT TOO MUCH MEAT WHICH CLOGS KIDNEYS, THEN THE BACK HURTS

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders.

You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean, and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is harmless to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity. It also neutralises the acids in the urine so it no longer irritates thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is harmless; inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean, thus avoiding serious complications.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

Down With Extremists.

Sergt. Haight considered prohibition as a scheme to make men good by act of Parliament to be and extreme fantasy, and one which Col. Machin intends fighting to the bitter end, the latter gentleman does not expect prohibitionists to win the referendum, but should they do so he intends to leave no stone unturned to bring its extreme principles home to every man no matter what his position or his means or his needs. He intends that it shall be so enforced this time, if carried, that none shall have access to liquor under any circumstances.

Defends the Soldier.

The visitor here went on to defend Canadian soldiers against charges of drunkeness overseas, and declared that when Capt. Bailey stated in Toronto that 95 per cent. of the Canadian troops were drunk at Christmas, he lied. But even when convicted of untruth the prohibition party stood behind Bailey, and contended that he was abused. A drink intoxicated soldier in France, Sergt. Haight said, was a rare sight, although they were often seen intoxicated with pure joy after having returned to behind the lines from hell in the trenches. Rum was indeed served at the front, and no better medicine exists for the soldier chilled to the bone with campaigning in all weathers. In evidence of this, America's practically prohibition army suffered more from pneumonia than other units to which liquor was served in prevention of disease. And yet, the speaker asserted, prohibitionists, the greatest extremists of the age, would have denied the use of liquor by soldiers and also raised a cry against cigarettes.

Not a Curse.

The speaker, at this juncture, claimed that had liquor and wine been such a curse, we would have had some commandment to warn us against it, and he characterized Mr. Burnham's question in the press, "Was the Lord a prohibitionist," as one which could only be answered by prohibitionists in the negative.

"Heaven gave the grapes, but who withholds the wine," Sergt. Haight asks, that wine which God gave for specific purposes.

Prone to Abuse.

Prohibition, in its extreme principles, Sergt. Haight contended, is apt to abuse and persecute. Take the case of a French-Canadian doctor fined $200 for prescribing whiskey with other ingredients for 250 cases of influenza. He undoubtedly saved the lives of 250 patients, but that did not count with prohibition law. Then prohibition has driven thousands of Toronto people to the use of dope, and that habit once acquired, nothing can save them. Let this measure carry again, he opined, and these extremists will next attack a man's privilege to use tobacco.

The Referendum.

This was the best method that could be used to fight prohibition, and even that, in Toronto, he declared, did not look any too good. For although the appeal courts open on the 15th, his committee had but the lists of two wards on hand, it is estimated that thousands of names are not requested.

Col. Machin Coming.

Sergt. Haight promised that Col. Machin would speak in Peterborough at an early date, and in the meantime he hoped the local branch of the Citizens' League would grow to respectable proportions. In Toronto he concluded, the league's growth has been phenomenal, and the executive is embarrassed by the number applying for membership. Three thousand of the G.W.V.A. have joined the league, and its principles are adopted by the Grand Army.

FLED IN DISGUISE

Noted Men Who Escaped Captivity by Subterfuge.

In Hours of Grave Danger Soldiers of Proved Bravery Have Not Hesitated to Save Lives by Ignominious Flight.

Gen. Hans von Beseler of the German army is said to have escaped out of Poland in disguise as a stowaway on board a Vistula river steamboat. In the fall of 1914 Von Beseler was glorified as the conqueror of the city of Antwerp, the chief stronghold of Belgium and the chief port of continental Europe. Germany's conquering heroes of 1914 have been vanquished and Von Beseler is but one of a great company of notable fugitives who have saved their lives by fleeing in disguise. Judge Jeffries of English history, whose name is associated with the "bloody assizes," tried to hide himself and escape the vengeance his savage cruelty merited by donning the garb of a coal miner and hiding in a tavern at Woking, but he was recognized, captured, imprisoned in the Tower of London, where he soon died. Prince Charles Edward Stuart, pretender to the throne of Great Britain, escaped from Scotland in petticoats, disguised as Betty Burke, maid to Flora MacDonald. Louis Phillippe, the "citizen king" of France, fled to the coast of Normandy where he posed as "Mr. Smith," a British subject, in order to secure passage to England on a steamboat. Napoleon III, while a pretender to the throne of France, was imprisoned in the fortress of Ham. After several months of confinement repairs were begun on the fortress. Napoleon bribed one of the carpenters to smuggle in a workman's garb for his disguise. He dressed himself in the coarse overalls and blouse, shouldered a short plank, which he carried on edge so as to conceal his face, and walking past his guard he escaped to Belgium and thence to England. Porfirio Diaz was twice compelled to flee from Mexico and seek safety in the United States. He made one trip from New Orleans to Vera Cruz disguised as a stoker on board a steamship and was soon leading a new band of revolutionists. Empress Eugenie, disguised as a servant woman, was taken out of Paris by Doctor Evens, an American dentist, in whose house she had been hidden. Thus she escaped the blind fury of the French mob and gained safe asylum in England. Jefferson Davis, fallen president of the Southern Confederacy, is said by his enemies to have tried to escape out of the country and evade his pursuers disguised in woman's garb, but he was captured and imprisoned until the passions of some of the northern fire-eaters had cooled.

The General's Drop.

I have been told this story of a "flying" general, who has had experience as a parachutist, says a writer in the London Evening News. A few days ago he was a passenger in an airplane going north. After a while he picked up a village where he intended to stop for a day or two, and informed the pilot, who at once signified his intention of making a landing. "Oh! don't stop!" shouted the general, and he proceeded to attach himself to a parachute and his suitcase to another. He dropped the case overboard and then stepped off himself. General and suitcase floated down gently and safely to earth, while the airplane continued its flight.

Looking Out for Himself.

Pat was one day driving cattle through a country town, accompanied by a collie. The dog, unknown to him, bolted into a butcher's shop and ran off with a leg of mutton. Whereupon the butcher issued forth, demanding of Pat if that was his dog.

"No," replied Pat, slyly eyeing the erring dog, which by this time was almost out of sight, "he was once mine, but he seems to be doing for himself now."

Uplift Thrown Down.

"An actor in a fur coat," he began "said to me the other day:

"'For uplift, George, I once played Ibsen's Master Builder to the Bullfrog miners.'

"'Humph,' said I. 'Did you have a long run?'

"'You bet we did,' said he. 'About four miles.'"

HAD ITS ORIGIN IN VENIC

Name "Gazette" May Be Traced Fr What Might Be Called the First Newspaper.

Not Rome, but Venice, holds fi place in journalism history. Fr the latter city we get most of t nomenclature of the modern newspaper, says a writer in the Quill. He news was publicly posted as in Rom but to read it cost, it is said, a small coin, a gazetta. Not only in Latin countries, but even in America, Gazette has been a favorite name for newspaper. In the case of the 13 original colonies, nine times out of ten the first newspaper in any one of them was a Gazette. Often the price paid for a newspaper has furnished the name. Examples may be found in the Cent of Philadelphia—possibly the first penny paper in America—and the Picayune of New Orleans. Skeat in his "Etymological Dictionary of the English Language" gives under the word "Gazette," "an abstract of news issued at Venice; the original sense is either (1) a magpie, from Italian "gazetta," whence it may have meant tittle-tattle; or (2) a very small coin perhaps paid for the privilege of reading the news, from Italian "gazetta," a coin less than a farthing. The reader may choose. Since the distinguished professor of Anglo-Saxon at the University of Cambridge was not quite sure about the derivation and offered a choice to his readers, it is barely possible that the two uses of the Italian "gazetta" gave the Latin news sheets their name.

WRONG IN THEIR PREDICTION

Arctic Explorers Long Ago Held Belief That Eskimos Would Be Wiped From the Earth.

One hundred years ago Sir John Ross navigated his ship through Melville bay and arrived at the edge of the ice field attached to the shores. To his amazement black dots were seen rapidly approaching over the vast expanse of ice. What could they be? Eskimos and their dog teams! The most northern people in the world. Eagerly they examined the big ship and in detail everything connected with it.

Donald B. MacMillan, arctic explorer, in recalling this bit of meager history concerning the far North, relates that through an interpreter the Eskimos asked Sir John where he came from.

"From the south," he told them.

"That is impossible," they said. "No one could live down there. All our ice goes off in that direction. It must be now filled up with ice."

Doctor Kane in 1853, and Doctor Hayes, in 1861, found but a small population, and stated that in a few years undoubtedly the race would vanish. There are more there today than there were then, and they are increasing rapidly. In 1899 the total population of these northern shores numbered 218; in 1917, 261.

Brick Piers Show Strength.

The National Brick Manufacturers' association and the United States government have co-operated in some very interesting experiments to demonstrate the strength of brick piers. Tests were made on forty six piers 30 inches by 30 inches by 10 feet high, and four supplementary piers of the same cross-sectional dimensions by five feet high. Transverse, compression and absorption tests were made on each lot of bricks used. The bricks used were representatives of four districts east of the Mississippi river, two or more grades of brick being obtained from each district. Three kinds of mortar were used in the beginning and three grades of bond and workmanship employed throughout the investigation. This report, under title, "The Strength of Brick Piers," is now ready for distribution, and those interested may obtain a copy by addressing a request to the bureau of standards.

That Absorbing Question.

Desmond had been markedly attentive the day before, so when Flossie Flatfeet saw him coming up "the drive" she was all in a flutter.

She opened the door herself and led the way into the drawing room.

"Er—Miss Flossie," began the young man. "I—I—it's rather difficult to ask such a thing. I meant to ask you as I was leaving yesterday, but—but—— Do you——?"

"Yes?" breathed Flossie.

"Do you know," continued the young man, "whether I left my matches here last night?"

MICHIGAN ONCE HAD SLAVES

Only in 1836 Did Human Chattels Become Unprofitable to Their Owners in That State.

Few Detroiters of the present generation know that Michigan was once a slave territory, or that the city of Detroit, for a period of nearly one hundred years, included a considerable number of slaves in its population, observes the Detroit News. The early French settlers lived largely by trading with the Indians. At first they bought furs only, but each spring the Indians of Michigan would make war raids into territory south and west, and they would bring back captives whom they sometimes killed by torture, but later they found it more profitable to sell them to the white settlers as slaves. Most of these Indian slaves were from the Pawnee tribe.

Later negro slaves were bought in the East, principally in the state of New York. When the British took possession in 1760 they found quite a number of slaves, Indians and negro, and they continued the practice. The census of the district in 1773 showed 46 men and 30 women slaves in a community that numbered less that 300 adult white men. In 1782 there were 179 slaves in Detroit. The ordinance of 1787 forbade slavery in the Northwest territory, but Detroiters paid no attention to this Constitutional act. There were enough negroes in Detroit in 1807, slave and free, to enable Governor Hull to organize a company of colored militia.

In 1818 the assessor for Wayne county made slaves taxable property, and this proved a discouragement to slave holding. By 1832 there were only 32 slaves left in Michigan territory, and in 1836 the last one had been manumitted. Less than 20 years later Michigan, having found slaveholding unprofitable, became ardently abolitionist, and Detroit was converted into a terminal of the "underground railway," through which runaway slaves from the South found their way to freedom in Canada.

ANIMAL HEROES IN WARFARE

Some Praise Should Be Spared for the Dumb Brutes Who Gave Their Lives for Liberty.

There was one factor for victory in the war which we overlook in passing out the praise and medals.

To the dumb animals who bore much of battle's brunt, to the horses, mules and dogs, great credit is due.

Patient, plodding, brave, obedient creatures of faithfulness!

Wondrous fine the steed of officer, but equally grand the sturdy haulers of caisson and gun carriage!

Butt of limitless jokes, the long-eared, lean-legged, tuft-tailed army mule has glorified himself. Endless the supply trains he tugged fagging distances, across shell swept spots and through fierce fire.

The Red Cross dog, too, and the sledge dogs in the Alps have been canine heroes, leaping into the jaws of death on missions of mercy or pulling precious packsleds among mountain peaks and passes.

Perpetual pasturage would be a just reward for our four-footed fighters, with freedom from further work. To Fido, allot choice bones to gnaw and if you'd make his home dog heaven rid the world of fleas for these, the "dogs of war."

At the entrance of this Paradise park or preserve, place a shaft to record for posterity a tribute to the war's 42,311 animal dead.—Toledo News Bee.

Forecasting Storms.

By means of what is believed to be a new scientific discovery, it is claimed that weather forecasts may be made with reasonable accuracy two weeks in advance.

As a result of research, conducted by a former chief of the weather bureau and a representative of the Smithsonian institution, it has been found that there are rifts in the upper clouds of the solar atmosphere which cause a variation in the amount of heat radiated to the earth. It is said the investigators have discovered the period of time between the passage of a heat rift in the solar atmosphere and the appearance of resulting storms on the earth.

It has been found that at times these heat rifts persist for several months and that they have produced corresponding disturbances here.

Typewriter Used As a Pendulum.

In the show window of a downtown typewriter concern stands an imposing looking clock more than six feet tall. It is attractive, but what especially invites the attention is the pendulum. The bob is unlike any other in the city, being a full sized typewriter, one that could be set up on a desk and put in active use.

The suspended typewriter swings to and fro all day long. Judging from the excellent time the clock keeps, the typewriter bob does its work faithfully and well.—New York Times.

Power Problem in England.

In its reconstruction thinking, the question of electric power development in Great Britain is engaging the minds of many experts, and it is probable that the government will take some part in the movement. It is proposed to utilize the great mineral resources of the country for production of electric power on a huge scale, and for the conservation and more economic use of the country's coal resources. The idea is to divide the country into large areas for power distribution.

British Archaeologists Intend to Investigate The Ancient Sumerians

An American archaeologist whose work has probably been more severely criticized than any other by some of his fellow scientists has received an honor at the hands of Oxford University that should go far toward vindication, representing, as it does, a recognition of his scholarship by Dr. A. H. Sayce, one of the leading authorities in this science. Dr. Stephen Herbert Langdon has just been elected to succeed Dr. Sayce as professor of Assyriology at Oxford. Until recently Dr. Langdon was curator of the Babylonian section of the University of Pennsylvania.

Dr. Langdon is a native of Michigan, and has achieved distinction in his chosen field at an age when most men are unknown. He was born in May, 1876, at Monroe, Mich., and studied at the University of Michigan, Union Theological Seminary and Columbia University. He was Fellow in Semitics at the latter institution in 1903 and 1904, International Fellow of Columbia to France 1904 to 1906, and is the author of a small library of volumes on Babylonia. In recent years he has been devoting virtually all his time to the study of the language and customs of the ancient Sumerians, who had achieved a remarkably high degree of culture in Babylonia long before the Semitic influence was known.

It is in this field that Dr. Langdon has made his greatest discoveries and met the bitterest criticism. Shortly after his appointment as curator of the University of Pennsylvania Museum in 1915, he made public the translation of a tablet containing a Sumerian version of Paradise, the Flood and the Fall of Man. The hero of the flood, Tagtug, has been identified by Dr. Langdon as the original of the Biblical Noah. The account differs from the Hebraic version chiefly in that Noah is named as the eater of the forbidden fruit, and not Adam. He has also published several volumes of Sumerian liturgical texts from the tablets obtained by the University Museum in its expeditions to Nippur—the Calneh of the Bible—prior to 1900.

Prof. Langdon's appointment is understood by his friends to herald the announcement of a still greater honor, this time at the hands of the British Government. It is expected that the work of archaeological exploration to be resumed in the Near East will be under his direction. Plans have been made for a survey of every field known to have been the home of ancient peoples, and for the first time in the history of archaeology its leaders will be enabled to make explorations on a systematic scale, without danger of interruption from the Turks or from wild native tribes.

Even in the more widely known sites such as Babylon, Lacash and Nippur, archaeologists have hardly done more than scratch the surface so far. More than eight years was spent in excavating at Nippur and about 50,000 tablets were obtained half being retained by the Turkish Government, but much still remains to be done at this site. The opinion has been expressed by archaeologists who have studied the ruins that the most valuable records of the past deposited in the temple at Nippur are still to be found, and this is true also of many other cities.

In the early days of archaeological expeditions the explorers were forced to seek something startling and to find it in as short a time as possible. As a result nearly every expedition spent time on the Ziggurats, or stage towers, which were a part of every ancient Babylonian temple. It was the building of one of these edifices that led to the Biblical story of the tower of Babel. As a general rule the temple proper was situated alongside the Ziggurat. In the temple the kings who rule over cities and sometimes over the whole region then settled, placed their records of conquests, inscribed on vases and tablets. Here, also, they stored the trophies taken from other monarchs.

When all of these regions are opened to exploration it may be possible for science to determine with great accuracy the period of the world's first civilization. At present there are many differences of opinion on this point, but nearly all archaeologists admit that man has been civilized for at least 7,000 years; that is to say, he had become more than a mere hunter at least 5,000 years before Christ; had learned how to build cities, and had started the development of writing, music, sculpture and the other arts. Some leaders in the field are inclined to believe that systematic exploration will trace the history of early peoples back to a point from 10,000 to 14,000 years before Christ. One of the strongest reasons for this belief lies in the chronological lists found in many sites, in which early Babylonian historians attempted to record the reigns of various kings.

Dr. Langdon expressed the opinion some years ago that the world's first library of cuneiform writing on clay tablets would be found at Ur of the Chaldees, mentioned in the Scriptures as the ancestral home of the prophet Abraham. A little work has been done at this site, but the great storehouses have not even been touched. Archaeologists also are particularly interested in various sites to the south, toward the head of the Persian Gulf, such as Lagash, now known as Telloh, and Umma, the modern name of which is Jokha. Undoubtedly systematic exploration will reveal many new wonders of a people—the Sumerians—whose existence was doubted less than fifty years ago by some of the world's leading archaeologists.

Dan Howley For World's Series

Former Leaf Pilot's Playing Points to That End

Toronto, Aug. 15.—"Howling" Dan Howley, piloter of the Leafs to the championship last year, now plucking grass opposite Hughey Jennings, sorrel-topped leader of the American League runners-up for the flag, apparently is carrying baseball championships around, wherever he sojourns. "Howling" Dan, as he is known now in the City of Straits, is howling the Tigers towards the gonfalon, and at the present moment, after the American League situation is carefully sized up, Detroit seems to have an exceptionally happy chance to complete the season at the top of the heap. The city is pennant mad. The Tigers themselves have the fever and after a great trip through the east where twelve games were captured of a possible seventeen, bettering anything acomplished either by the other invaders or the defenders themselves, tremendous confidence is foremost. Howley, therefore, may be the fortunate man to break into the World's Series "jack" his first year after leaving the Toronto club. Viewed from the outlook of many writers and experts, the Detroit Tigers are a very good choice for the championship. New York and Cleveland seem to be through, while St. Louis is strong enough to occasionally take a fall out of the third and fourth place clubs. Few experts believe that Cicotte and Williams, who have shouldered practically all the burden of keeping the White Six at their present height can possibly continue to provide the same quality of baseball. The strain has been terrific and already appearances of their mound duty prognosticate the big blow-off. There are many who have the temerity to declare that it will be soon, too. "Kid" Gleason's scrappers, returning to Chicago to-day, will need every ounce of energy.

STAR TRAP-SHOOTING

Troeh and Lewis Establish World's Records at Chicago.

Chicago, Aug. 15.—Frank M. Troeh of Vancouver, Wash., and Bart Lewis of Auburn, Ill., yesterday won the national amateur and professional trap shooting championships respectively, feature races of the second day's events in the Grand American handicap now being held at the South Shore Country club. Troeh and Lewis registered perfect scores. These are new world's records at 200 targets from eighteen yards rise.

In addition to hanging up a new individual mark, Troeh earned the added honor of shooting with a squad which established a new world's record at 1,000 targets from eighteen yards. The squad composed of Troeh, Nick and Mark Arie, Chan Powers and E. V. Kirby, broke 977 targets. As there was no record for a five man squad from eighteen yards this record will stand. The best former amateur squad record for 1,000 targets, from sixteen yards, is 962.

CLAIMS RECORD WALKING

Charles S. Leland Covered 3,371 Miles in Sixty-two Days.

Chicago, Aug. 15.—A second Dan O'Leary arrived in town this morning. He is of small stature about [illegible] feet in height, dressed in khaki with a pack on his back. He attracted no particular attention and it was hard to tell whether he was a soldier or a wanderer. He introduced himself as Charles Sayer Leland of San Francisco, "world's champion long distance walker." He claims that he broke the United States record by his transcontinental record between San Francisco and New York, covering the 3,371 miles in sixty-two days and [illegible] walk June 29.

BASEBALL TO-MORROW

Lindsay to Play Matthews-Blackwell in Second Game of Series.

The second game of the O.A.B.A. championship series will be played here tomorrow afternoon between Matthews-Blackwell and Lindsay. The winners of this series are amateur champion of Ontario and the local team are anxious to meet one of the speedy teams from Toronto so will make every effort to put Lindsay out of the running tomorrow. This is the only team in the city staying in a scheduled series and a large crowd is looked for at Riverside Park at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

ACTION OF PRESIDENT JOHNSON NULLIFIED

BOARD OF DIRECTORS DECLARE PRESIDENT'S ACTION VOID.

New York, Aug. 14. Three members of the Board of Directors of the American League, constituting a majority of the board, ordered Pitcher Carl Mays reinstated at a special meeting here today, thus nullifying the action of President Johnson in suspending him.

The directors, after reviewing the case, passed resolutions declaring that the "alleged suspension was without authority and void and against the best interests and detrimental to the welfare of baseball," and forbade Johnson from taking similar action against any other player in the American League "without hearing and an opportunity to be heard given to the player and the club involved for any alleged offence.

The resolutions also called upon the president of the American League "to submit forthwith to Charles A. Comiskey, chairman for the account of the Board of Directors, a full and complete statement of the amount from time to time accumulated, disposed of and now held as cash or investment in the sinking fund [illegible] in section nine of the [illegible] and places [illegible] of such sinking fund and to whose credit deposited, giving in detail such information covering all sources thereof during the past two years."

A letter from President Johnson which was read, said he had received the call for the meeting, but that under the constitution it was unauthorized and that, therefore, any action taken would have no force or effect. Under section 20, he said, he had the power to suspend a player or players, and claimed he was not responsible to the league or its board of directors in doing so.

The meeting adjourned subject to the call of the chairman and receipt of a further communication from President Johnson.

THRESHING WELL ADVANCED

Threshing is well under way in Manitoba, and by the end of August more than half the work will be finished, according to J. H. Evans, Deputy Minister of Agriculture. If weather conditions remain favorable all threshing will be finished by the first week in September, thus setting a record.

LOCAL SENTIMENT FOR PROHIBITION

Toronto Globe Representative Secures Opinion of Prominent Peterborough Citizen.

CHIEF THOMPSON FAVORS ACT

Magistrate Dumble Would Make It Easier to Secure Private Stocks of Liquor.

A representative of the Toronto Globe has been making a tour of the large cities in Ontario with a view to ascertaining the sentiment of the people on the prohibition issue. The other day he was in Peterborough and the result of his investigation here is printed in today's issue of the Globe.

As was to be expected there is a diversity of opinion. It is significant, however, that while the friends of the Ontario Temperance Act speak out, those opposed to it do not permit their names to go into the papers with their interviews.

Chief Thompson regards prohibition as a success, and points out that police court cases have fallen off under its operations.

A. B. Cunningham would go the full length by making it illegal to keep liquor even in a private house.

Police Magistrate Dumble said that in his opinion the people who want to keep liquor in their homes should have the right to purchase it in limited quantities under governmetn control. He calls attention to the fact that while the cases brought before him while the bars were open numbered as high as 1500 a year, they have dropped to 500 under prohibition.

Members of the G. W. V. A. are reported as opposed to total prohibition. Representative Labor men told the Globe man how a motion to endorse the sale of wine and beer was voted down by a large majority of the Trade Council. A bank manager, whose identity is not revealed is quoted as of the opinion that prohibition engenders deceit on the part of those who wish to obtain liquor.

Mr. A.W. Cressman's Opinion

Mr. A. W. Cressman's views as to the act are given as follows:

"It's effect has been wonderful. Look back in our old ledgers and you will see pages of bad or doubtful accounts. And these were with men who held first-class positions. At the present time I haven't a dollar on my books which I do not consider worth 100 cents. We used have to employ colection agencies. We do not now. We notice in the store that where people bought the cheapest goods possible they are now buying the best quality."

Summing Up The Case

The Globe representative sums up the situation here as follows:

Local option was twice put before the people in the city and was twice beaten. In both cases the "drys" secured a majority, although not the three-fifths required. In the coming referendum they openly claim that they have made enough converts to carry even a local option fight. A house-to-house canvass has been planned. Where in other prohibition battles the "dry" forces met bitter opposition there is no organized party in the field against them now. It was a pretty general prediction that prohibition would carry, and this prediction came largely from citizens who do not favor a bone dry law. Where they mostly feel that the cause of liquor has been lost is through the breaking up of the local alliance which existed when the bars were open. The "retainers" of the bar room have either become respectable citizens and have gone to work or have become out-and-out vagrants and have gone to jail. In either case the liquor machine in the towns and cities has lost some of its most valuable part and is no longer in working order.

BLAMES APATHY OF RUSSIA FOR HER DRAWBACK IN MILITARY OPERATIONS

Bravery of Siberian Regiments Has Astounded the World, But Merchants and Peasants Don't Want to Fight in Their Own Defence—But Impossible to Bring Together by Battalions Soldiers Who Are Outgrowth of Revolution.

Ufa. Russia, April 25. — I have come to live with one of these Siberian regiments that have so greatly astounded the world by their success, writes Ludovic Grondy, a correspondent. I must say that I have been surprised by the conditions which I have found here, even after all my experiences in the Russian army during the revolution. But as an excuse I must give the fact that all my information about the Siberian army came to me from Russian officers between Vladivostok and Omsk.

Above all, I was told in Siberia from all sides that it was impossible to bring together by battalions and regiments these young Siberian soldiers who were an outgrowth of the revolution. Gen. P., who occupies an important social position at Charbine, but a rather negligible military post, assured me in January of this year that it would be impossible to form a single regiment without having at least one battalion made up of foreign troops (Japanese- to maintain order among the two others. This preceded the intervention of this army at the front. Gen. S., living in a palace in China, combated the possibility of organizing a single Russian regiment unless it was formed on Chinese territory under the protection and the guard of Chinese bayonets. These convictions, firmly advocated by the other officers of the former army, slackers in Siberia, kept them from going to risk themselves among the soldiers near the front.

Toward the end of the year 1917 the question of national resistance to the Bolshevist evil presented itself in two aspects. It became more simplified later.

In southern Russian the danger at this time reunited the greatest generals and Russian patriots, who addressed an ardent appeal to the Russian youths to unite in an army of volunteers which would liberate the country of Bolshevism.

This army was not monarchist and its leaders spoke always in a guarded tone and most excellent manner, antagonizing no one and making an eloquent appeal to the patriots. The officers set the example and put the gun on their shoulders.

Cossacks Not Firm Adherents.

But the bourgeoisie, cruelly pursued and so directly interested in the war against its mortal enemies, did not respond. The Cossacks of the Don, whose role in the whole history of Russia has been various, deserted the little army of volunteers at every instance. Kornilof never spoke of them, never addressed a word to them, except in the most derogatory terms. At the moment when he decided to leave the Don and to go on foot to Couban 1,000 officers abandoned us and there remained only a little group of men isolated by the treachery of their class, whose determination and bravery will be legendary. But their little number, which constituted their title to glory, proved at the same time the inherent fault of the system. The Russian bourgeoisie, and the peasant class would fight neither for the ideas for which they argued with such lamentable insistence, nor for their interests.

Siberia has never had its army of volunteers because it no longer had the great Russian leaders who made the old Russian army celebrated. Alexief, Kornilof, Denikene, Kaledine and Erdeli were able to impose their ideas on their officers, whose principal merit consisted in following blindly for glory or in a spirit of bravery wherever glory might be found, but who, deprived of the leadership of these excellent men, fell into to regrettable excesses and were no longer guided by the high ideas of patriotism and sacrifice.

Appeals Do No Good.

All these appeals in Siberia to the class of the "intelligentsia" to come and enroll themselves as candidates for officers' commissions found the most feeble response. In how many villages have I not seen the students and the members of high schools demanding exception from service on the ground that they were illiterate! But forced by a conscription that was well conducted, they have come into the barracks and schools for "praportchiks" and gone into the war without resentment.

That which astonishes strangers is this indifference, which is identical before disaster and before the call of duty. One finds here a population which, after having suffered from the regime of the Bolsheviki whom the people detest and who manifest joy because they have been repulsed, yet refuses any act of initiative to insure the possibility of their return. All this gives strength to the paternalistic form of the government which is

ONE MAN SAFETY CARS A SUCCESS

Have Passed Beyond Experimental Stage, And Are in Use in Many Large Centres.

OPERATE IN CITIES OF 400,CCO

Running on Forty Seconds Service With Perfect Safety Operated by Women in One Town.

Some members of the local Trades and Labor Council are not sure of the safety of the one-man-cars and their body wrote to the City Council to that effect. The legality of their operation was also questioned.

The City Council has passed the communication on to their Legal Committee, who advised the Trades and Labor body to communicate with the Hydro Electric Commission of Ontario.

There really seems no reason to doubt the one-man safety cars are an acceptable improvement for all concerned. They are new here but have been tried out in the United States, where their use is generally approved of. They have been tested and retained in cities up to 400,000 population and with a car interval of thirty-five to forty seconds. In Peterborough we do well to get a ten minute service. In the matter of safety the one-man car is a marvel of ingenuity. The doors will not open until the car comes to a stop and the car cannot start until the doors are again closed. Investigations also show that these one-man safety cars can make faster schedules than the old style two man units. In a Georgia city it is found that the cars operating there make the round trip in thirty six minutes instead of forty by the two-man cars. In Iowa one city operates these cars by women, and consequently they are styled one woman-cars.

All of which goes to show that these new cars have been sufficiently tried out to class them beyond the experimental stage; and that if found safe in cities of up to 400,000 population, and a forty seconds service, their use in a city like Peterborough should be questioned from either a safety or service standpoint.

RIOTING AND LOOTING IN LONDONDERRY PROPERTY DAMAGE REPORTED SERIOUS

Trouble Started With Nationalists Firing Tar Barrels and Singing the "Soldiers' Song" Unionists Respond With National Anthem—Troops Charge With Bayonets Elevated Nationalist Excursionists Attacked in County Down.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Londonderry, Aug. 16 Rioting and looting occurred in this city during the past night and early this morning. Troops charged on mobs but did not fire any shots. The soldiers, however, were met with a volley of stones when they attempted to break up the Nationalists' demonstration.

Property Loss Large

The monetary loss from looting and from damage to property is estimated at thousands of pounds by police authorities.

Nationalists Start Trouble

The trouble started when the nationalists set fire to a large number of tar barrels which had been collected beneath an arch over which was displayed a picture of Edward De Valera, President of the Irish Republic, and sang the "Soldiers' Song." Unionists responded by singing the National Anthem.

One force of troops kept the crowds apart while other detachments attempted to clear the streets, charging upon the throngs repeatedly.

Bricks and Stones

Bricks and stones were hurled at charging throops, one soldier being seriously hurt. The nationalists were finally driven back to their own quarters. Windows were smashed and shops were looted by the crowds and the city was in darkness the entire night.

More rioting is feared tonight.

No One Injured

Although several revolver shots were heard during the rioting, no reports of any one having been injured have been received. The troops declare none of them fired any shots, and that when they drove back the crowds they advanced with the bayonets raised in the air.

In Belfast Too

Belfast, Aug. 16. Ten Nationalist excursionists were injured during a fight Friday with Orangemen at Lisburn, County Down. Serious rioting also occurred at Coal Island, County Tyronne.

The trouble at Lisburn took place after the nationalists had attended a "Lady Day" celebration at Louth. In the riot at Coal Island several policemen and military officers were injured.

HOME FROM TRIP, HOUSE DARK

Will Bring Suit for $20,000 Against Striking Actors---To Fight Equity Association

Chicago, Aug. 16 Strike Breakers may be called in to take the part of William Courtenay and Tom Wise in the "Cappy Ricks" play at the Cort theater. This was the latest retaliation threat of U.J. ("Sport") Herrmann, manager of the Cort, this afternoon, when he returned from a fishing trip in Ephraim, Wis., with Harry J. Ridings, manager of the Cohan's Grand theater, to find that the two theaters were closed by a strike called by the Actors' Equity Association.

"Courtenay and Wise and the rest of the 'Cappy Ricks' Company have walked out; I shall demand of Oliver Morosco that new players be sent here to fill our contract," exclaimed Herrmann heatedly. "We will fight these actors because of their unfair discrimination.

"And I shall bring suit against Courtenay and Wise for damages if the house loses $20,000 by being dark they shall pay for it. Why are our houses closed – and all the others in the loop are filled with not only their usual patrons but the Corts' as well"?

He was told that since the players at the Cort and the Cohan's Grand Theaters had struck before an injunction taken out by Attorney Levy Mayer for Manager J. J. Rosenthal of Woods' theater could be effective, the attorneys for both sides had agreed that Judge Walker had no jurisdiction over the actors at these two shows.

"It doesn't matter," he retorted. "There are plenty of actors to take the place of the strikers."

The injunction proceedings before Master in Chancery Sigmund Zeisler will be resumed today.

POLICE RULES DECREE CONSTABLES SHALL GIVE ENTIRE TIME TO SERVICE

Cases Such as That of Sergt. Blade Are Dealt With in the Regulations of the Department—Matter to be Pushed by Veterans.

Some time ago the members of the G.W.V.A. sent a communication to the Police Commission protesting against Sergt. Blade carrying on a side line by washing autos, acting as a chauffer and soliciting insurance during his off hours. The reason given for this objection was the fact that so many men, returned soldiers included, were unable to find employment. Sergt. Blade already in receipt of good wages from the city was keeping some men out of a job by this system of double duty.

The Police Commission, composed of Judge Huycke, Magistrate Dumble and Mayor Duncan, announced that they could do nothing. They had, they said, no control over any member of the force as to how he should employ himself during his off hours There the matter rested so far as the Commission is concerned and Sergt Blade was left free to pursue the even tenor of his wealth acquiring ways. But the War Veterans will not allow the question to drop.

Of course, there is a difference of local opinion on this issue. It is impossible to refrain from recalling an editoria spiel in a meticulous contemporary that set out bravely to esponse the cause of the thrifty sergeant. Then it suddenly backtracked and scurried to cover lest it give offence to those behind the protest.

Personal safety still prevailed as the ruling passion.

Like a member of the fire department, a policeman is supposed to be always on duty. It makes no matter whether or not he is in uniform patrolling his beat with dignified and measured strike. Even if he is at church or at a social gathering in civilian attire he is nevertheless an officer of the law supposed to take a hand in preserving the peace or arresting offenders should the occasion arise. Engaging in side-lines has in the case of the average man, a tendency to distract his attention from the calling for the preformance of which he receives a set salary.

Still if the arguments submitted by the War Veterans in their communication does not furnish the Police Commission with a reason for action in the case of Sergt. Blade, the little volume which contains the regulations, instructions and orders of the department, printed under the official seal of the city should be a safe guide in this matter. The third paragraph in those rules makes it appear that one of its conditions upon which a constable is sworn in, is that he obligate himself "to devote his whole time to the Police service."

On page 14 of the regulations, under the head of "Police Constables," appear these words: "He (the constable' shall devote his whole time to the police service." That there should be no doubt on this point it was deemed advisable to give the rule emphasis by repetition.

And now with their own printed regulations before them what do the Police Commissioners purpose to do about?

BRINGING GERMAN CRIMINALS TO TIME

OFFICIALS GUILTY OF CRIMES IN WAR ARE BEING ARRESTED.

Paris, Aug. 15.—German soldiers accused of crimes in formerly occupied regions are beginning to arrive at Lille, according to despatches from that city, to La Liberte. The men are being incarcerated in the citadel where they will be held until tried.

Among those who have arrived, are Lieut Dinder, accused of swinlding and robery in conection with the requisitioning of supplies; and Lieut Schmitz, accused of stealing silver plate. Two others have been arrested at Strassburg and are awaiting transfer while warrants have been issued against others, among whom is General von Zolner, who is alleged to have ordered the deportation of young men and women from Lille.

BRINGING N.S. TROOPS HOME IN BIG FLEETS

TEN VESSELS LADENED WITH SOLDIERS DUE ON ONE DAY.

New York, August 16.—Of a fleet of ten ships on the way from France with American troops and due tomorrow, only one had reported, the Patricia, which loaded with a soldier cargo at Brest. A wireless announced the Patricia had been delayed and would not reach port until today. The Nieuw Amsterdam and the Cap Finisterre have sent no word. They are now expected to come in with the President Grant today. The others coming are the Agamemnon, Konigen, Der Nederlanden, Calinares, Houma, Troy and Louisville.

Bolshevik Troops Wiped Out

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 16.—Several Battalions of bolsheviki have been wiped out in the new counter offensive of the north-western Russian army along the River Luga to the southwest of Petrograd, according to despatches from Helsingfors dated Wednesday.

The Soviet forces also lost large numbers of prisoners, machine guns and ammunition.

SPRING CROPS LIGHT

The farmers report that the grain crops is rather light in most districts around here. The fall wheat crop was good but the reason was too dry for the spring grains except is especially good districts.

EVERY QUALIFIED VOTER IS URGED TO SEE THAT NAME IS ON NEW LIST

If it Has Been Ommited or if Enumerators Could Not Locate Elector, Appeal is Possible—Law is Fair in its Provisions

If the name of any man or woman in Peterborough entitled to vote is not on the list of qualified electors now in the hands of the printers, If the omission is not crrected later, then the aggrieved parties have no one but themselves to blame. The way is easy and the law is clear. No fault can be found with the provisions of the Act, and in this city the work has been carefully and efficiently performed. It was, however, impossible to locate every voter. If any person has been overlooked, he or she can appeal to the judge and correction is easily possible. Before the work started the enumerators were furnished with a set of rules from which the following extracts are here given:

In cities the lists shall be made up in order of street numbers (thus numbers 2, 4, 6, 8, 10, etc., on one side of the street, and numbers 1, 3, 5, 7, 9, etc., on the other side; always finish one side before crossing to the other), and in the townships alphabetically, in all urban municipalites (i.e., in cities, towns and villages) you must visit every house or dwelling place in the polling subdivision and make careful inquiry in order to ascertain the names of all persons qualified to be entered upon the list. If no one is in, you must call again, so that no name is left off the list.

In the case of hotels, apartment houses and rooming houses, after you have called at least three times and found no one at home, you should leave a card stating that you are the enumerator and have called three times to obtain the names to be placed on the voters' list. You should also write on the card your address, the hours when you can be reached, and give your telephone number if you have one.

You shall also enter upon the list prepared by you under this Act the name of every man and woman whose name is not entered upon the said certified voters' list and who is qualified to vote at the election for which the list is prepared.

Lists Made Public.

The rules also give the qualifications necessary for voters so that the enumerators can get every one on the list. Then the lists when printed are being hung in stores convenient to the different polling subdivisions as well as in police stations and post offices, to give those who are not sure they are on the lists a chance to be put on.

What more perfect arrangement could be devised than that? The right to vote should be prized by every man and woman who is qualified. It should not be necessary to urge them to see that they are properly enrolled. It is a matter in which their personal interest should be a sufficient inducement for them to look after the matter themselves. The machinery of the law takes care of every possible case that can arise either in the city or county. The whole matter is one in which partisanship finds no place. In which anything like political manoeuvring is impossible.

WHO'S WHO ON THE COUNCIL BOARD

Alderman Crowe

Joseph Crowe, labor member in the Aldermanic Board, is a true-born Canadian. His birthplace was Ashburnham now called, since amalgamation with Peterborough, east city and although resident on the west side of the Otonabee many years now, he today retains sufficient faith in the "land" of his birth to garden a plot of land "over the river," as Ashburnham was familiarly style thirty years ago.

Ald. Crowe is a moulder by trade; having learned to dabble in sand and mould fine machinery castings at William Hamilton's foundry, west city, the firm now better known and incorporated as The Wm. Hamilton Manufacturing Co. Limited, and he has practically worked in Peterboro all his life.

First a Councillor

Ald. Crowe's experience in municipal office is not confined to his present seat on the Council Board, for he enjoyed the confidence of the electorate fourteen years ago, before growing Peterborough discarded its town attire and borrowed from the municipal wardrobe of Ashburnham Village the wherewithal to blossom forth into city maturity. That was in 1905, when Ex-Mayor Henry Best's fatherly eye watched the town's growing need in sewers and concrete sidewalks and when the first move toward true prohibition was made by cutting down the number of town hotel licenses. These were the days which saw a real beginning in the passing of wooden sidewalks; but when, however Peterborough's street electric lights were of real "candle" power was much as they diffused light about as brilliantly as a candle on a stick, and only made darkness visible.

A Labor Alderman

But to return to Ald. Crowe, he comes back to the Council Board this year, as a labor Alderman and one in whom labor's interests are quite safe. He has been identified with trade's unionism ever since acquiring his trade, and is at all times honest and outspoken. In June he assumed the Aldermanic seat vacated by Ex-Ald. Murray, also a labor man, whose retirement was forced by ill-health. For this vacant seat Ald. Crowe, the unanimous nominee of the Trades and Labor Council, was also unanimously voted into the position by his now colleagues in the city hall.

His Bridge Policy

Ald. Crowe's first move in the City Council was to advocate an immediate start on the Hunter street bridge then delayed by disagreement in Council as to how and by whom it should be constructed. While strong for the work being 'done by day

NONE OF HUNGARY IS FOR ROUMANIA

SUPREME COUNCIL NOW FIXING REPARATION TO BE MADE BY HUNGARY.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Aug. 16.—Rumania will not be permitted to occupy a strip of Hungary, according to the draft of the Supreme Council's reply to the last note from Bucharest, which was completed at today's meeting of the Council.

The Bucharest government is informed that fixing of the amount of reparation to be made by Hungary, as well as its distribution, is a matter under control of the Allied and Associated powers, and that until a final decision is reached all war, railway and agricultural material now in Hungary and subject to distribution, will be under the common administration of the Allied powers.

THE STEP CHILD IN THE CIVIC FAMILY.

EVER SINCE the village of Ashburnham joined the local federation the former village has been rather than otherwise in the relation of a step child in the civic family. The people across the river, when they declared for annexation, had high hopes of future growth and development. The place in which they had a residential interest was to pass from the village stage and become a part of a prosperous city, enjoying the conveniences and advantages that such a status entails. There was to be advancement in the way of sewer construction. Fire protection was to be assured and, greatest of all prospective blessings, Ashburnham was to be linked up by a modern street car system with the city to which the prosperous village entrusted its destiny.

Years have passed and those dreams have never been realised. Ashburnham, beyond all question the most desirable portion of the entire city as a residential section, desirable, too, as a location for manufacturing plants, is still without a car line, the only means of communication that has been added to its former equipment in this regard being a much vaunted footbridge across the Otonabee. The main structure at Hunter street that meant so much to the future of Ashburnham is still in the early stages of construction. This work now in progress threatens the east side with inadequate fire protection.

There should be no hesitation on the part of the City Council to establish in Ashburnham the sub-station that is talked of in connection with the fire department, not as a temporary makeshift while the building of the bridge is in progress, but as a permanent extension of the department. That extension, it has been demonstrated time and again, is required. Fire Chief Grange's contentions in this regard have been supported by the Underwriters' Association on the occasion of their periodical inspections. If more fire stations are necessary to protect the property of the city, then the first logical extension would appear to be, as a matter of simple jusice as well as a good business arrangement, the right of the east side. Ashburnham has a future. When the high level bridge is completed and the street car system is extended, the former village will at last come into its own. Property will increase in value out of all proportion to any rise in the tax rate, and the splendid building sites across the river will be utilized by those in search of desirable residences.

The east side has sent to the City Council time after time aldermen who fought bravely for its interests. None of these has been more interested in its welfare than Alderman Gainey, the only resident of Ashburnham now in the Council. Whether the members of that Council are elected by the ward system or by general vote, Ashburnham will for some years to come be a section apart from the rest of the community and will insist upon direct representation either by aldermen or members of the School Board. This may be opposed to the theory that the benefit of any one part of the city is a matter of general interest, but it is a fact nevertheless. Not every step child is crushed by neglect. Persecution often tends to develop anything in the way of latent pugnacity.

THE RIGHTS OF NEWSPAPERS.

JUDGE TUCKER, who presided at the hearing of the Henry Ford libel suit against the Chicago Tribune, in his address to the jury clearly defined the rights of newspapers in their criticism of and comments upon public questions and the actions of men in the limelight. He made it clear that a newspaper possesses the same prerogatives, as an individual in this regard, no more and no less.

The average newspaper recognizes the truth of the judge's contention and asks for nothing more. The public journal is not always an institution gifted with superlative wisdom. Many of them, judging from their expressions of opinion made with painfully apparent stinted knowledge of the subject treated of, are, or should be, students themselves rather than leaders in thought.

The newspaper is satisfied to be accorded the same rights as the free and independent citizen, no more and no less. It has the same right to enquire as to the actions of public men, to insist that the man in the service of the city, whether in receipt of a salary or acting in a purely honorary capacity, should apprise the tax payers whose money he is spending as to what he is up to. The relations between the municipality and the men on its salary list should be the same as those which exist between a private employer and the men in his pay.

Suppose an alderman, high in committee position, finds it necessary to take a trip outside of the city to interview a public official of note on a question of civic interest. The alderman, if he is not drawing salary for his service, is at least having his travelling and other legitimate expenses paid by the city. He has no right to keep the public in the dark as to either the object or the result of his mission. If his suavity and powers of persuasion have prevailed and brougth the mighty mogul approached to his way of thinking, the public will be duly informed of this fact at aldermanic convenience if, on the other hand, the mission has failed, then nothing will be heard of it further. The less said the sooner forgotten.

Has it ever occurred to a ratepayer who finds himself pressed by the burden of taxation to enquire how much money is expended in a year by teh civic authorities in paying the expenses of aldermen on what are so frequently regarded as junkets to outside points on city business? A statement of expenses placed opposite the results attained would make interesting reading, but it is information with which the ratepayers are never furnished. Money required for this purpose is supplied on the order of the Mayor, who is authorized by resolution adopted at the beginning of every year, to sign an expense order when required. There is no separate account kept of this outlay, the whole being charged up to general expenses. Would such a system be tolerated in the conduct of any private business?

In other regards, too, it is apparent that some aldermen have strange ideas as to their righst and their duties. A member of the present Board has publicly declared that when he is so disposed he will refuse to vote on a question brought before the Council. No member of a deliberative body has a right to straddle the fence or dodge his responsibility by any such artifice. So long as he is in his place he is expected to vote one way or the other. Any council the members of which were minded to launch a general strike could do so and tie up the entire business of the city by following the example of the man who asks with a brave show of courtesy to be excused from voting. If this request is granted in the case of an individual then it cannot be denied the Board collectively.

When an alderman refuses to vote while still in his seat, the presiding officer is within his rights if the orders the recording official to count the vote of the member temporarily on strike with the affirmative. This is a ruling on parliamentary law that has been upheld by the highest judicial authority called to pass upon the issue.

SOCIAL LIFE ON THE FARM.

ECONOMISTS and other theorists who in the fastness of a city office are wont to discuss the question of rural depopulation, often incline to the opinion that the lack of social life on the farm is largely responsible for present day conditions. As it strikes them, the young people in the country crave sociability and other forms of amusement. Failing to find it in the farming district they graduate to the cities that teem with life and where the white way lures them from their homes.

The young man or woman raised in the country who goes to the city with any such object in view is doomed to bitter disappointment nine times ont of ten. This idea that social life attains the highest grade of perfecion in the city is all a myth, as many an urban wayfarer is ready to testify. There is more real sociability in the country in a month than in the city in a year. This is manifested at every gathering in the rural districts. There is a comradery in the country that is never attained elsewhere. Take, for example, such functions as the Farmers' Club picnic of last week or the lawn social at Ennismore on Thursday. There everybody knew nearly everybody else, and if they did not, forming acquaintances was an easy matter. The people who meet for worship in a country church are friends and neighbors. In the city edifice all are comparative strangers. At the entertainment in the country school there is a sociability that the former rural resident will sadly miss at the theatre or any other place of amusement or function in the city.

Modern dramatists have given apt expression to this idea in some of the best plays now before the public. "Everywoman" left her home in search of happiness. She sought it in alien fields, in places high and low, but never succeeded in her quest. Returning to her old home, broken in spirit and weary in body, she then learned that what she looked for had been waiting for her in her native place all thes warse than wasted years. "Youth," inspired by the same ambition, started out in a similar search. Years later boyhood memories wooed him back to his old home, and there was peace and happiness waiting his arrival. Visgil works out the same idea when he makes the dreaming shepherd leave his native hills to look for something never attained until he came back disappointed and wearied almost unto death, but with eyes that could see as they never had before. Even the successful business man in the city who has been reared in the country yearns to the end of his days for that spirit of sociability which is one of the most pleasing memories of his youth. Occasionally he tastes it again, that is when he abandons his pursuit of money, lays aside his ambitions and his cares for a day and joins in the revels of a picnic or lawn social end basks in the hospitality of his former associates.

MARRIAGE LAWS IN QUEBEC

Privy Council Has Handed Down Decision in Tremblay Case.

Montreal, Aug. 15. — The Privy Council has decided in the Tremblay-Despatie marriage annulment case that the claim of the husband that Quebec law is merely declaratory of old French law is correct and, according to advices received here, will now examine into French law to ascertain if it upholds another claim made in his behalf, that decrees of the ecclesiastical authorities must be ratified and given civil effect to by the law courts.

There is another marriage case before the courts which, though it is that of a Hebrew, Rabbi Kaplan, has many features of similarity to the various Catholic cases cropping up at different times. The Rabbi, relying on Hebrew law regarding the marriage of a member of a certain priestly tribe to a divorced woman, seeks to have his marriage with his wife declared civilly null, on the ground that, according to Jewish law, it was from the beginning men-existent. The case has unearthed a very interesting law, passed by the Lower Canada Legislature in 1829, whereby the Jews were declared to be in the enjoyment of all the civil and religious right accorded the Catholics in Quebec.

DELICATE YOUNG GIRLS

NEED NEW RED BLOOD TO GIVE THEM HEALTH AND STRENGTH.

Does your daughter inherit a delicate organization from you? The anaemia of young girls may be inherited, or it may be caused by bad air, unsuitable food, hasty and irregular eating, insufficient out-of-door exercise and not enough rest and sleep.

It comes on gradually, beginning with languor, indisposition to mental or bodily exertion, irritability and a feeling of fatigue. Later comes palpitation of the heart, headache dizziness following a stopping position, frequent headaches and breathlessness. In a majority of cases constipation is present. There may be no great loss of flesh, hut usually the complexion takes on a greenish-yellow pallor.

Cases of this kind, if neglected, become serious, but if taken in time there is no need to worry. The treatment is quite easy and simple. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which are free from any harmful or habit-formin drug are just the tonic needed to remedy this wretched state of health. Though it is not noticeable, improvement actually begins with the first dose. As the blood is made rich and ed, the palor leaves the face, strength and activity gradually return and if the treatment is continued until the last symptom disappears, the danger of a relapse is very slight.

If any symptom of anaemia appears, prudence suggests that Dr Williams' Pink Pills should be given at onec, and the sooner they are taken the more speedily will the trouble be overcome. You can get these pills through any dealer in medicine, or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WHEAT IS YIELDING 35 BUSHELS TO ACRE

CROUGH BROTHERS, FORMERLY OF ENNISMORE, REPORT GOOD CROPS IN ALBERTA.

Gus and Herbert Crough, sons of Dan Crough, of Ennismore, went out to Rockypool, Alberta, over a year ago to engage in farming. Last season they lost all the crops they planted owing to the abnormal drought. This year, however, they are more fortunate. They have sent home specimens of the wheat they have raised, and these were on exhibition in one of the booths at the St. Martin's Church social on Thursday. The stalks are forty-five inches in length and the grain is well developed. The yield is averaging thirty-five bushels to the acre. The Crough brothers wrote home that in the country in which they are located, about eighty miles in extent, the wheat crop is excellent, whatever it may be in other sections.

TO CUT COST OF LIVING

Veterans and Labor Men in Winnipeg to Co-operate.

Winnipeg, Aug. 15.—Concerted action by all military and labor organizations in a fight for the reduction of the high cost of living was suggested in a letter from the Order of Railway Conductors, division 604, considered at a meeting of the Army and Navy Veterans' Association executive. The suggestion was unanimously adopted and a committee was appointed to co-operate.

Pleasures That Leave No Pain

(Farmers' Telegram, Winnipeg.)

The writer of the Book of Ecclesiastes, Omar Kharyyam, and many other blase personages notwithstanding, there are many pleasures in life which do not leaves a bad taste in the mouth but which, on the contrary are good to think of afterwards and are helpful to man in really aiding to "recreate" him. The theatre season will soon open up again and still, and for a long time yet, the lakeside and the country offer very real pleasure to the city dweller, pleasure which leaves behind it a legacy of wholesome memories.

There is, however, one pleasure which it would be well for all, whether city dweller or dweller in the country, to make a practice of indulging in, and one which is not costly and is easily accessible. To enjoy it, it is not necessary to make a journey, although by means of it one may journey into far lands and indeed into distant ages, expeditions which one find otherwise impossible to make Its fullest flavor is to be had at one's own fireside, with the light preferably over one's left shoulder, which doctors tell us is the most favorable position in which to have a light when one is indulging in that incomparable pleasure, the reading of real literature.

By use of the word "literature" it is not intended that stiff, serious books alone are commended, although these have their place, for tuere is much real literature in works of fiction, ancient and modern, and indeed, it might be said that some of the fiction writers of today have inherited the mantle of prophecy which was the peculiar possession of the poets of the past. It is questionable if the poetry of the future can ever attain to the high standard already set in the English language, but prose has still possibilities, in subject, at least, if not in style, which make its future very hopeful, if somewhat difficult to forecast.

Matthew Arnold says that culture, which he defines as "making reason and the will of of prevail,' is to be acquired by "getting to know the best that has been thought and said," and it is almost wholly by reading that this can be done. So that when one is indulging in the very great pleasure of reading one may also be increasing one's own culture, and equipping oneself with that "sweetness and light" which may radiate upon others and so be beneficial to them.

There remains only to make choice of the best books, which, by the way, does not necessarily mean the best sellers, and the choice rests with the reader, guided, if he has good fortune, by some wise friend who combines literary taste with discretion.

It is well to remember that in fiction, Scott, Thackeray and Dickens form a trio which has not yet been surpassed, and that the works of Robert Louis Stevenson make the readers love the author and wish that he had known him personally, and there is no better test than that.

CHOOSING A WIFE

When a man makes choice of a horse, he is not much influenced by whether its harness is in the latest Parisian fashion or not, he is more deeply interested in the qualities of the quadruped itself and may even examine its mouth to make sure that the seller has not, quite inadvertently, made a mistake of a year or two in stating its age. It is not suggested that one should take the very great liberty of examining the teeth of his expected bride, as it is generally admitted that a lady's age is what she declares it to be; it is only intended to suggest a line of thought which may be conducive to the ultimate good of the race and the happiness of mankind.

The mysterious and somewhat cold-blooded science of eugenics apart, it is strange that people who would pay a visit to the Land Titles office before paying over the purchase money on a twenty-five foot lot, should be so casual in entering into a relation from which only death or the law can release them. A rencontre by the side of the silvery lake, a dance of delight on the deck of a river steamer, even the propinquity of travelling on the same street car is often sufficient to lead to a junction of two young lives for better or for worse, and no one, least of all the parties to the contract, can accurately fortell what the consequences may be.

Moonlight is much to blame for the promiscuity of marriage and yet as no one would suggest the abolition of Luna and her magic rays on this account, so none would willingly forego the ineffable joys of moon-madness, except the very unhappily married and for them it is much too late.

After all, youth will continue to woo and be wooed, and, in default of a better, the little blind god may be left to continue in his office as the high priest of Venus.

TO-DAY'S STORY

If you had asked Weary Willie why he had applied for a "job," he could not have told you. But the fact remains, he applied and "got."

It was not particularly interesting, for it consisted of a barrow seasoned with a little energetic push. Now W. W. was altogether adverse to anything with "push" in it, and, to obviate this difficulty he resorted to the simple method of pulling the barrow and, of course, its contents.

On one occasion his boss questioned him.

"Why don't you push the barrow instead of pulling it?" he asked. "Don't you know it is easier to push than to pull? Besides, if you pull the thing, you can't see if you drop any goods on your journey."

"I dont 'care," mumbled W. W. "I'm sick to death of the sight of the thing!"

WIT AND WISDOM

"He's a clever photographer."

"Makes pictures of people as they look, I presume?"

"Cleverer than that. He makes them as they think they look."

"The cost of living must be coming down," declared a Boston man, quoted by the Transcript of that city. "Why do you think so?" "I've got a nickel left from my last week's pay."

Wished to Forget.

"Wot be the chune the orgestry's playin' of now?" asked the farmer of his spouse.

"I dunno," admitted Mrs. Spuds. "But I eard some bloke say as 'ow it were Chopin."

"Chopin!" snorted the farmer. "Chopin be blowed; it sounds a deal more like sawing!"

Very Considerate.

Wealthy Individual (to impecunious suitor for his daughter): "Now, young fellow, just look. D'yer know 'ow I made my money?"

Impecunious Suitor: "Quite so, b. I've already promised Sadie that I should never allow that to stand in the way of our happiness."

Long Time of It.

"Well, Bill, what are you going to do when you gets demobilized?" "Live on me pension, of course." "You don't think yer goin' to get a pension from the army do yer?" "No, not army—old age pension, I mean."

THE MERCHANTS' COLUMN

Edited by
MANSFIELD F. HOUSE
(Copyright.)

(In this column, which appears every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, will appear news and short articles of special interest to merchants, their salespeople and business men and women in general. All phases of store management—buying, accounting, advertising and retail salesmanship—will be dealt with, not theoretically, but by descriptions of methods actually in use by successful merchants.)

8 BUSY LITTLE SIDE-LINES THAT PAY PROFITS

It's a wise business man who is not overlooking some opportunity to add to his profits by the simple expedient of using his present organization to sell some novel side line. Simply because a thing is "out of your regular line" is no reason in itself for not allowing it to pad your profits and reduce your overhead. The early bird catches the worm only because she keeps her eyes open.

It isn't always an easy matter to find the proper "side line." Sometimes it's a matter of a fortunate location, sometimes it consists in cashing in on the peculiar ability of an individual in the organization, oftener still it is a deliberate specialization on an allied line, not for the immediate profit it entails, but because it attracts a new group of customers who then become prospects for your regular goods.

The following briefly told examples cover all three types:

A drug store located close by a Brooklyn hospital hazarded a guess that many of its passers-by would prove customers for flowers if the opportunity was offered them. Realizing that cut flowers would entail an unprofitable amount of loss through wilting, a carefully selected stock of potted plants were added to their line and featured close to the show window beside the magazine rack. Not only did the plants sell but the sale of magazines and candy was also increased by the demands of the same new customers.

A book store—the Korner & Wood Company, of Cleveland, O.—surprised its regular trade and won new acquaintances by making a window display of artistic garden tools. On entering to investigate, the prospective customer found the tools grouped with the latest books on garden and horticulture. The combination [illegible]ed attractive and the sale of garden books jumped as a result of the novel experiment.

The Eclipse and Electrotype and Engraving Company, of Cleveland features its work in preparing individual book plates for book lovers and collectors. By means of booklets sent through the mails and by newspaper advertising at holiday time it has developed considerable business. The purchasers are almost always new to its books, but a careful watch of results has shown that profitable commercial connections have grown up from the establishment of the close acquaintances which the designing of a book plate necessitates.

Another type of "engraver" the kind who prints wedding invitations, announcements, etc., makes a specialty of artistic ashtrays fashioned from the actual copper-plate from which the impressions were made. To the prospective bride the sentimental appeal of preserving the memento plus its interest as showing the invitation "in reverse" almost always proves more than sufficient to induce her to authorize the additional expense.

An advertising agency every December offers its services to the officials of its client companies for the preparation of individual Christmas cards. Because of its acquaintance with their personalities it is able to give the cards an individual interest. The office-rhymester furnishes whatever appropriate verse is required.

Last Easter William Ramsdell Son & Co., in the neighborhood of a prominent cemetery in Cleveland sold out a large stock of potted plants solely by the simple plan of displaying a placard reading: "Plants ordered here will be delivered to Lawndale Cemetery without extra charge."

Dan Williams, a New York picture dealer, has built up a national reputation and a highly profitable trade in the novel field of miniature ship-models and sells his reproductions to all parts of the United States.

A Cleveland jewelry store sells a particular brand of hard candies, while in the same block a book and stationery merchant has a successful agency for a famous make of jewelry. The interest he has developed is growing into a fad of large proportions.

SOLD 32 P.C. OF BOOKS SENT "ON APPROVAL"

When most booksellers were complaining that business was quiet on account of the entertainment competition of theatres, 'movies,' outdoors parties, magazines and newspapers John B. Foster, a bookseller in Newark, N. J., decided to stir up business in an original way, with the result that on first trial he sold 32 per cent. of the customers he addressed.

When a new shipment of books was received, Mr. Foster wrapped up twenty-five to one hundred packages of four books each. Then he made a list of selected charge customers and under the package cord, he slipped this personally addressed, multigraphed letter:

> My Dear Madam:
>
> I have just received from our publishers a shipment of the enclosed new books:
>
> (Here Mr. Foster listed the four titles he enclosed in the package)
>
> These are such interesting and exceptional stories that I wanted a few of my customers to have an opportunity to purchase some before I put them on general sale.
>
> I am sending herewith a volume of each, which I would like to have you look over at your convenience. In a day or two, our wagon will stop and call for those you do not wish. If you should desire any additional volumes, you can let the driver know and I will be pleased to send them to you.
>
> These books will retail at $1.75 (or) and I know they will have a large sale. It is for this reason that I have taken the liberty of sending them, so that you may have first choice.
>
> Yours very truly,
> John B. Foster.
>
> P. S. I have made arrangements with our publishers to forward to me monthly their most popular and best publications and if you should like, I shall be pleased to send over these new volumes as we receive them each month, for your perusal.

On the first trial of this plan, Mr. Foster's sales amounted to 32 per cent. Sales resulting later increased this percentage.

No complaint was made and several customers thanked Mr. Foster for his thoughtfulness. One lady who bought a book by Henry A. Shute came in later for two other books by this same author.

Another customer kept the four books because "they came at a time when I was wondering what to buy for prizes for a card party and the books solved the problem most delightfully."

Mr. Foster reports that the cost of this method of increasing business was small. He figured delivery as a fixed charge, anyway, and having a duplicating machine, he ran off the letters at slight cost.

"Personally I was completely surprised with the results of my little plan," Mr. Foster remarked, "because I was rather afraid at first of being charged with forwardness. I am not certain whether this plan would work with all merchandise—but it seems peculiarly desirable for books, inasmuch as they are rather 'personal'—and if accompanied by a proper letter, are bound to prove acceptable. Perhaps these tactics applied to other lines of merchandise might not prove so successful. I do know, however, that the plan sold and is still selling, [illegible] extra books for me."

CALENDAR LEAVES AS DISCOUNT COUPONS

In many cases calendars are given out without thought of ever seeing returns, but a Denver druggist planned his calendars to get people to the store.

From a firm that sells to variety stores, this druggist made a buy of twelve specials such as would interest the housewives of the community. They were to come in twelve shipments: Measuring cup, paring knife, scouring rag for pots, mouse trap, broom-holder, towel-holder, match-box, iron-holder, kitchen cap, ice pick, thermometer and garden trowel.

Each leaf of the calendar pads was printed on the back with a short advertisement of the special for the month, a window of the store was filled with them at the regular prices, but the presentation of the leaf torn off as the month passed gave the women a discount of amounts varying from 5 to 25 cents. The calendars were hung up, kept and consulted each month. The plan brought in the woman, who, of course, did not stop at the special, but bought other merchandise.

TOM MOORE
THE FINEST
Goldwyn Picture

AT THE GRAND MONDAY, TUESDAY AND WEDNESDAY.

BIT OF BLARNEY STONE FOR TOM MOORE

Tom Moore, who comes to the Grand Theatre, beginning Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday in his newest Goldwyn Picture, "One of the Finest," is an interesting fellow for many reasons, and an unusual actor in that little is known of his preferences and prejudices. After considerable questioning, and not a little observing, these facts have been learned about him:

He says he is older than he looks. He was born in County Mayo, Ireland and has been an actor since his early youth and a screen favorite for a number of years.

He lives with his mother in Hollywood, Cal., across from the Goldwyn Studios in Culver City, and they both like Irish tea in the evenings after dinner.

Tom Moore dislikes anything showy and lives almost in Spartan simplicity. He doesn't own one article of jewelry except necessary cuff-links and studs and uses a modest roadster to reach the studio when the weather doesn't permit him to ride his horse over. The steed's name is "Pat."

In the East he was a devotee of golf. Now he most enjoys riding and polo.

He hates to write letters and his professional correspondence weighs heavily on his conscience. But he is never so pleased as when he receives criticism or commendation from his employers on his work.

PRETTY GOLDWYN GARDENN TOM MOORE'S LOVE NOOK

The very last scene in Tom Moore's new Goldwyn Picture, "One of the Finest," takes place in a beautiful garden. The comedy-drama comes to the Grand Theatre Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and the scene is sure to be the subject of comment. The garden is supposed to belong to the country estate where the likeable star in the role of Larry Hayes, a traffic policeman, later a plain clothes man, comes to guard a lavish display of wedding presents. Already he has met the girl he afterwards makes love to in the garden. It was she, in fact, who caused him to be reduced in rank for a fancied impertinence. But he soon makes her forget that and a charming romance is the result, with its culmination on the brink of a fountain in the midst of trees and flowers.

Many of the scenes were taken on the famous Heinz estate in Pasadena, Cal., but the lovely garden nook was an exception. Motion picture enthusiasts will be surprised to know that it was photographed on the Goldwyn Estate on the studio grounds. In fact. The quiet little garden with its beds of carnations, petunias and fuschias, its mimosa trees and rose bordered walks is the favorite rendezvous of Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy and of course, Tom Moore.

AMERICAN BUSINESS MEN DECLARE FOR PRIVATE CONTROL OF RAILWAYS

After a brief experiment in state operation of the railroads of the United States, both government and business interests appear to have had enough and are ready to restore the transportation lines to private control. This is made clear by the results of the referendum vote on recommendations for remedial railroad legislation drafted by the railroad committee of the Chamber of Commerce in Washington, just announced and which indicate an overwhelming desire on the part of more than 1,100 commercial and industrial organizations scattered throughout the forty-eight States, to see the railroads of the country released from federal control and returned to corporate operation as soon as Congress can enact the necessary legislation.

The recommendations voted upon were drafted by the committee after it had made a most careful study of the transportation situation, and are similar in many respects to the provisions incorporated in the plan advocated before Congress by the National Transportation Conference. They are ten in number and were submitted to referendum for separate votes, with the following results:

1. Adherence to the policy of corporate ownership and operation, with comprehensive regulation: 1,439 votes in favor, 12 opposed.

2. Return of roads to corporate operation as soon as remedial legislation can be enacted: 1,439 in favor, 12 opposed.

3. Adherence to the period of federal control as now fixed unless and until impossibility of remedial legislation in this period clearly appears: 1,329 in favor, 109 against.

4. Permission for consolidation in the public interest, with prior approval by government authority, in a limited number of strong competing systems: 1,293½ in favor, 123½ opposed.

5. Requirement that railroad companies engaging in interstate commerce become federal corporations, with rights of taxation and police regulations reserved for states: 1,215 in favor, 184 opposed.

6. Exclusive federal regulation of capital expenditures and security issued of railroads engaged in interstate commerce, with provision for notice and hearing for state authorities: 1,321½ in favor, and 85½ opposed.

8. Statutory rule providing that rates in each traffic section shall yield an adequate return to a fair value of the property as determined by public authority: 1,206½ in favor, 208½ opposed.

9. Payment into fund of a share of the excess earned by any railroad system under application of the above statutory rule over an equitable imnimum return upon fair value of property, this fund to be used as Congress directs for strengthening general railroad credit and increasing general railroad efficiency: 850 in favor, 540 opposed.

10. Federal transportation board to promote development of a national system of rail, water and highway transportation and articulation of all transportation facilities: 1,183 in favor, 242 opposed.

From the above it will be seen that the chamber is committed to questions Nos. 1 to 8 inclusive, and to No. 10. The chamber is not committed to No. 9 for the reason that two-thirds of the votes cast were not in favor of that question as submitted.

BIG UNION CANNOT EXIST IN CANADA

CLAIMED THAT ORGANIZATION IS ILLEGAL UNDER THE CRIMINAL CODE.

Calgary, Alta., August 16. — The O. B. U. is held to be illegal under the Criminal Code of Canada, which holds it to be an offence to support any movement which has for its object the overthrow of cnstituted authority.

This statement was issued by the mine operators, the officials of District No. 18 of the Mine Workers, and Fuel Commissioner Armstrong. The commissioner issued orders for sixteen mines to open in the district, and these will be ready to accept for work men who are willing to come under the international union authority. The O. B. U. will not be tolerated or recognized.

Commissioner Armstrong expresses the hope that all the mines in the district will be working under international jurisdiction very shortly.

AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT

Two Cars Collide at Corner of Hunter and Aylmer Streets.

Two automobiles collided at the corner of Aylmer and Hunter streets last night about 7:30 o'clock. A car owned by Fontaine's livery and driven by Vernon Shannon was proceeding west on Hunter street. Another car owned by Gordon Hamly was travelling south on Aylmer street at the same time. Hamly had the right of way, and attempted to pass in front of Shannon, and the cars collided. Marks on the pavement show that Shannon applied his brakes in an endeavor to stop the auto. Both cars were slightly damaged, the bodies being bent where they collided, and the tires of each being cut. No person was injured.

TEAMSTER BURNED TO DEATH

Peculiar Accident Befell Laborer at Trenton.

Belleville, Aug. 15.—A peculiar and fatal accident occurred at Trenton resulting in the death of Alfred Bernard, a teamster in the employ of the chemical plant. Bernard was driving a wagon on premises of the plant when a tire struck a stone, causing a spark to ignite gun cotton lying on the round. Mr. Bernard's clothing caught fire, and he was frightfully burned, dying a few hours later. He was 40 years of age, and leaves a widow and four children. The wagon was partially burned, and the horse suffered burns before release.

Columbus, O., Aug. 16. — Service over practically every division of the Ohio Electric interurban railway operating throughout Ohio and Western Indiana, came to a complete halt this morning when 500 trainmen went on strike demanding an increase in wages.

DRINK HOT WATER BEFORE BREAKFAST

If you are accustomed to wake up with a coated tongue, foul breath or a dull, dizzy headache, or, if your meals sour and turn into gas and acids, you have a real surprise awaiting you.

To-morrow morning, immediately upon arising, drink a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This is intended to first neutralize and then wash out of your stomach, liver, kidneys and thirty feet of intestines all the indigestible waste, poisons, sour biles and toxins, thus cleansing sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal.

Those subject to sick headaches, backache, bilious attacks, constipation or any form of stomach trouble, are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store and begin enjoying this morning inside-bath. It is said that men and women who try this become enthusiastic and keep it up daily. It is a splendid health measure for it is more important to keep clean and pure on the inside than on the outside, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing disease, while the bowel pores do.

The principle of bathing inside is not new, as millions of people practice it. Just as hot water and soap cleanse, purify and freshen the skin, so hot water and a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. Limestone phosphate is an inexpensive white powder and almost tasteless.

BLAMES APATHY

In this government it will be difficult to find a single military man whose merit will be comparable to that of the men who are at present Couban, if they have not already fallen gun in hand in the Don or of Stawropol. But these glorious deeds, which in France would resound from one end of the country to the other, do not move this nation. And the strength of the government of Siberia is not in the reputation of a single man or in the talents of a group of men, but in the conviction of the popular classes that after being liberated by the revolution they wish to arrest a dangerous torrent.

These classes give more easily their sons than their silver. The Siberian peasant is essentially an anarchist and opposed to all constraint. A village like Minousinsk near the Chinese frontier refuses to pay the taxes of the government of Omsk after having by means of this government dispersed the Bolsheviki. The peasants hold on to the ground which they have appropriated and to the freedom from taxes which they gained by the war with sentiments which sometimes resemble enthusiasm.

NEW INDUSTRY FOR GUELPH

Arrangements have been concluded through the Guelph Chamber of Commerce by which the City of Guelph acquires another industry. The industry in question is the Canada Food Products Co., Limited and they are taking steps to acquire the old Guelph Stove Co. plant on Paisley street either by purchase or rental. The company will be capitalized at $50,000, divided into 5,000 shares of $10 each, and arrangements are now being made for a charter in order that the company may make an early start.

WELCOME TO GENERAL

Toronto and Exhibition Officials Will Honor Army Chief to City.

General Sir Arthur Currie is to be presented with an address by the City of Toronto while a guest of the Canadian National Exhibition on August 30. The Commander of the Canadian forces will also receive an address from the Exhibition Board during luncheon on that day, and the city's address will be presented at the band stand later in the afternoon.

GIFT OF PLATE FOR GEN. CURRIE

CITIZENS OF HALIFAX AWAIT SIR ARTHUR'S ARRIVAL WITH OPEN ARMS.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Halifax, Aug. 16. Sir Arthur Currie has wireless from the steamship "Caronia" to Mayor Parker his acceptance of his invitation to receive an address and a gift of plate from the citizens of Halifax, provided it does not interfere with plans of the Militia Department that he should proceed straight to Ottawa.

The latest word from the Caronia is she will dock at nine tonight.

HUNS WOULD CLEAR SLAYER OF CAVELL

Newspaper Article Defends Execution of British Nurse by Military Officials.

OFFERS DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE

Says Nurse Abused Trust Placed in Her as One Engaged in Philantropic Work.

Yes, Hazel, a man is supposed to be landed when he owns real estate or when he invests in a marriage license.

Copenhagen, Denmark, Aug. 15.—An attempt to relieve German authorities of blame for the execution of the British nurse Edith Cavell, in Brussels, Oct. 13, 1915, is made in an article printed in the Berlin Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, received here today. The article, which it is asserted is based on documentary evidence, says Edith Cavell as an assistant of Prince Reginald of Croy, abused the trust placed in her on one engaged in philanthropic work by concealing officers and men of allied nationalities until they could cross the frontier.

Miss Cavell's guide, Gillies, is said in the article to have conducted 900 men over the border. Sentence of death was imposed upon Miss Cavell by the court-martial, it is asserted, by a unanimous decision and the sentence was confirmed principally because the Germans held that the nurse had been guilty of breach of trust.

REFUSE TO RETURN TO WORK

Toronto Garment Workers' Strike Not Near a Settlement.

Toronto, Aug. 16. "Stay and Strike" was the decision reached by a mass meeting of organized Garment Workers whose latest concessions in their demands met with unqualified refusal from the employers. According to Business Agent Kodlofsky the meeting yesterday was a large one and heard reports from the various committees who were appointed to interview the individual employers with a view to having their own employes recognized. Even this was refused, the manufacturers stating that they would only take the strikers back on the terms on which they went out. The only demand which the men were urging was for a 25 per cent increase.

MAGNIFICENT NEW 1920 DODGE BROTHERS' TOURING CAR

The Duffus Garage have just received a new 1920 Dodge Brothers' touring car, which embodies a number of new attractive features—sloping windshield, new style top with side curtains arranged to open with the doors, thus making it a winter top; magnificent deep upholstering, genuine leather cushion 10 inches deep and complete new instrument board.

The Dodge car is equipped throughout with famous Timken Bearings and has long since been recognized as the acme of mechanical perfection in motor car construction. Mr. Duffus states they have six new Dodge Brothers' car sold to customers who are waiting delivery and that he anticipates many new sales in the immediate future owing to the likelihood of an increase in price.

SOUVENIRS OF MANY KINDNESSES

Mayor of Mons Warmly Praises Canadian Troops for Gallantry and Self-Sacrifice

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Mons (Friday), Aug. 15. The Canadian cannon, which fired the last shot at the eGrmans on armistice day, Nov. 11, were presented to the village of Mons this morning with elaborate ceremonies.

Souvenir of Kindness.

Colonel Bovey of the Canadian forces said, in presenting these guns, that they would "be a souvenir of many kindnesses shown by natives of the town to the soldiers.

The mayor of Mons spoke of the self-sacrifice of Canadian troops, who "without profit came to fight for liberty of Belgium."

EX-EMPRESS ZEITA WENT THRU HELL

Such is How She Characterizes Her Experience at Hofburg Wants No More of It

TEMPT EX-EMPEROR OF AUSTRIA

Emissaries Would Have Charles Assume an Active Part in His Country's Affairs

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Aug. 16. Dignitaries of the former Austrian regime have reiterated their requests that former Emperor Charles assume an active part in Austrian affairs, according to despatches received from Zurich.

It is said the former monarch was sounded on this subject before Archduke Joseph seized control at Budapest. The last discussion is reported to have been quite long, emissaries attempting to show the erstwhile emperor that the Archduke's assumption of power in Hungary made chances brighter; but he was reluctant to consent and no decision was reached. After this conference had lasted for three hours, former Empress Zita, who was present, finally said "I have had enough talking gentlemen. Hofburg was hell for us. We have done our duty to the end, and we have suffered enough. To return is an impossibility."

REVOLVER EXPLODES ACCIDENTLY

Mother and Son Were Packing Suitcase Preparatory to Leaving on a Holiday Trip

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, Aug. 16. Clifford Wild aged fourteen, was accidentally shot and killed by his mother at their home 995 Queen Street East, this morning, while the pair were packing their suit cases in preparation for a holiday trip.

"There is more room in your suitcase than in mine," said Clifford, and he handed his mother his revolver, of which four chambers were loaded.

As his mother stooped to place the weapon in her bag, the trigger caught there was a report and a bullet entered the boy's side. He pitched forward and was dead before medical aid arrived.

DANCE AT CHEMONG

A large crowd enjoyed the regular weekly dance at Chemong last night. Fitzgerald and Moher supplied the music and a good time was spent by all.

New York's meanest thief has been revealed. He stole $7,000 in Liberty Bonds from the safe of St. Agnes Chapel—the life savings of the 70 year old sexton.

COBOURG'S GREAT. HORSE SHOW

AUGUST 19-23, 1919

Besides the many attractive features of Canada's most popular Horse Show, the directors have pleasure in announcing that they have secured the 48th Highlanders' Band for the week.

ROYAL CANADIAN DRAGOONS

HIGH JUMPING AND TWO OR THREE EXCITING RACES EACH DAY

The Directors have arranged for Polo Matches each afternoon

This is also the week when all Soldiers who enlisted with Cobourg Garrison Artillery, 139th, 235th, etc., are being invited to revisit their old comrades at Cobourg. They will be the guests of the Town of Cobourg and of the Horse Show.

EACH NIGHT A FAMOUS BRITISH MILITARY TATTOO

will be held, in which the War Veterans' Association and Cobourg Artillery, assisted by hundreds of returned soldiers and by the 48th Highlanders and Cobourg Bands, will participate. The Dragoons will also take part.

If you are a lover of the Clyde, Percheron, Hackney Thoroughbred, High Stopper. If you are a lover of Steeplechase, Across Country Horse Racing.

If you are a lover of High Jumping (the world's record was made at the Cobourg Horse Show by Confidence, ridden by Jack Hamilton, 7 feet 10⅞ inches.

If you have or have not seen the Royal Canadian Dragoons in their Musical Ride and other military sports.

If you wish to witness the British Military Tattoo each evening.

Then plan to see the Horse Show, which this year will eclipse its own wonderful record.

But far and above all, every effort is being put forth to secure the honor of a visit from

HIS R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES

during the Show.

All these events promise to make the Cobourg Horse Show more attractive than ever. The charge for autos will be 25c, including parking.

GOD SAVE THE KING AND THE PRINCE OF WALES.

SCHOOLS FOR MEETINGS.

Should be Community Centres, Says the Mayor of Toronto.

Mayor Church of Toronto says he is taking up with the board of education the matter of allowing the use of the schools for soldiers' meetings, such as the G. W. V. A. and other associations of a like nature.

"These are the same as the Ratepayers' Associations," declared the Mayor, "and the only object we had in granting so much money for school purposes was that the schools should be used as civic community centres."

labor, he readily concurred in the contract going to the Russell-Townsend Co., when he saw that such a stand would expedite matters. He is now thoroughly convinced that these contractors are the right men for the job. His labor policy is eight hours a day and a wage commensurate with the high cost of living.

Personal Liberty

On the Prohibition question Ald. Crowe stand for personal liberty, which principle he would also apply to Sunday street cars. He cannot see why a city of Peterborough's size should not enjoy Sunday street cars as well as cities of 50,000 population and over and he is active on this question just now. He is behind Ald. Phelan in seeking release of the city from contributing toward the maintenance of flagmen at the railway crossings, and asserts that he is an enquirer into why people living just across the city borders and using city privileges do not pay income tax into the city's treasury. In fact he is dipping into many municipal questions these days with a view to improved municipal legislation.

Equal Rights for All

As to the many labor questions that arise both in Council and in the Dominion, Ald. Crowe always demonstrates a broad-minded spirit in his discussions and does not advocate class legislation in detriment to the community as a whole. Firm for what he conceives to be labor's rights he still concedes that others also have interests to be conserved and fostered, and governs himself accordingly.

In conclusion, Ald. Crowe, while not clothed in the polish and sauvity of some with whom he comes in contact in public life, has the courage of his convictions, fears no man where he thinks the community's interests are at stake and is already disclosing a tendency toward economic city government without fear or favor.

EXPENSIVE BOAT FOR RISKY WORK

C.P.R. PRINCESS MARGARET USED ON MINE INFESTED SEAS.

London, Aug. 16—Commander Kenworthy asked in the House of Commons yesterday whether the former Canadian Pacific Railway liner the Princess Margaret has been purchased this year for approximately £460,000 for use as a mine-layer and extensively refitted, and whether she was recently used in the Baltic transporting Russian counter-revolutionary troops under Prince Lieven, through mined waters, and whether a less expensive vessel could be used in this work.

Hon. Mr. McNamara replied that the vessel was chartered in England in the early days of the war and was refitted for mine-laying. The vessel was purchased for £495,500. On the occasion referred to she had followed a route known to be clear of mines. Her use for this purpose obviated the diversions of vessels from essential services, as she was already in the water referred to.

Toronto, August 16.—On behalf of A. E. O'Leary, James E. Day, barrister, has issued a writ against James Simpson claiming $10,000 damages for alleged libel. "The libel complained of," according to the writ, "was published by defendant concerning the plaintiff on August 7, 1919, at the assembly hall, Labor Temple, Toronto."

Mr. Simpson publicly charged that Mr. Hevey and Mr. O'Leary, when officers of the Trades Council, had made application to the Toronto Employers' Association for $5000 with which ot start a new labor paper."

NEVER EXPECTS TO BE WITHOUT IT

"THERE'S NOTHING AS GOOD AS TANLAC," SAYS PORTLAND MAN—GAINS TWENTY-FIVE POUNDS.

"In all my long experience I have never found anything as good as Tanlac when it comes to relieving suffering," said J. A. Neisz, a well-known employe of the Pacific Car & Foundry Co., and who lives at 14 East 56th St., North Portland, Ore., the other day.

"My troubles began about three years ago," continued Mr. Neisz, "and I have been having a tough time of it ever since—that is, until I commenced taking Tanlac. I had rheumatism in my arms and back and I suffered almost constantly during all that time. Of course, there were times when this trouble was worse than at others, but I can truthfully say that there was hardly ever a time when I was not conscious of pain to some extent. My arms were so stiff and sore at times that I couldn't raise my hands to my head. Besides what I spent for treatment and medicine, the time I lost from my work on account of this rheumatism amounted to over four hundred dollars in salary. I couldn't sleep much, and just gradually went down hill until I had lost in weight from one hundred and thirty-five to one hundred and ten pounds, and was so weak and run down that I could hardly get about at all.

"A friend of mine who had been suffering from this same kind of trouble, told me that Tanlac was the only thing that had ever done him any good, and advised me to give it a trial. Well, to make a long story short, I have just finished my sixth bottle of Tanlac, and I am as free from suffering in every way, and am as well and as strong as I ever was in my life. I weight one hundred and thirty-five pounds now which means that I have gotten back all I lost in weight. I have regained all my strength and can do as much work as I could fifteen years ago. All that soreness and stiffness has gone from my arms, and I can raise my hands about my head without the least trouble. Yes, sir, Tanlac has been a godsend to me, and I never lose an opportunity to recommend it to others. I am buying another bottle to take home with me today, for I never expect to be without it."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd., in Havelock by A. C. Denike, in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd., in Fowler's Corners by W. A. Hunter, in Gelert by A. J. Scott, in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

REV. FATHER KELLY VISITING IN THE CITY

WELL-KNOWN PRIEST WHO SERVED AS CHAPLAIN DURING THE WAR.

Rev. Father (Capt.) P. J. Kelly, has returned from overseas and is visiting friends in the city. Before his enlistment he was parish priest at Parry Sound. He has been discharged from the service and is now awaiting action by Bishop O'Brien as to his future.

When Father Kelly first went overseas he was appointed to hospital duty but was later transferred to the 8th brigade of the third division. After the battle of Mons he was sent forward to the farthest headquarters camp in Germany. Since February 12 last up to the time of his sailing for home he had been senior chaplain of Bramshott camp.

Before coming home Father Kelly visited Ireland, the land of his ancestors. He says that Home Rule as enjoyed in Canada, rather than the independence insisted upon by the Sinn Feiners appears to be popular with the Irish and he has no doubt that if put to the vote that plan of government would be approved of by a huge majority.

TAKES LIFE AFTER QUARREL

Young Girl of 20, Following Dispute With Brother, Turns on Gas.

Chicago, Aug. 15.—Miss Ruth Stewart, 20 years old, 25 East 16th street, committed suicide last night by turning on the gas in her room. According to the girl's mother, Mrs. Lillian Stewart, her daughter and son, Daniel, 26 years old, quarrelled last night. The nature of the dispute was not divulged.

Mrs. Stewart said that the son and daughter were on good terms, but that they "like all sisters and brothers, quarrelled once in a while." Last week, she said, they had a bitter quarrel, after which Miss Stewart said she would shoot herself if the continual quarrelling did not stop.

PLANNING WELCOME.

Montreal To Spend $25,000 on Reception to Prince.

Montreal, August 16.—The share of the city in the organization of the reception to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will cost not less than $25,000, and all of the money will be spent on the civic fete to be given the Royal guest. The Prince, according to the published itinerary, reaches Montreal on the afternoon of October 27, and leaves at 1:30 p.m. on the 31st.

MINERAL OIL

For Chronic Constipation

By buying this product from us you can get the highest in quality that can be procured at an ESPECIALLY LOW PRICE. There are many thin oils on the market that are not suitable for internal use; other oils have irritating qualities which render them also unsuitable. The one we are selling is guaranteed thick and entirely pure.

It is recognized that a good grade of Mineral Oil is one of the best remedies for CHRONIC CONSTIPATION that is being used. It acts mechanically and does not irritate the intestinal tract, nor does the dose have to be continually increased, as is the case with ordinary purgatives.

It is much better and cheaper than Castor Oil as a laxative for children, since Castor Oil has two effects, the first of which is purgative, and the second or after effect, which is Constipating.

MR. TOOMS RETAKES

Editor Review: In your editorial of Thursday, Aug. 14th, under the heading of "Mr. Tooms' Delusions," I would like to draw your attention to the misinterpretation you have placed upon my letter of Aug. 9th on "Labor Saving Machinery." I, sir, do not deplore the use of modern machinery or its greater producing qualities as compared to hand labor. I welcome the new innovations for labor saving, and greater production. A factory of works, is not efficient without the most modern machinery. What I do deplore, as stated in my letter, is that any advantage gained by using modern machinery goes chiefly to the employer and not to the worker. If any little advantage has been gained by the worker, it has not been a free gift but has been wrested from the employing class, by a united proletariat.

As to modern machinery not tending to make work scarce—the steam shovel mentioned, we will say, cost $50,000. It displaces 320 men by working at 10 hours a day at $3 per day each man. These 320 men become mechanics, get $5 per day, for making steam shovels. At the end of six weeks approximately (wages $576.00) that steam shovel is on the market. The life of that shovel is 5 years or 260 weeks minus 6, or 254 weeks for that 320 men to go on making surplus stock of shovels, and glut the market which eventually causes an industrial crisis.

With modern machinery the toiler can lawfully claim an 8-hour day. I may say the labor movement is international in its scope and welcomes all workers irrespective of nationality. It also realizes that an editor has it over a correspondent, just as much as the modern employer has it over his employees at the present. I personally have no protest to workers of another nationality, so long as they are not exploited or used for exploiting others. It is evident that even an editor can have a delusion.

THOS. TOOMS.

SUMMER HEAT HARD ON BABY

No season of the year is so dangerous to the life of the little ones as is the summer. The excessive heat throws the little stomach out of order so quickly that unless prompt aid is at hand the boy may be beyond all human help before the mother realizes he is ill. Summer is the season when diarrhoea, cholera infantum, dysentry and colic are most prevalent. Any one of these troubles may prove deadly if not promptly treated. During the summer the mothers best friend is Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach and keep baby healthy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

APPOINTED MANAGER OF M'DONALD ESTATE

ALEX. DICK OF TORONTO HAS ACCEPTED THAT RESPONSIBLE POSITION.

Alexander Dick, who for the past four years has been with the R. Laidlaw Lumber Co., Toronto, has been appointed manager of the estate of Alfred McDonald, lumber dealers and sawmill owners in this city, and has entered upon his new duties. Mr. Dick is well known to the lumber industry, with which he has been identified all his life. Born in Scotland he came to Canada in 1905 and soon engaged in his regular vocation. He was associated with several leading firms and for four years was superintendent for John Lumsden, of Lumsdens' Mills, Kippewa, Pontiac Co., Que. In 1915 he entered the service of the Laidlaw Lumber Co. and has covered the ground in western Ontario north of the main line.

A genial, earnest and likable representative he made many friends who will wish him every success in his new and responsible post. He has always taken a deep interest in the welfare and progress of retail dealers and in the contest, which was inaugurated among the lumber salesmen of the province a year and a half ago as to who could secure the greatest number of members within a given time for the Ontario Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, Mr. Dick was one of the winners, having corralled thirteen new members. Owing to his splendid efforts subsidiary branches of the parent organization have also been organized. In Peterborough Mr. Dick will, no doubt, continue the good work he has carried out in the west on behalf of unity and co-operation.

Alex. J. Purse, who for several years has been with the R. Laidlaw Lumber Co., and returned some time ago from overseas, since when he has been attached to the west end yard, 2268 Dundas St., has succeeded Mr. Dick on the selling force and is looking after the same territory.

ITALIAN BABIES MUST HAVE MILK

UNLESS MONEY IS QUICKLY RAISED THOUSANDS WILL DIE.

Mrs. John Adams Drake, President of the American Free Milk and Relief for Italy has issued an appeal for $100,000 for the purpose of sending dry milk and condensed milk to the babies in Italy. Her appeal is based on the return of her brother, Henry M. Rae, who has charge of the distribution of milk in Italy for the American committee and who stated yesterday at the Hotel Vanderbilt, where he is stopping, that they have been feeding only from 30,000 to 50,000 babies in Italy, which is about one-tenth of the number of babies that should be fed.

During the war 93 per cent of the cattle was killed for the purpose of feeding the families of those at home and this leaves but little cattle to furnish milk for the babies. Over 1,000,000 persons died leaving many nursing babies behind. Thousands of babies died from lack of nourishment.

Unless sufficient funds can be raised to send the milk to Italy within the next year, there will be very few babies left alive, Mr. Rae said. Mrs. Drake, who also resides at the Hotel Vanderbilt will be glad to receive donations.

CHAPTER I.

A YOUNG woman was crying bitterly in the waiting room of the railway station at Upper Asquewan Falls, N. Y.

A beautiful young woman? That is exactly what Billy Magee wanted to know as, closing the waiting room door behind him, he stood staring just inside. Were the features against which that frail bit of cambric was agonizingly pressed of a pleasing contour? The girl's neatly tailored corduroy suit and her flippant but charming millinery augured well. Should he step gallantly forward and inquire in sympathetic tones as to the cause of her woe? Should he carry chivalry even to the lengths of Upper Asquewan Falls?

No; Mr. Magee decided he would not. The train that had just roared away into the dusk had not brought him from the region of skyscrapers and derby hats for deeds of knight errantry up state. Anyhow the girl's tears were none of his business. A railway station was a natural place for grief—a field of many partings, upon whose floor fell often in torrents the tears of those left behind. A friend, mayhap a lover, had been whisked off into the night by the relentless 5:34 local. Why not a lover? Surely about such a dainty, trim figure as this courtiers hovered as moths about a flame. Upon a tender intimate sorrow it was not the place of an unknown Magee to intrude. He put his hand gently upon the latch of the door.

And yet dim and heartless and cold was the interior of that waiting room. No place surely for a gentleman to leave a lady sorrowful, particularly when the lady was so alluring. Oh, beyond question she was most alluring. Mr. Magee stepped softly to the ticket window and made low voiced inquiry of the man inside.

"What's she crying about?" he asked.

"Thanks," said the ticket agent. "I get asked the same old questions so often one like yours sort of breaks the monotony. Sorry I can't help you. She's a woman, and the Lord only knows why women cry. And sometimes I reckon even he must be a little puzzled. Now, my wife"—

"I think I'll ask her," confided Mr. Magee in a hoarse whisper.

"Oh, I wouldn't," advised the man behind the bars. "It's best to let 'em alone. They stop quicker if they ain't noticed."

"But she's in trouble," argued Billy Magee.

"And so'll you be most likely," responded the cynic, "if you interfere. No, siree! Take my advice. Shoot old Asquewan's rapids in a barrel if you want to, but keep away from crying women."

Mr. Magee, approaching, thought himself again in the college yard at dusk, with the great elms sighing over head and the fresh young voices of the glee club ringing out from the steps of a century old building. What were the words they sang so many times?

Weep no more, my lady;
Oh, weep no more today!

He regretted that he could not make use of them. But troubadours, he knew, went out of fashion long before railway stations came in. So his remark to the young woman was not at all melodious:

"Can I do anything?"

A portion of the handkerchief was removed and an eye which, Mr. Magee noted, was of an admirable blue, peeped out at him. To the gaze of even a solitary eye Mr. Magee's aspect was decidedly pleasing. Mr. Magee thought he read approval in the lone eye of blue. When the lady spoke, however he hastily revised his opinion.

"Yes," she said, "you can do something. You can go away—far, far away."

Mr. Magee stiffened. Thus chivalry fared in Upper Asquewan Falls in the year 1911.

"I beg your pardon," he remarked. "You seemed to be in trouble, and I thought I might possibly be of some assistance."

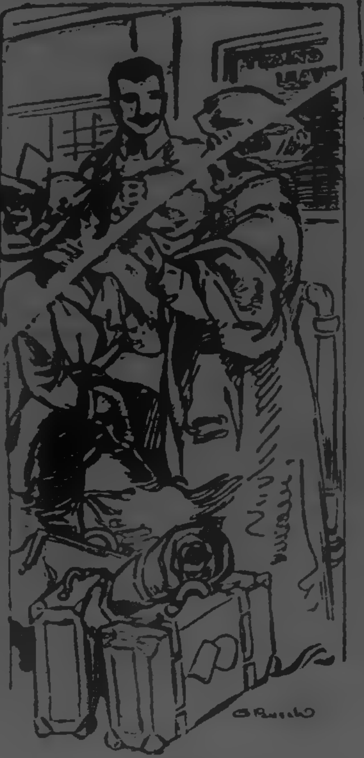
The girl removed the entire handkerchief. The other eye proved to be the same admirable blue—a blue halfway between the shade of her corduroy suit and that of the jacky's costume in the "See the World—Join the Navy" poster that served as background to her woe.

"I don't mean to be rude," she explained more gently, "but—I'm crying, you see, and a girl simply can't look attractive when she cries."

"If I had only been regularly introduced to you and all that," responded Mr. Magee, "I could make a very flattering reply." And a true one, he added to himself, for even in the faint flickering light of the station he found ample reason for rejoicing that the bit of cambric was no longer agonizingly pressed. As yet he had scarcely looked away from her eyes, but he was dimly aware that up above wisps of golden hair peeped impudently from beneath a saucy black hat.

"My grief," said the girl, "is utterly silly and—womanish. I think it would be best to leave me alone with it. Thank you for your interest. And—would you mind asking the gentleman who is pressing his face so feverishly against the bars to kindly close his window?"

"Certainly," replied Mr. Magee. He turned away. As he did so he collided with a rather excessive lady. She gave the impression of solidity and bulk. Her mouth was hard and knowing. Mr. Magee felt that she wanted to vote and that she would say as much from time to time. The lady had a glittering eye. She put it to its time honored use and fixed Mr. Magee with it.



"I was crying, mamma," the girl explained.

"I was crying, mamma," the girl explained, "and this gentleman inquired if he could be of any service."

Mamma! Mr. Magee wanted to add his tears to those of the girl. This frail and lovely damsel in distress owning as her maternal parent a heavy unnecessary person!

"Well, they ain't no use gettin' all worked up for nothing," advised the unpleasant parent. Mr. Magee was surprised that in her tone there was no hostility to him, thus belying her looks. "Mebbe the gentleman can direct us to a good hotel," she added, with a rather stagy smile.

"I'm a stranger here, too," Mr. Magee replied. "I'll interview the man over there in the cage."

The gentleman referred to was not cheerful in his replies. There was, he said, Baldpate inn.

"Oh, yes, Baldpate inn," repeated Billy Magee with interest.

"Yes, that's a pretty swell place," said the ticket agent. "But it ain't open now. It's a summer resort. There ain't no place open now, but the Commercial House. And I wouldn't recommend no human being there—especially no lady who was sad before she ever saw it."

Mr. Magee explained to the incongruous family pair waiting on the bench.

"There's only one hotel," he said, "and I'm told it's not exactly the place for any one whose outlook on life is not rosy at the moment. I'm sorry."

"It will do very well," answered the girl, "whatever it is." She smiled at Billy Magee. "My outlook on life in Upper Asquewan Falls," she said, "grows rosier every minute. We must find a cab."

She began to gather up her traveling bags, and Mr. Magee hastened to assist. The three went out on the station platform, upon which lay a thin carpet of snowflakes. There the older woman, in a harsh rasping voice, found fault with Upper Asquewan Falls—its geography, its public spirit, its brand of weather. A dejected cab at the end of the platform stood mourning its lonely lot. In it Mr. Magee placed the large lady and the bags. Then, while the driver climbed to his seat he spoke into the invisible ear of the girl.

"You haven't told me why you cried," he reminded her.

"Upper Asquewan Falls," she said, "isn't it reason enough?"

Billy Magee looked; saw a row of gloomy buildings that seemed to list as the wind blew, a blurred sign, "Liquor and Cigars," a street that staggered away into the dark like a man who had lingered too long at the emporium back of the sign.

"Are you doomed to stay here long?" he asked.

"Come on, Mary," cried a deep voice from the cab. "Get in and shut the door. I'm freezing."

"It all depends," said the girl. "Thank you for being so kind and—good night."

The door closed with a muffled bang, the cab creaked wearily away and Mr. Magee turned back to the dim waiting room.

"Well, what was she crying for?" inquired the ticket agent when Mr. Magee stood again at his cell window.

"She didn't think much of your town," responded Magee. "She intimated that it made her heavy of heart."

"H'm! It ain't much of a place," admitted the man, "though it ain't the general rule with visitors to burst into tears at sight of it. Yes, Upper Asquewan is slow, and no mistake. It gets on my nerves sometimes. Nothing to do but work, work, work, and then lay down and wait for tomorrow. I used to think maybe some day they'd transfer me down to Hooperstown—there's moving pictures and such goings on down there. But the railroad never notices you—unless you go wrong. Yes, sir; sometimes I want to clear out of this town myself."

"A natural wanderlust," sympathized Mr. Magee. "You said something just now about Baldpate inn"—

"Yes; it's a little more lively in summer, when that's open," answered the agent. "We get a lot of complaints about trunks not coming from pretty swell people too. It sort of cheers things." His eye roamed with interest over Mr. Magee's New York attire. "But Baldpate inn is shut up tight now. This is nothing but an annex to a graveyard in winter. You wasn't thinking of stopping off here, was you?"

"Well, I want to see a man named Elijah Quimby," Mr. Magee replied. "Do you know him?"

"Of course," said the yearner for pastures new. "He's caretaker of the inn. His house is about a mile out on the old Miller road that leads up Baldpate. Come outside and I'll tell you how to get there."

The two men went out into the whirling snow, and the agent waved a hand indefinitely up at the night.

"If it was clear," he said, "you could see Baldpate mountain over yonder looking down on the falls, sort of keeping an eye on us to make sure we don't get reckless. And halfway up you'd see Baldpate inn, black and peaceful and wintery. Just follow this street to the third corner and turn to your left. Elijah lives in a little house back among the trees a mile out. There's a gate you'll sure hear creaking on a night like this."

Billy Magee thanked him and, gathering up his two bags, walked up Main street. A dreary, forbidding building at the first corner bore the sign "Commercial House."

Weep no more, my lady,
Oh, weep no more today!

hummed Mr. Magee cynically under his breath and glanced up at the solitary upstairs window that gleamed yellow in the night.

At a corner on which stood a little shop that advertised "Groceries and Provisions" he paused.

"Let me see," he pondered. "The lights will be turned off, of course. Candles and a little something for the inner man in case it's the closed season for cooks."

He went inside, where a weary old woman served him.

"What sort of candles?" she inquired, with the air of one who had an infinite variety in stock. Mr. Magee remembered that Christmas was near.

"For a Christmas tree," he explained. He asked for two hundred.

"I've only got forty," the woman said. "What's this tree for—the Orphans' home?"

With the added burden of a package containing his purchases in the tiny store Mr. Magee emerged and continued his journey through the stinging snow.

"Don Quixote, my boy," he muttered, "I know how you felt when you moved on the windmills."

It was not the whir of windmills, but the creak of a gate in the storm that brought Mr. Magee at last to a stop. He walked gladly up the path to Elijah Quimby's door.

In answer to Billy Magee's gay knock, a man of about sixty years appeared. Evidently he had just finished supper. At the moment he was engaged in lighting his pipe. He admitted Mr. Magee into the intimacy of the kitchen, and took a number of calm judicious puffs on the pipe before speaking to his visitor.

"My name's Magee," blithely explained that gentleman, dragging in his bags. "And you're Elijah Quimby, of course. How are you? Glad to see you."

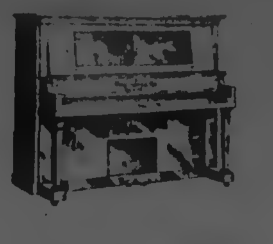
DIMINUTIVE ART PIANO

The trend of living today, especially in the larger towns and cities, is towards smaller quarters. Hence the growing number of families who seek the apartment and duplex house for a home.



The piano is a necessity in the home at all times, and the Diminutive Art Upright Piano of "Ye Olde Firme" fully meets the case.

Suited in size for the smaller room, this piano possesses all the finer qualities in tone and touch and sweet responsiveness that is exclusive to this peerless Canadian-made piano.

A NEW RULING

Commercial Teams May Compete in D. F. A. Series.

Montreal, Aug. 15.—The Dominion Football Association had a brief session last night at the Windsor Hotel at which the only business of importance was the passing of an amendment which provided for the playing of teams with commercial names. The meeting was then adjourned until today.

Under the constitution teams bearing a commercial name were barred from competition under the jurisdiction of the D.F.A. This rule was suspended for the duration of the war and at the meeting today was eliminated from the book allowing commercial teams to be members of any of the affiliated associations.

BASEBALL TO-DAY

Lindsay Here to Play Second Game of O. A. B. A. Series.

Don't miss the ball game at 3 o'clock this afternoon. Lindsay is here for the second game of the O. A.B.A. series and a good hard fought game is assured. This is an elimination series and Lindsay have to win to stay in the running and therefore they will put forth every effort to win to-day's game. The packers will be out in full strength to make their place secure and with Frost on the mound and Lefave being the bat it looks like a real ball game.

CAR, TRAIN AND PLANE RACE

Automobile Starts First in Speed Contest to State Fair.

Poliet, Ill., August 16.—In a three cornered race to the State Fair an automobile driven by Harry Ohlhaver left at 10:15; a train over the Chicago & Alton railroad departed at 11:48, and an airplane piloted by Lieut. E. M. Ackerman hopped off at 12:15. Thousands cheered as each contestant sped away for the 150 mile race.

SOUTHPAW GOLFERS IN TENTH ANNUAL

Chicago, August 16.—"Southpaw" golfers played this week at Midlothian in their tenth annual championship tournament. Despite the fact that the event has now been running for a decade, very few left-handed players have been developed in that length of time, so that the field consisted of its usual forty-odd contenders. Most of the entries were from the east and the middle west, although the event is open to "portsiders" of all clubs affiliated with the United States and Western Golf Associations.

Play was at thirty-six holes, medal competition, and the principal prize was a gold medal for the low gross score. A prize was also given, however, to the player registering the best net card. Other trophies were awarded for the best choice score of the two eighteen hole rounds, and for the low net effort in a special medal play, handicap, event at eighteen holes, arranged for those unable to compete in the forenoon round.

A "buffalo" luncheon was served at which even the waiters heaved the hash from the port side, Fateful Days.

Certain days have been marked ones in some persons' lives. Nearly all the chief events of Thomas a Becket's career, including his murder and the translation of his body—occurred on a Tuesday. Henry VIII and his three children—Edward, Mary and Elizabeth—expired upon the same day of the week—Thursday.

Spanish Literature.

While literary Spain sank into a deep slumber after the day of Cervantes and Lope de Vega, it awoke brilliantly in the latter half of the nineteenth century, presenting to the world Palacio Valdes, Perez Galdos, Jose de Pereda, Juan Valera, Echegaray and other distinguished writers.

FOUL MARS BOUT

Soldier Boxer Awarded Decision When Hit Below the Belt.

Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., Aug 16.—Floored three times in the eighth round, Walter Wheelock, the lightweight champion of the 88th division, was awarded the decision on a foul in his fight here with Clifford Leatherby of Rockford.

Leatherby charged into the soldier as Wheelock rose for the fourth time at the count of eight, but swung low and caught the Camp Dodge man below the belt. Wheelock's left leg was paralyzed by the blow, according to army physicians who examined him. The bout was scheduled for ten rounds.

Birds That Are Useful.

It is in their relation to insects and other enemies of crops that birds are most directly associated with the welfare of man. It is not possible to give a hard-and-fast rule, applicable to the whole country, as to whether any certain bird is beneficial or injurious to farmers, but in the United States department of agriculture's farmers' bulletin 630, "Some Common Birds Useful to the Farmer," more than fifty species of birds common to farming sections are discussed. The birds treated in the bulletin are: Bluebird, robin, titmouse, wren, brown thrasher, catbird, swallow, towhee, sparrow, house finch, grackle, brewer blackbird, Baltimore oriole, Bullock's oriole, meadowlark, redwing, blackbird, bobolink, crow, bluejay, Pacific coast jay, phoebe, kingbird, nighthawk, woodpecker, cuckoo and bobwhite.

Radial Tether for Animals.

To tether his cow so as to admit of its having a large feeding range, and yet so as to be perfectly secure and require no attention, a Pennsylvania man adopts the following method: He took a pole, 20 or 30 ft. in length, pivoted at one end and fitted with an iron ring large enough to slip along from end to end. The small end of the pole was supported by a light metal wheel from some old farm implement, or a wooden one cut from a piece of plank. The animal was fastened with a halter chain too short to get tangled up with the animal's legs.

The Blacker They Turn.

A letter received in this city from Roy Schultz, a Danville colored man, now in military service in France, tells of a good joke the colored boys had at the expense of the Huns. A colored division had relieved a white division during the night, when the Germans were sending over a regular shower of gas shells. The heavy fighting continued the next day, and a German prisoner taken by the colored boys was heard to remark: "We can't whip these Yanks, and there is no use trying. The more gas we send over on them the blacker they turn and the harder they fight."—Indianapolis News.

Burning Truth.

Said the facetious feller: "These golf fanatics get a lot of satisfaction out of reducin' their strokes from last season, but the real joy of life comes from bein' able to reduce the number of tons of coal from the winter before."

Tea Testing.

To ascertain whether artificial coloring matter has been added to tea, place a quantity on white paper and rub with knife to a fine powder. Now brush the paper with a brush, and if any prussian blue has been used there will be little streaks on the paper.

THE PEYOTE BEAN.

A Man Becomes Intoxicated If He Chews One.

Continent-wide attention was recently called to the intoxicating effects of the Peyote bean when Mrs. Gertrude Bonin, a noted welfare worker among the Indians of Oklahoma, appeared before the Anti-Saloon League at its convention in Washington and made a plea for the enactment of a law that would take this narcotic out of reach of the red men.

From time immemorial peyote beans have been greatly sought for and highly treasured by American Indians. The fact that the territory in which the wild cactus grows that produces this bean is confined to a limited area around Encinal, bordering the Rio Grande, has caused Indians to make annual pilgrimages there to lay in a supply of the product as long back as the early settlers of this region can remember.

In the early days representatives of the different tribes would make the long overland trip on horseback from their northern haunts to the peyote thickets and there gather with their own hands a sufficient quantity of beans to run the braves of their respective tribes through the ensuing twelve months. With the settling up of this border country the knowledge that the beans were in demand by the Indians caused local merchants of Encinal and Laredo to lay in large supplies of them each season. For a time the practice of openly shipping the product to the Indians was carried on.

Several years ago government Indian agents discovered that the Indians, especially members of the blanket tribes, were wont to go on periodical and maniacal sprees. The cause of these cases of intoxication was finally traced to the peyote bean. Up to that time the Indians had maintained that they used the beans in certain tribal rites. With the discovery that it was the source of the wildest kind of intoxication, the Government placed a ban on the sale or shipment of beans. It was then that the Indians resumed their old practice of making personal pilgrimages to the cactus fields where they gathered their own and the tribes' supply of beans.

It is claimed that no more powerful intoxicant exists than the peyote bean. One bean, when chewed, will product a state of drunkenness that has no counterpart in all of the many varieties of inebriety. In the light of present-day knowledge of the effects produced upon the mind by chewing the peyote bean, men who have made a study of Indians do not hesitate to assert that it is their belief that most of the Indian wars and raids of the years gone by were due to the indulgence in this narcotic by braves of the different tribes. It is known that hostile Indians were often in a state of frenzied intoxication when they committed their depredations and outrages upon white settlements. The peyote bean is now held to have been responsible for many of these bloody deeds

Strange to say, the peyote intoxicant has never gotten a hold upon the Mexican population of the border region or in Mexico. The Mexicans of the Encinal section have a deadly fear of the effects of the bean and it is seldom that a case of intoxication from that cause comes to the attention of the peace authorities.

Wonderful tales are told of the wild state of mind that is produced by an indulgence in the beans. Several years ago a young man from the north went to spend a vacation upon a ranch. As a joke the cowboys induced him to chew a peyote bean. Within a few minutes after he began swallowing the fluid from the bean he started on a rampage that is still discussed in awed voice by veterans of the border. Normally he was a quiet chap. No sooner had he come under the influence of the intoxicant than he grabbed a pistol out of the holster of one of the bowboys, chased all of them into a nearby building where they barred the door against him. He then mounted a horse and at breakneck speed rode into Encinal, where he took a shot at every person he met, finally driving the entire population into the stores and homes. The next step in his wild career was to start on a ride through the chaparral. Three days later he was found in an exhausted condition 160 miles away from his starting point.

EVERY MAN TO HIS TRADE

In Siberian Prison Camps Each Unfortunate Exile Followed His Vocation.

Far more popular than the church were the library and the school, a regular organized high school-college, where law, mathematics, chemistry, ten languages and many other subjects were taught. Again, this part of our work rose out of a very humble beginning. The first school was held, almost secretly, in an old washroom, and ambitious Russian guards confiscated logarithm tables and French dictionaries because they looked so suspicious. And the teacher of geometry, who made those peculiar drawings, was arrested and taken for a spy, who taught how to escape with a plan of the camp. The library was born when the first Y. M. C. A. secretary arrived and gave six or eight books which he found in his trunk to members of the head committee to read. Johan W. Prins writes in Asia magazine. The sport committee was in charge of the socker field and tennis courts and in some camps there was even a gymnasium. A small, bank was established for the convenience of those who wanted to borrow a few rubles on their official announcements from banks in Petrograd that money had been received from relatives in the central countries (by way of Sweden) and was on the way. Work shops were organized so that the tradesmen, the carpenter, the shoemaker, the barber, might turn to his trade and work for the benefit of his comrades. But the pride of the Y. M. .C. A. was the American kitchen. This welfare kitchen was necessary because the Russians never gave the men enough to eat. Here they had a chance, once in a while, to get a hearty meal for a few kopeks; here a certain number of sick and poor could eat every day without cost. How many favorable comments have I heard upon those kitchens, which really became a blessing for the prisoners!

MAN OF IMAGINATIVE MIND

Among Many Useful Inventions of Seth Boyden Was That of Popular Patent Leather.

The first "patent" leather was the invention of Seth Boyden, who was born in Foxboro, Mass., one hundred and thirty years ago. He was brought up on a farm and educated in a district school and in the village blacksmith shop, where he spent all his leisure time "tinkering" and experimenting. His first invention was a machine for making nails and files. Later he invented a machine for splitting leather, and in 1815 he engaged in the leather business in Newark, N. J. In 1816 he invented an appliance for cutting brads and in the following year he perfected his "patent" leather. The leather prepared by this process gradually became popular, and until 1831 Boyden was principally engaged in its manufacture. He then turned his attention to steam engines, and made several improvements in locomotives. He took part in the California gold rush of '49, but soon returned to New Jersey, where he engaged in farming and produced a variety of strawberries vastly superior to any then known in both size and quality. He died in 1870, and his memory is perpetuated by a statue at Newark.

Rusty Steel.

To clean rusty steel, well oil the rusty parts and set aside in this state for two or three days. Then wipe dry with clean rags and polish with emery or pumice stone. When very rusty and a high polish is desired rub the article with a little slack lime.

Co-operation Imperative.

Why not consider the helplessness of a man who thinks he can do everything alone? How much headway can one man make in cutting down a forest and building a city? There must be co-operation with other men.

RATIFYING TREATIES.

Great Democracies Have Different Methods.

The British method of ratifying treaties differs from that of the other democracies that took part in the war. It may surprise some persons to learn that the French and the Italians have a more representative system than either Great Britain or the United States.

According to British custom a treaty may be proclaimed by the Government without the approval of either House of Parliament. In 1911, discussing the same questions raised as to an international treaty amending the rules of warfare at sea, known as the Declaration of London, Sir Edward Grey told the House of Commons: "I have already stated in answer to a supplementary question, asked on 18th November, 1910, that the consent of Parliament is constitutionally not necessary to the ratification of the Declaration of London." He added, however: "But, as is well known, no Government would advise his majesty to ratify a convention against the declared opinion of the House of Commons."

In the House of Lords, in 1911, Viscount Morley of Blackburn, speaking on the same subject, said: "There is a great state in which the treaty-making power is divided between the executive and the Legislature, but I am not sure that those who have to deal with that great and most friendly community always find that an advantage, and I think you will be introducing a very dangerous principle or maxim into our constitution if ou impair the treaty-making right now vested in and practiced by the crown."

Lloyd George nevertheless submitted to Parliament both the Treaty of Versailles and the tripartite alliance treaty recently signed by France, Great Britain and the United States. They were both approved, although they could have been proclaimed without such action.

The French constitution requires treaties of peace and certain other classes of treaties to be laid before the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies for action. The lower House, which is by far the more powerful branch of the French Parliament, will take the lead in discussing the German treaty. A majority in either branch may amend or reject.

The Italian constitution also provides for the approval of treaties by both legislative branches. The lower House at Rome greatly overshadows the Senate. Much more than the French Chamber it is the Government. The Italian Parliament will probably delay action on the treaty with Germany until after the Austrian, Hungarian and Turkish treaties are completed. Italy's interests are only slightly affected by the settlement with Germany. They will be vitally affected by the terms of the later settlements.

In Japan, as in Great Britain, the treaty-making power is vested exclusively in the crown. If the Japanese Parliament is allowed to pass on the treaties ending the war it will be only as a matter of imperial courtesy.

The treaty-making power in the United States is vested in the President and the Senate. The popular branch of Congress—the House of Representatives—has no voice in the ratification of conventions with foreign powers. But, on the other hand, it can annul them in whole or in part by refusing to pass legislation carrying them into effect or by passing legislation in conflict with their provisions.

The Senate is the only check on the President in the United States scheme of treaty making. And the Senate's influence on the process is enhanced by the fact that the draft of a treaty submitted by the executive must be approved by two-thirds of the Senators present instead of by a mere majority.

Frozen Lake in Africa.

It is a wonderful lake far off in the heart of Africa, where the sun blazes sublimely and causes the water to evaporate so quickly that an outlet is considered by nature to be a superfluity—a lake like our Great Salt Lake, where the inflowing waters have unloaded common salt for so long a period that the saturation point has been passed.

But there is a difference in the material deposited. The soil through which the African streams flow is different from ours, and hence, instead of finding common salt or sodium chloride in the Magadi Lake, a chemical test shows us the presence of sodium carbonate (kitchen soda). Moreover, the sodium carbonate is crystallized into a solid mass—or in other words, is frozen.

Different substances solidify or freeze at different temperatures. Think of a lake sixteen miles long and four miles wide, frozen under the torrid glare of the African sun. Wonderful, isn't it—and yet, absolutely true.

It is a wild, uncivilized country in which this lake is located. Here and there may be seen the three-toed footprints of a stray rhinoceros that has labored through the alkaline soil. The country is being improved, however. The lake is in British East Africa, 252 miles west of Mombasa.—Popular Science.

GET BEHIND YOUR PAPER

Mr. E. Trowern, the Dominion Secretary of the Retailers' Merchants Association, in speaking at Carleton Place the other evening said: "It is the small town newspaper that is going to save this country," noting that the large city dailies were so tied up to the departmental stores and the big interests that only through the town newspapers could the people look for fair treatment. "Get behind them," he said, "and don't be afraid to advertise. They depend on you almost wholly for their support."

CHURCHMAN WELL KNOWN RESIGNS

CANON DIXON, RETIRED, HAS OFFICIATED IN PETERBOROUGH.

Prominent Toronto churchmen were startled yesterday by the news that Canon Hilliard C. Dixon, one of the most widely known clergymen in Canada had resigned from his pulpit in Little Trinity Church, King street east, after thirteen years' service. Trinity Church is the oldest church building in Toronto, having just celebrated its 76th anniversary.

Canon Dixon stated that his resignation had been given to the wardens and the only thing that would induce him to stay in the church was a direct command from the Bishop.

Since the war he has been at work in his parish for an average of sixteen hours a day and his arduous duties have been amplified by a commission which gave him the rank of major in the Canadian forces. He has met almost every troops train which has brought returning veterans to Toronto and has organized the largest Sunday School in Canada. He had 552 children in attendance last Sunday and considers that pretty good for the middle of August.

Bishop Sweeney is summering at Niagara and has wired for Canon Dixon to come and see him.

Canon Dixon gives as a reason for his resignation a misunderstanding with one or two former wardens. This has somewhat marred the unanimous spirit which has characterized his long and arduous service in Little Trinity.

GIRL WITT FOUR ARMS AND LEGS

BORN AT ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL, BROOKLYN — WILL LIVE.

New York, Aug. 16.—A girl baby with four arms and four legs was born at St. Marys' hospital, Brooklyn last night to Mrs. Mary Pietrafesa, of No. 1704 East New York avenue, Brooklyn.

Dr. De Janis, who attended at the birth told a newspaper man today that the mother and child are in excellent condition and that there is no reason why the baby should not grow up.

The extra legs are attached just above the normal ones " he said, "and the extra arms are just below the normal ones. All four of the extra limbs are of normal size and shape."

RETAILERS ASK INVESTIGATION

Brandon Merchants Resent the Charge That They Are Profiteers.

Brandon, Aug. 15.—At a session of the Manitoba Retail Merchants' Association, a resolution was passed in which it was declared the Federal Government and other investigations had shown conclusively that retail merchants as a class have not made unfair profits, but that, to the contrary, it had been revealed that enormous profits had been made by many other classes "much nearer the source of supply."

It, therefore, appears the resolution continues, that High Co Living Commissioner Dr. R. J. McFall in making his charges is diverting and confusing the minds of the consuming public on the real cause of the trouble. It concluded with the urgent request that the newly-appointed Board of Commerce fully consider the question as it applies to the retailer at the earliest possible date.

CALL BIG STRIKE

Serious Situation Has Arisen in Pernambuco.

Rio Janeriro, Aug. 16.—Despatches from Pernambuco state that a general strike has been declared there and that the situation is considered serious. The strike comes at a time when the state is preparing for the election of a governor.

Interborough Rapid Transit Co., which operates the subway and elevated lines in the Borough of Manhattan, has granted a general wage increase of 10 per cent.

Cost of living in Mexico has increased 192 per cent during the last nine [illegible]. Greatest increase is in staple products, with lard advancing 525 per cent, sugar 233 and eggs 266.

DURING the last few years people have had to be content with many lines of goods that were inferior in quality to those procurable before the war.

To-day, people are demanding the better grades again. Those who from a mistaken idea of economy tried to be satisfied with common teas are coming back to Red Rose Tea. They realize that they cannot be satisfied with anything less than Red Rose Quality.

And Red Rose probably will cost them no more than common tea, because Red Rose not only tastes better—it goes farther.

RELIEF SOCIETY DISBANDS

Organization at Whitby Put in Five Strenuous Years.

Whitby, Aug. 15.—The Whitby War Relief Society, after five years of strenuous work has disbanded. Reports presented by the treasurer and secretary revealed that during the five years of war the total money raised by the society was $13,785.14 all but $363.80 of which was expended for supplies to be sent overseas or in other ways for patriotic purposes. The sum on hand will be devoted to the Whitby memorial to be erected to those who served in the war. The magnitude of the work accomplished is a matter of pride and amazing to the citizens of the town in view of the comparative smallness of the number of women engaged in the activities of the society. The president, Mrs. J. E. Willis, was presented with an illuminated address in appreciation of her untiring energy as head of the society since its inception.

STOPPED GAMES OF CHANCE

Chief of Police Tom Groves has closed five of the games of chance being run in connection with the Victory shows brought to Chatham under the patronage of the Great War Veterans. The shows were located on Tecumseh Park, where large crowds are in attendance. The chief has also stipulated that the tents must all be closed up by 11.30 in the evening. At present they are running until the early hours of the morning. The shows will remain here for the rest of the week when they will move on to another city.

NO CASES OF RELIEF FROM CITY

Although nothing can be fortold yet as to the future the labor conditions in the city are good at the present time. Nobody is getting relief from the city except widows and a few cases of hardship through sickness. MUST MAINTAIN HER INTERNATIONAL TRADE OR BRITAIN CANNOT PROSPER

Imperative to Add to Exports and Lessen Imports, Declares Premier Lloyd George—Labor Conditions Improved, Only 350 Thousand of Three Million Men Demobolized Not Absorbed in Industrial Occupation.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, August 18. — Great public interest in Premier Lloyd George's expected declarations on vital labor and economic questions in the House of Commons today attracted crowds to the House of Parliament. Virtually every member of the House of Commons was in his seat when the Speaker took his chair. The lobbies, the galleries and the outside courts were crowded when the members of the Ministry arrived.

Trade Relations.

Premier Lloyd George, when he appeared in the House of Commons, announced that it was his intention, in his address, to deal only with Great Britain's trade relations and her industrial position, including the coal mining problems. Many members said they expected the Premier to announce the Government's plan for Ireland, and expressed disappointment that this subject was not to be discussed by Lloyd George.

Must Add To Exports.

"We cannot prosper," Lloyd George, "even exist, without recovering and maintaining our international trade. We must bring up our tarde balance, adding to our exports and lessening our imports."

Adverse Trade Balance.

The recent great war cost forty billion pounds, Premier Lloyd George declared in his speech in the House of Commons today on the financial and industrial situation. Most of this sum was spent for purposes of destruction, the Premier asserted, and changing from war to peace conditions would take just as long as the chance from peace to war. The first outstanding fact of the present situation was an alarming adverse trade balance.

Manufacturers' Opportunity.

The import restrictions, which will terminate September 1, the Premier continued, had given British manufacturers an opportunity of making and dealing in goods which otherwise would have been hurried here from foreign countries.

The Premier also said that before the war imports had exceeded exports from the United Kingdom, and Great Britain has to pay back an adverse trade balance of eight hundred million pounds.

Labor Conditions.

Labor conditions in the United Kingdom, Lloyd George added, have improved, and of three million six hundred thousand men demobilized only three hundred and fifty thousand have not been absorbed in industries.

PREMIER SIR ROBERT BORDEN CANNOT PARTICIPATE IN RECEPTION TO PRINCE

His Ankle Severely Sprained, Will Have to Keep to His Bed Several Days—Impossible to Use Foot

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Halifax, N. S., August 18.—Sir Joseph Pope announced today that Sir Robert Borden will be unable to participate in any functions arranged in honor of teh Prince of Wales until Quebec is reached, at least.

Injury Serious.

The injury sustained by the Premier, when he slipped and sprained his ankle, is more serious than was at first supposed. The limb has been severely strained, and Sir Robert has been ordered to keep to his bed for several days. He got up and attempted to dress this morning, but found it impossible to use his foot, and went back to bed again.

BRITAIN'S NATIONAL DEBT HAS GRWWN TO 7,8000,000 POUNDS

Pensions Cost the Government Hundred Million Pounds Yearly—At Present Production Shows Decrease in All but Agriculture.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, August 18. — Great Britain's national debt, owing to the war, has grown from six hundred and forty-one million pounds sterling to seven billion eight hundred millions, said Premier Lloyd George in the Commons today.

Pensions have cost the government one hundred million pounds yearly.

The Premier declared that if the country continued in the way it was going, its adverse trade balance would be one billion pounds, compared with one hundred and fifty millions before the war. The remedy, he said, was increased production. At present, production had decreased in everything but agriculture.

MEXICAN BANDITS CAPTURE AVIATORS

HOLD AMERICAN OFFICERS FOR FIFTEEN THOUSAND RANSOM.

HALIFAX PRESENTS GEN. CURRIE WITH AN ADDRESS OF WELCOME

Canada's Distinguished Military Hero, Who Arrived in Canada Yesterday, Also Receives Piece of Silver Plate.

Halifax, N.S., Aug. 18.—Gneral Sir Arthur Cirrie, who commanded the Canadian troops in France, arrived here Sunday on the Cunard liner Caronia. He was met by military, naval and city officials. At the railway station General Currie was presented with an adrdess of welcome on behalf of the citizens of Halifax. This was accompanied by a piece of silver plate bearing the Nova Scotia coat of arms and a suitable inscription. After the presentation he took a special train for Ottawa.

The address presented to General Currie by the citizens of Halifax was as foloiws

To Lieutenant General Sir Arthur Currie, G.C.M.G., K.C.B., Commanding the Canadian Army Corps.

Sir. On behalf of the corporation and the citizens of the city of Halifax and as expressing the sentiment of the province of Nova Scotia and the whole Canadian public we extend to you the warmest welcome on your victorious return to the shores of the Dominion.

Our country counts itself hapyp in having secured among its own citizens one so eminently qualified for the highest position of command in the Canadian corps, pervlously held by British officers of disitinguished merit.

Braved Responsibilities

. . . . Braved Responsibilities . . . . .

Enormous as were the responsibilities of your post, they have been bravely and skilfully borne, and we congratulate you on securing alike the affection and confidence of your officers and the admiration of the officers, the loyalty to your soldiers, and the admiration of the whole body of your fellow citizens at home.

The devotion with which you performed your duties, the thoroughness with which the completed your preparations, the spirit of hope with which you inspired the troops and the extraordinary succession of victories that crowned your effort have won for you our deepest gratitude and a lasting name in the records of our country.

As, step by stey, you were promoted to position of increasing responsibility you never lost sympathy nor regard for the men in the ranks; and your singularly happy faculty of stimulating the power of initiative of both officers and men, was no small factor in securing the reputation that our brave Canadians have achieved overseas.

Extend Felicitations

We congratulate you on the recognition you have received from His Majesty the King and from such eminent soldiers as Marshal Foch and Field Marshal Haig. We extend our felicitations to Lady Currie and we ask you to accept the accompanying gift as a memento of the community which first had the honor of welcoming you from overseas.

Halifax, N.S., August, 11919

In his reply to the address Gen. Currie said it was hard to find words to adequately thank the citizens of Halifax for their kindness. He felt so keenly on returning, that somehow the words to tell of it did not seem to come. Of one thing he was sure, that home in Canada, he would be able to renew the associations and coradeships of four years of war. These could never be forgotten.

CYCLE CONSTABLE SHOT AND KILLED

MURDERER "JACK" HAS ESCAPED

Jumped on Dead Constable's Motor Cycle and Made a Clean and Quick Getaway.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Buffalo, N. Y., August 18.—Albert S. Kashaum, motor cycle policeman, was shot dead by one of two automobile thieves while he was taking them to the North Tonawanda police station early today.

One of the men, H. B. Judge, of Niagara Falls, is under arrest. His companion, known as "Jack," who is alleged to have killed the officer, escaped on the policemans motor cycle.

PROTEST AGAINST OUTSIDER

Farmers of Glengarry Are Opposed to Hon. Mackenzie King.

Cornwall, Aug. 18.—At a meeting held under the auspices of the United Farmers of Ontario at St. Andrew's for the purpose of selecting delegates from Cornwall township to the convention to be held at Alexandria on August 20 to nominate farmer candidates for the Dominion Parliament, and for Glengarry for the Ontario Legislature. The speakers referred to rumors regarding an invitation of the Liberal organization to Hon Mackenzie King to run as candidate, and said they would resent any attempt to bring in an outsider. In the event of such an agreement being carried out it was declared that the United Farmers would stand together, and they were confident they could elect a farmer candidate.

DENTAL SURVEY SCHOOL CHILDREN

Systematic Examination of Little Ones, Teeth Assisted by Dept. Of Education

WHAT IS PETERBOROUGH DOING?

Some School Boards Vote Appropriation in This Prospect and Give Free Dental Service

Some time ago the Department of Education inaugurated what is termed a dental survey for public schools with a view to provinding better care of the teeth of school children.

Dr. Neal introduced this matter to Peterborough's Board of Education, who, however did not then seem very keen on the subject, which was, however, referred to the Board's Supervision Committee, and there it rests, without any concrete movement in regard to a project of the greatest importance resulting so far. But perhaps with the resumption of the Board of Education meetings in September, the public will be informed just where Peterborough stands in regard to either taking advantage of the depatment's provision for teeth examination or establishing a permanent local inspection as has been done in some school districts.

The Department of Education appointed for such a survey a Provincial Supervising Dentist and some nurses, while subsequently the regular dental practicioners throughout the Province volunteered their assistance. In some places the authorities have availed themselves of this offer, while in others provision for the work had already been made through the official channels. The report from Hamilton states that the dentists of the city have consented to make the dental survey of the school children of the city, but as the management committee of the Board of Education passed a resolution providing for an inspection, the gratuitous services of the members of the profession will not be needed. The Department has expressed its appreciation of the offer of the dentists.

In Fort William the Board of Education has placed in the estimates the sum of $2,000 for the establishment of a permanent system of dental inspection and treatment. A dentist has been appointed to give free dental service for the school children of Windsor and Walkerville. Brantford has a permanent inspection and the officials report that the work shows great promise.

But Position of Bolsheviki is Growing Worse Daily

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 18.—A decree declaring Admiral Kolchak and his all-Russian Cabinet at Omsk to be outlaws, has been issued by the Soviet Government, according to a wireless message received from Moscow.

Admiral Kolchak and officers commanding the forces of his government in Siberia are declared to be subject to immediate arrest.

End of Bolshevism.

London, Aug. 17.—Reuter learns that the position of the Bolshevist Government in Russia is daily becoming more serious and precarious. The events in Budapest and the dramatic fall of Bela Kun there have exercised the most demoralizing influence in the ranks of the Bolshevists. Conferences of the various parties have been summoned by Lenine to meet in Moscow and by Rakivsky at Kieff in order to discuss the necessary measures to be adopted to bolster up the Soviet regime.

The Bolshevik troops are being hard pressed by Denikine's army which has already reached the line extending north of Poltava, while a number of well organized regiments of peasants are conducting an offensive against the general encircling movement beyond Revlo.

BOLSHEVILI DRIVEN FROM ODESSA

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 18.—Bolsheviki have been driven from Odessa, the most important point in the Black Sea, by the populace of the city, according to reports received by the British War Office.

It is reported also that the Soviet forces are vacating Kieva and the entire Ukraine.

HIGH PRICES AT BRANTFORD

Predicted That Potatoes Will Soon be Five Dollars a Bag

Brantford, Aug. 18. A dollar a basket was asked by local marketmen on Saturday for potatoes, with the reassuring announcement following that this winter potatoes would bring five dollars a bag almost as high as the war famine year when the city acted as a middleman to bring the price down from the extreme level to which it had been forced by district producers. Eggs went up to 55 cents and a dollar a dozen is predicted as the winter price. Tomatoes are 65 cents a basket, three times the normal price.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING

House Owned by L. K. Brown Damaged—Turner's Flag-staff Hit.

Considerable damage was done in the city by the storm last evening; several houses were struck by lightning, but no fires resulted.

One of the houses most seriously damaged was that occupied by T. K. Brown, 277 John St., Lightning struck the house on the ridge board scattering fragments of wood on the street and breaking the front room window. Mr. Brown was in the house at the time it was struck, but was neither hurt nor stunned.

The flag staff on the Turner building was struck and completely shattered. This was a narrow escape from a serious fire.

MR. COYNE PASSES EXAMS.

George A. Mr. Coyne has secured a position on the staff of the High school at Campbellford, for the duties of which he is eminently qualified.

PRINCE OF WALES RIDES THROUGHT MILES OF GAILY DECORATED STS. AT HALIFAX

Guns at For. Boom Forth Royal Salute as His Royal Highness Stepped Off Marble Step Which Marked the landing of Late King Edward July 30, 1860—Prince Inspected the Guards of Honor.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Halifax, Aug. 18.—The Prince of Wales was given an enthusiastic welcome by the Province of Nova Scotia when he left the dock yards this morning and subsequently drive in the procession through three miles of gaily decked streets lined with veterans of the great war to the provincial buildings.

Guns Boomed Salute.

As he stepped off the marble slab which marked the landing of the late King Edward VII. on July 30, 1860, he royal standard was broken from the landing stage masthead, the bank of the Royal Canadian Grrisson artillery played the National Anthem, and guns of the citadel boomed out a royal salute. The Prince remained standing at salute, until the National Anthem had been concluded, and then greeted many provincial, civic and other authorities. Sir Robert Borden was not present owing to his injured ankle.

Inspected Guards.

The Prince then inspected the guards of honor, which had been supplied by the Royal Canadian Garrison artillery, stopping to chat with several of the men who wore decorations.

Gaily Decorated Route.

The streets along the line of route were gaily decorated with flags and bunting, and were densely thronged with people. The Prince looked remarkably well, and had greeting for all that charmed everyone. He drove through the area devastated by the explosion of 1917.

Formal Reception.

The Prince of Wales stepped ashore at the dock yards from H.M.S. "Renown" at ten o'clock this morning to the booming of a royal salute from the citadel. After a formal reception and inspection of the guard of honor supplied by the Royal Canadian Garrison artillery he proceeded to the provincial buildings.

At Legislative Buildings.

His Royal Highness, accompanied by provincial and civic authorities, proceeded at once to the Legislative buildings where addresses of loyalty and congratulation, similar to those presented last week at St. John, were read.

Enthusiastic Loyalty.

The Prince replied with a suitable and well accepted speech and the whole proceedings here today were marked by great demonstrations of enthusiastic loyalty on the part of the people.

"KEEP OFF THE CORNS."

SOME ONE WRITES to a contemporary protesting against children running their "kiddie cars" on the sidewalk. Such a pastime, says the writer, is a standing—or is it locomotive?—menace to every unfortunate pedestrian whose feet are afflicted with corns.

This is as heartless a propaganda as "keep off the grass." A city establishes parks presumably as playgrounds for the juveniles, and then limits their use of these breathing places to the cinder paths. Peterborough should be disposed to encourage the rearing of healthy children rather than the raising of either corns or grass.

COPPERHEAD CONSERVATIVES.

THE TERM "copperhead" was applied to those residents of the northern states who during the Civil War sympathised with the cause of the South and held that the anti-slavery party was flying in the face of an all-wise Providence in taking up arms to save the Union from disruption. The term can be aptly used to describe those members of the Conservative party who are avowedly hostile to the Ontario Premier, Sir William Hearst. There are such grouches not only in private life, but among the Conservative contingent in the Legislature. One of the most recent of the former class to break into the limelight is Mr. F. D. Moore, K.C., county magistrate, whose home is in Lindsay, and who is described as a prominent Conservative. Mr. Moore was the other day interviewed by the representative of the Toronto Globe, who is making a tour of the Province to gather some idea of the sentiment of the voters with regard to prohibition. The opinions of Mr. Moore are set forth in the Globe as follows:

> He (Mr. Moore) came out with the remark that "Hearst would get a black eye from the party when he came up for election." He proceeded to explain: Hearst, he said, had gone in to follow the policies of Sir James Whitney, and these policies included sale by license. But Hearst had immediately gone and put through prohibition, for which he had no mandate from the party. "But it was a war-time measure, wasn't it?" was the query put to the magistrate. Mr. Moore didn't think so. He figured that it was a general law passed without any pressure from war conditions.
>
> Passing from political subjects and prophecies, Mr. Moore went on to give prohibition a dig. As county magistrate he didn't think the Act had done anything but get a lot of private stills in operation. He also gave the opinion that the prohibition people were "a fringe on one end and the hard drinkers a fringe on the other; between the two were the great mass of sane people who could handle liquor."
>
> "Why should we have to suffer for these unfits (the hard drinkers)?" said Mr. Moore. "Let them go on and drink; they'll drink themselves to death." This was Nature's way of disposing of the unfit, to which class the drinkers were relegated. Turning the others into being their brothers' keepers, in Mr. Moore's opinion, would result in them using "dope" of all kinds, and would see "one-half of the Province in asylums and the other half keeping them."

Mr. Moore is right when he says that Premier Hearst was placed at the head of the party to follow the policies of the late Sir James Whitney. The entire trend of Sir James' policy with regard to temperance was in the direction of total prohibition. He tightened the regulations affecting the sale by license, shortened the hours during which bars could be kept open, and closed those bars entirely on certain days of the year, Good Friday included. Sir James Whitney assured the people that he would give them total prohibition just as soon as they supplied him with a mandate.

Before that mandate was given Sir James Whitney had passed away. No one who understands the integrity of the late Premier doubts for a moment that he would have acted otherwise than Sir William Hearst did when nearly ninety per cent. of the people of Ontario demanded war-time prohibition. If the monster petitions sent to the Legislature did not constitute a mandate, it would be interesting to hear Mr. Moore's idea as to what would be a popular expression of opinion sufficiently strong to authorize legislative action.

Mr. Moore is clearly under a misconception when he says that the Ontario Temperance Act was not a war-time measure. It was so understood by the people and by the Government. The Legislature unanimously enacted that it should continue in operation for the duration of the war. With the return of peace the people were to be given a chance to say whether or not that Act was to be perpetuated. In every sense and on all counts Sir William Hearst has kept faith with the people. He has demonstrated that he is a leader who has regard for his pledge.

The gloomy prophecy of Mr. Moore with regard to the use of dope in the event of prohibition is hardly justified. Traffic in that variety of drugs is just as restricted now as the sale of liquor will be if the referendum is carried.

The North won the war with the South, the copperheads notwithstanding. Premier Hearst will be sustained in spite of the defection with which the Lindsay magistrate has associated himself.

STATE CONTROL OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

TWO OF THE QUESTIONS that will appear on the referendum ballot have to do with the sale of liquor under government control. The first of these is, "Are you in favor of the sale of intoxicating beer in government agencies?" The other reads, "Are you in favor of the sale of all kinds of spirituous and malt liquors in government agencies?"

The idea of state control of the liquor traffic originated in the State of South Carolina, and the late Senator Tillman was the father of the movement when he was governor of that State prior to his election to the Senate. Government agencies, or dispensaries as they were called, took the place of the open bars in such municipalities as were not under local option. A state commission was appointed to purchase stocks for these dispensaries, the idea being that none but pure goods should be handled. The dispensaries were permitted to remain open from sunrise to sunset, the hours that mark the limits of the working day in that state, where labor unions are unknown and where slavery has been abolished only in theory. The amount of liquor that any person could buy at a time was limited, and none could make more than one purchase in a single day. Those in charge of the dispensaries were government officials. They worked on a salary and had no financial interest in pushing the sales. Every sale, with the name of the purchaser, was recorded in a book open to public inspection at any time, so that every man was able to ascertain the practical views of his neighbors on the temperance question. This provision of the law was supposed to do away with the hypocrisy of secret drinking. Another rigid enactment was that no liquor should be consumed on the premises where obtained.

The law was a disappointment to its supporters. It was found that there was more liquor consumed than under the open bar system. Men simply bought their supplies by the bottle instead of by the glass. A room near the dispensary was often secured, and in this the convivial held high carnival.

But it was the deadly graft, that bane of public control, that really did for the dispensary finally and effectually. It was found that the purchasing commission were in the pay of the distillers and brewers, who allowed them commissions on all purchases. A monopoly of the sales soon passed into the hands of a few enterprising manufacturers, who were then in a position to foist upon the drinking public cheaper goods than could be disposed of before when competition was general. Senator Tillman acknowledged the defeat of his favoirte measure by which he hoped to make a commonwealth temperate in the use of intoxicating beverages, and went to his grave disappointed in his life work.

Some of the western provinces introduced the dispensary idea as the first remedy for sumptuary conditions that were becoming a menace to the community. In view of the two questions quoted above from the referendum ballot to be placed in the hands of the electors of Ontario, it is especially significant that the western provinces, after an experiment, are abandoning the government agencies and introducing total prohibition.

ROOSEVELT'S SIX-CENT VERDICT.

HENRY FORD is not the first American of note to be awarded a six cents verdict by a jury in a Michigan court in a suit for libel. Ex-President Roosevelt shared the same fate under parallel conditions.

During the arduous three-cornered fight for the presidency in 1912, the late ex-President, being one of the contestants, a Michigan editor accused Col. Roosevelt of drunkenness, a charge for which there was not a shadow of foundation. Col. Roosevelt sued the paper for libel, asking for heavy nominal damages. A long trial was the result, and in the evidence the ex-President attained his objective and was completely vindicated. The removal of the cloud from his reputation was all he asked. He did not seek monetary redress, and acting on this hint the jury brought in a verdict for six cents damages. This saddled the defendant with the costs of the suit, and the finding was accepted by the plaintiff without a murmur.

INCOME OF FARMER AND FAMILY $318

Arguing that there is danger that the attention given demands of city folk for a reduction of the high cost of living may result in an injury to the interests of farmers, a statement setting forth the situation from the farmers' viewpoint was issued by the American Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The statement has the indorsement of the National Board of Farm Organizations and the National Grange. A change in the method of grading wheat is demanded.

The statement says, in part:

"Julius H. Barnes, of the United States Grain Corporation, openly states his policy to resell wheat, curtail our foreign shipments and use the resale of advances. The result of such policy, together with the manipulation of a system of grades and standards has been to reduce materially the farmer's income and to deny him access to a free market where he can secure actual cost of production.

"It has placed the city consumer in a position where he is now eating bread produced by the labor of the men, women and children of the farms of this country in making up the cost sheet of production.

"We believe city people should know that the average annual labor income of the farmer, including that of his wife and children, as shown by the last Federal census was only $318.22. They should know that, owing to manipulation in administering the grades and standards, together with the damage done by hot weather to the maturing crops, the winter wheat producers are receiving as low as $1.15 per bushel for their wheat—not the $2.05 which Mr. Barnes gives as a theoretical average, and that this year's crop may average not over $1.50 per bushel net.

"In the production of wheat, as in other crops, labor enters in the last analysis as the chief item of cost, and city people should realize that the effort that is being made by the authority of the Government to restrict or still further reduce the price at the farm must inevitably lead to denying the farmer living wages.

"What has been said in detail relative to the wheat situation applies in general to every farm product, and while we again express our approval of every reasonable effort to reduce the cost of necessaries we wish also to emphasize that care must be taken to safeguard the farmers' labor costs.

"We at this time shall insist on a change in the wheat standards so as not to penalize every grower of wheat. Hundreds of millions of bushels of wheat have been shriveled by extreme heat this season which under the present grading and discount rules may not average the producer $1.00 per bushel.

"Authoritative investigators have found such wheat to be of the highest milling value and it is unthinkable that farmers should sustain a loss of from 50 to 75 cents per bushel by reason of the arbitrary standards that have been established. This wheat in large measure will go into the production of the best patent flours and be sold to the consuming public at prices based on No. 1 wheat. The producers are thereby defrauded and the consumers receive no benefit."

An Eye to Business.

He had been fishing patiently for several hours without a bite, when a small urchin strolled up.

"Any luck, mister?" he called out.

"Run away, boy," growled the angler, in gruff tones.

"No offence, sir," said the boy, as he walked away, "only I just wanted to say that my father keeps a fish-shop down to the right, sir."

Some Ideal.

"My ideal husband," said the girl who had been reading novelettes, "must be a strong, silent man, full of grit, and able to bear the heat and burden of the day without flinching; one who will not hear a word said about me, and will never utter a word against me himself."

"What you want," answered her friend, "is a deaf and dumb coal-heaver."

"Not long ago," he said, "I knew a lady who had a tabby cat."

"Nothing new in that!" snapped the fair man.

"No, but she called at the stores one morning and ordered some oatmeal, candles, soap and a halfpennyworth of cat's-meat."

The fair man was not interested.

"Yes," continued the other, "and the order had to be delivered three miles away. Well, before the goods actually left the shop in came a servant girl in a terrible stew.

"'Missus's things gone yet?' she said.

"'No; not yet' replied the grocer.

"'Then don't send the cat's-meat that was ordered,' gasped the girl. 'The tabby has just caught a bird!'"

The fair man gave in.

EDITOR'S MAIL

THE CHURCH AND THE NEGRO

Editor Review: Noticing your very strong bias in favor of prohibition would you mind publishing the following.

CITIZEN.

The article which "Citizen" encloses and which he clipped from the pages of The Literary Digest, is as follows:

"The negro problem, so startlingly emphasized by the recent race riots in Washington and Chicago, is increasingly engaging the attention of the religious press. Noting that these riots occurred after prohibition was in force, and therefore presumably could not be chared against alcoholic intoxication, the Philadelphia Presbyterian sees in them a challenge to the Christian Church. Such rioting, it affirms, 'is a loud call to the Church to do her duty and fulfil her commission'—it is a reminder that 'our whole civilization has suffered and is suffering from a disregard of God's truth and law.'"

THE MIRACULOUS STOVE

If only the world lasts long enough, our inventors will discover cures for all our present trials and troubles.

One of the most astonishing productions which we are shortly to see is a stove that works something along the lines of an alarm clock, and does your cooking for you while you shop, or visit, or go joy-riding.

This stove is worked by electricity, the heat being stored by the device used in the thermos bottles. Thus, all the heat is kept inside, and the outside of the stove is cool whether the current is turned on or off.

But the real beauty of the stove is this: Suppose you want to put in vegetables, a joint, and a pudding during the morning, go out for the day, and return at seven, to find them all ready at the identical moment.

First of all, you wind the clock for the vegetables, according to the length of time required for cooking. While you are out, the clock turns the heat on and off at the required times, and by regulating the joint and the pudding clocks in the same way, all three dishes, requiring different times of cooking, will be ready and awaiting you simultaneously.

This sounds like a dream, but it is not. This wonderful stove, as a matter of fact, is already upon the American market.

Following the establishment of the New Writers' Union at Boston, with a minimum wage scale of $38 a week, the Boston American, a Hearst paper, discharged 12 men from the editorial force, some of whom had just returned from overseas.

Opponents of the League of Nations in the U.S. Senate want to know why Great Britain gets six votes in the league to one for the U.S., and they assert this dominance and Shantung were "bribes" President Wilson paid for the support of Great Britain and Japan.

TO-DAY'S STORY

An American colonel in France was having difficulty with his safe. It was the headquarters safe. Its locks had jammed and none of his staff could open it. While they were struggling with it a negro sergeant came up to them apologetically. "Cul'n'l," he said, "if Ah ain't intrudin' into this heah difficuty, Ah believes, sah, dat Ah might h'p you. Ah suggest Co'p'l Hall." "Corporal Hall? Why Corporal Hall?" "Co'p'l Hall," the sergeant explained under his voice, "was fo' foah years a buglah." They sent for Corporal Hall and Corporal Hall opened the safe. "Well, sergeant," the colonel said, "I'm glad to know about Corporal Hall. I wish I'd known it sooner. It would have saved us a lot of time with that safe. And tell me, sergeant—in case we may need to call on you some day—in what direction do your particular talents lie?" "Cul'n'l," the sergeant answered, "Ah doan' want to tell no lies. Standin' as Ah does daily in de presence of mah Maker, mos' doubtless Ah doan' want to tell no lies. But if de time comes when Ah kin he'p yah, sah, Ah'll make a full an' free confession; a full an' free confession, sah."

WALTZ AGAIN VOGUE

The waltz is coming once according to the editor of the "Dancing Times," who, however, sees no revival for the minuet and the pavane. "The hesitation waltz is returning, and it is not a very pronounced hesitation. At many dances every third dance is a waltz, and in the fox-trot and one-step, a great many dancers use the waltz as their two-step, but I don't think there is the remotest chance of the minuet coming back. It is impossible to do it in modern trousers. It is essentially a costume dance. A man has to go through many graceful actions with his hands, too, and he requires lace frills to his sleeves and a lace handkerchief and ruffles.

"The pavane is an older dance still. It is a court dance, and came from Spain, getting its name from the Latin work for peacock, and conveying an idea of struting. It is a very stately dance, and cloaks were much used when it was in vogue; so the same reason would prevent this dance from coming into fashion again." The opinion of dancing instructors generally may be summed up as follows: "Not in these trousers; in knee breeches frills, and silk hose, if you like." As long as we wear standard "reach-me-downs" we must dance modern standard dances.

THE PRICE OF RADIUM

Before the war an ounce of radium could be bought for about $2,125,000. The present price is anything over $3,380,000. Already no less than $22,500,000 has been spent by different nations in an endeavor to procure radium in large quantities, but as yet there is not quite two pounds of the priceless substance in the world.

To produce this two pounds, more than five thousand tons of uranium had to be mined, and as the cost of handling the ore works out at no less than $2,000 a ton, it will easily be seen what enormous difficulties have to be encountered to procure the smallest amount of radium.

Radium salt is a recent discovery, and is only a little inferior to pure radium, and costs $1,600,000 an ounce.

Valuable radiolite watches are coated with greatly adulterated radium salts, and one gramme of these salts will provide burning material, or radiolite as it is called, for 156,000 watches.

The life of these salts is estimated to last for 3,520 years. They discolor if of inferior quality turning both brown and pink, but if they are perfectly pure they will keep their snowy whiteness for at least one hundred and eighty years.

THE MERCHANTS' COLUMN

Edited by
MANSFIELD F. HOUSE
(Copyright.)

(In this column, which appears every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, will appear news and short articles of special interest to merchants, their salespeople and business men and women in general. All phases of store management—buying, accounting, advertising and retail salesmanship—will be dealt with, not theoretically, but by descriptions of methods actually in use by successful merchants.)

A NOTE BOOK THAT SHOWS HOW SALES PULLED

A hardware store down in El Paso, Tex., knows just about what to do when each month's advertising is planned. And the advertising of this store includes window displays interior displays, bulletins, notices to the salespeople and other details that back up the newspaper insertions. Once a month the executives and the window and newspaper man meet for a consultation.

First the merchandise is considered. This means that the seasonableness of it is considered. Then, the merits and the profit. Then the stock or coming stock. This brings out some candidates for pushing during the coming month, the campaign being considered as four units of a week each.

"Now, let's see what we did last year," says the president. And the secretary brings out a loose leaf scrap book. "Turn to the September leaves" he says. "Ah, we tried out Pyrex ware, didn't we? Well, what did we do with it?"

"Two small advertisements the first week. Sold $134.60. All we had upstairs. Had window No. 4 trimmed with it, but the notation says to use No. 2 or No. 3 next time. Most of women go on Alvarado street. Total expense on Pyrex that week, $8.85. And notation says that buying continued after window was taken out, [illegible] kind of glassware you can cook in.' There's the photo of the window.

"Well, I guess we had better repeat this year. Wouldn't hurt to use about the same window trim, changing it a bit, and being sure to use the Alvarado street window this time. Now, let's see what to do for the other weeks and the other windows for this week. Here's the record. Any suggestion?"

So this store goes ahead with full knowledge of what has been done. At end of each week the advertising man turns in to the "boss" leaves covering the activities and a record of the expense and the sales. There are also special suggestions as to things to avoid the next time, better ways of doing things. This makes the store's campaigns interesting and more profitable.

PLANTING AN IDEA

Through some queer psychological kink, the mention of rubber plants often provokes a smile. One clever retailer made capital of this by attaching to the broad leaves such toilet accessories as rubber gloves, sponges, nipples, finger stalls, etc. Underneath the sign, "Watch Us Grow," bought gossiping crowds to carry the bright idea home.

$15,750 A YEAR FOR ADS IN A TOWN OF 1200!

Four per cent. of its sales is not too much money for a general store to reinvest in advertising according to G. A. Garver, who has built up sales of about $475,000 annually in Strasburg, O., a town of only 1200 population.

The trade doesn't all come from the town however. It is the advertising which has brought it in from the surrounding country.

"We flood the country with circulars," says Garver, "and use every newspaper within a radius of 25 miles. The aggregate of this expense is about $6785. In addition we have a system of coupons which costs us nearly $7000 a year. This is really advertising, and we charge it to the advertising account. It makes a total of $15,750 a year, or somewhat less than 4 per cent. of our sales volume.

"In the early days I had a hard time convincing father that we ought to spend as much money as we were. Father had very decided views and a very concise way of expressing them.

"'I fear that you will bust,' he used to tell me, but I finally convinced him that advertising was to business what well-prepared soil, grain and fertilizer were to the farmer."

Garver does not believe in spreading his advertising on too thinly. At the time he was covering a much larger territory than a radius of 25 miles, but it wasn't pulling business as well as he wanted it to. An analysis and comparison of the mailing list with the sales records showed that the heaviest proportion of inactive prospects lay beyond the 25-mile radius. So he took a leaf from the farmer's book and adopted a policy of intensive cultivation.

He makes it a point to keep his mailing list purged of "dead heads" by frequent check-ups. The county birth record tells when to send pamphlets to the parents of new babies, and the fire records, too, furnish opportunities for personal letters and news-sized sales.

"You never can tell where advertising is going to hit. A woman told me the other day that her dog was responsible for making her our customer. The dog, it seems, liked to carry her letters home from the post-office and one day when there were no letters for her, she gave the dog a piece of paper she found on the walk. After she got home, and the dog presented it to her with his best manners, she glanced at it and became interested. It was one of our advertisements."

BOX LUNCHES THAT INCREASE GROCERY SALES

Big profits have been developed by the Jevne store, of Los Angeles, what is a new field for grocery stores, the packing of box lunches for picnics, camping trips and all outdoor festivities.

There are Jevne lunches whose menus harmonize with any desired surroundings, for the California mountains, for the seashore, for the fishing trip, for the auto excursion also harmonizing with any pocketbook. There is a separate name designating each combination. Here is one for forty-five cents, with its own little advertisement added:

"One full-size sandwich of cheese or any kind of cooked meat and choice of mustard or Jevne's mayonnaise.

"One slice cream cheese.

"One package Jevne's potato chips

One pickle, sweet or sour gherkin.

"Two cup cakes.

"One package walnut meats and raisins.

"One orange or apple.

"One paper napkin.

"One package paper drinking cups

"Each lunch neatly wrapped and packed in a strong paper box.

"Chicken sandwiches may be substituted at an additional charge of fifteen cents each extra.

"'CHOW' FOR THE TROUT TRIP

"Picture yourself in the mountains near your favorite trout stream the sun is going down—creel full of speckled beauties—tired after an all-day tramp—and my how hungry. Then's when you're glad you were thoughtful enough to put Mull-meal in the knapsack. Without heating or preparation you open the tin and a hearty, savory meal of meats and vegetables is ready to be devoured. Don't leave for camp until Full-meal is in the 'chow bag.'"

Fat Men In History.

The general idea seems to be that fat and fame do not go together.

This is probably accounted for by the fact that those of large bulk are inclined to be easy-going and therefore lacking in that push which is said to bring a man to the fore. The only great statesman one can recall who was really a fat man was Charles James Fox, as can be seen even by his effigy in the Palace of Westminster, where he would make three of his great rival, Pitt the younger.

Jamie Thompson, the author of "The Seasons," is probably the only really fat poet. He was a comfortable, lazy, slovenly man, of whom it is related that he would eat peaches off the wall, not taking the trouble to take his hands out of his pockets to pluck them. Yet despite his lazy disposition, he managed to write one of the longest of English poems, as well as "The Castle of Indolence"—a castle in which he habitually dwelt.

G. K. Chesterton, one of the stoutest of living celebrities, has on several occasions made up in the character of the Sage of Fleet Street with excellent success. It is a little remarkable, too, that one of his closest friends, Hilaire Belloc, is almost as noted for his bulk as he is for his criticism of military operations, his poetry, his history and his fiction.—Tit-Bits.

Cactus Is Vegetable Camel.

In the hot desert regions of Arizona and Mexico the cactus stores in its thick leaves every drop of water or dew that it can get, so that there is always a supply, not for a day, but for a dry season. In reality the spines of the cactus are the remnants of its leaves, and the so-called leaves are the modified stalks. In the waterless regions where the cactus grows it has very little use for leaves that would only wither away from the heat, so it reduces them to a very effective weapon against all enemies, and then swells the stalks to make the kind of water tank it can best use for its purpose. The best proof of the efficiency of its reasoning is in the fact that it exists where very little else can, except a few plants, which have similarly adapted themselves to circumstances.—Family Herald.

Orientals Believe in 13.

Thirteen has no terrors for Orientals. This was shown in Seattle, Wash., when the little Japanese sailing vessel Kashima Maru arrived in port from the Orient with a crew of exactly 13 men aboard. Officers of the vessel explained that 13 is considered in the Orient just like an even dozen or a score when it comes to manning vessels or inviting wedding guests.

Rathenau on the Kaiser

OF the abundant crop of confessions, revelations and apologies published by the former leaders of Germany few are entitled to more attention than Walter Rathenau's "Der Kaiser: Eine Betrachtung" ("The Kaiser: A Study"), just issued in Berlin. The author, son and collaborator of the founder of the General Electric Company, the world famous "A.E.G.," as it was familiarly known by its German initials, was, and is, one of the foremost chieftains of German industry and one of the organizers of German industrial mobilization. Although co-operating with the imperial government in the conduct of the war, Rathenau consistently opposed extremist aims and methods and favored the democratization of the empire. Before the war he distinguished himself as a progressive and scholarly critic of social conditions and an opponent of the Junker spirit. At an early date he discovered the fateful implications of German-English rivalry and advocated a peaceful adjustment. He was, finally, one of the closest friends and advisers of the Kaiser himself. He has thus all possible qualifications to speak with authority.

Especial interest attaches to what he has to say on the relation of the Kaiser to the German people and on the question of co-responsibility. Rathenau, a convinced democrat, has no patience with those who would fix a clear cut line between the German rulers and the ruled and absolve the latter of their share of guilt. Non-German critics of a different brand will have no quarrel with his view that the Kaiser, although not representative of the German people in an absolute sense, was representative of the German people of his day. In other words, he was a symbol of the shortcomings of a German people which abandoned the heritage of its fathers—thinkers, poets, idealists: "As little as he was an exponent of his people, as much was he the exponent of his age—of the age and the forgetfulness of his people."

And: "This people of this age, consciously and unconsciously, has willed him as he was and not otherwise, has willed its own self in him as he was and not otherwise. In the indescribable dramaturgy of her weaving of history Clio was pleased to link, in a great human fate, the German people with its own ephemerous being, its self-estrangement, its idolatry and its fall. Never before has a symbolic man mirrored himself more perfectly in his epoch, nor has any epoch mirrored itself more completely in one man."

Rathenau does not mince words in admitting the German people's co-responsibility in the events: "Not for a day could Germany have been ruled as she was without the consent of her people." In extenuation he pleads that the German people did not know any better and needed an external shock to awaken. Very unusual—from a German of his class—is his statement that in spite of all external splendor the last twenty-five years were really a period of decay for Germany.

"So powerful was the living energy of Germany that the empire was kept going by it for a generation. For him who was wont to see the sun only, all signs of death were hidden for a generation. Success only was visible. The spirit of history . . . willed that this people should annihilate its over-mechanized epoch through self-annihilation and the annihilation of its ephemerous idol. The German people had to mature in error."

Paris Statues.

As might have been expected the project for the elimination of inartistic public statuary from Paris, which has been submitted to the Paris Municipal Council, has stirred discussion. Mr. Deville, who makes the proposal, accompanies it with a list of about 50 statues, which might be done away with; from the point of view of art criticism, "their room is better than their company." But actually doing away with them is another matter. There are so many difficulties that the threatened statues are likely to keep their pedestals. "One cannot," says a writer in Le Temps, "invite a man to one's house, and then, without any excuse in the way of provocation on his part, proceed to kick him out of the door." The public statues of distinguished men, once they are in place, occupy much this position of an invited guest: some people may criticize them, but a great many will object to their removal. More than that, Paris, like other cities, finds when the public statuary is critically examined, that a citizen whose distinction has lessened with time may have been perpetuated by an admirable statue, whereas another whose distinction has grown is found "immortalized" by a mediocre artist. It has been long admitted that the Gambetta statue in the Place du Carrousel is not as ornamental as one might wish; but there would be popular objection to its removal. And so with a good many others.

An Awful Waste.

"When a senator dies at least eight thousand volumes of eulogy are printed and distributed by the government," said Professor Pate. "This is an appalling waste, and—"

"It is indeed," replied J. Fuller Gloom. "In most instances three cheers would be more appropriate.—Kansas City Star.

The Right Sort.

Two Aucklanders were talking about a mutual friend. Said one: "So Jim has gone into the navy and is now on a destroyer. I thought he was a pacifist."

"He is; a naval pacifist."

"And what is naval pacifist?"

"One who plants depth bombs for the purpose of spreading oil on the troubled waters."

Comfortable Beds.

Mattress and pillow used in the berths of sailors and firemen aboard government-operated merchant vessels are of the most approved type for sea use, for besides making good bedding, they are the best sort of life preservers. Their filling is a soft, resilient tropical fiber known as kapoc, which can sustain 25 times its own weight in salt water for 48 hours.

On each of the new merchant ships built under the direction of the United States shipping board, shower baths are provided for the crew, there being one for the firemen and another for the deck force.—Merchant Marine.

Kaiser's Thankless Dentist.

"Now that Doctor Davis has finished his revelations," says Nate Saulsbury, as reported by the Chicago Evening Post, "the kaiser may realize how sharper than an ulcerated tooth it is to have a thankless dentist. We should like to have held the doctor's job and, when it appeared necessary to draw the kaiserliche molar, warbled as we closed down on the forceps, 'The yanks are coming, the yanks are coming!'"—From Outlook.

After the outbreak of the war Lieut. Cons was assigned to the intelligence department of the French army. At one time he was a member of the faculty at Bryn Mawr College.

No More Royalties.

By a decree of the Government, the Korean mining ordinance has been amended so as to eliminate the royalty on gold, silver, lead and iron ores or alluvial gold and alluvial iron. The exemption of royalty will not apply, however, to special mining concessions that were granted before the date of the mining ordinance.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Said:

"After all what a man does with his money is to invest, and there is no better way to in it than in Life Insurance.

As an ESTATE BUILDER there is nothing to equal Life Insurance.

TAKE THE FOLLOWING ACTUAL RESULT

A young man sixteen years of age took out a 15 years Endowment (No. 210380) in the Sun Life of Canada, which matured on the first of April. This young man paid annually $66.30 for fifteen years and he now has, through that investment, an immediate estate of $3495.00 in case of death.

DO YOU KNOW THAT THIS AMOUNTS TO ALMOST 15 PER CENT COMPOUND INTEREST ON EVERY DOLLAR PAID?

No wonder Sir Wilfrid said—and he might have added (no better place than the Sun Life of Canada)—"there is no better way to invest it than in LIFE INSURANCE."

LINDSAY WOMEN ARE FOR PROHIBITION

BELIEVED THAT NINETLY PER CENT. WILL SUPPORT TEMPERANCE ACT.

The representative of the Toronto Globe who is making a tour of the province to secure interviews from leading citizens on the prohibition issue, recently visited Lindsay and thus sizes up the situation there.

Lindsay is another town where local option suffered several defeats but where prohibition appears likely to win the day when the referendum comes. The reasons for this closely tally with all other towns and cities visited; better business conditions, the absence of the Saturday night "jags' 'and the Monday morning over-crowded police court, and beter living for the families of men who frequented the bars and the court.

Naturally there were opinions expressed against the Ontario Temperance Act. Sifted down they came to the old complaint that "personal liberty" had vanished, and that the complainant couldn't get a drink. In no case could any concrete proof be advanced that any bad results were observed from the act. Claim that there was "more whiskey sold now than before the bars closed" and that the youths o fthe town were getting liquor were made. This tallies with the same claim in other places. It was not given any credence by people in a position to know something about the illicit sale.

The Women's Vote

One of the Government enumerators gave some interesting information in regard to the opinion of Lindsay women on the question. "I had to call on about 500 women to put their names on the list," he stated. "While I did not ask for nor encourage opinions on the referendum, they were given unasked. Probably ninety per cent of these women told me that they intended to vote "No" right across the ballot, stating that 'we don't want any liquor back here' in the majority of cases. Only one woman said that she intended to vote for beer. Her reason was that she had been accustomed to it in the Old Country abused."

WORTHY OF HIS HIRE

Port Hope M. O. H. Paid Higher Salary Than Peterboro's Official.

Port Hope seems to think the example of Peterborough's M.O.H. in using the application of W. Ro for permission to store junk on a vacant lot on Lewis street should stir up its own town official to activity. The Port Hope Guide says: "This action in Peterborough reminds us that our Medical Health Officer permitted a junk dealer to do business within a stone's throw of one of our churches. And if we are not mistaken the salary paid our efficient officer is conderably in advance of that paid by the city of Peterborough."

Dr. McPherson as M.D.H. for Peterborough receives $850 a year, and for that amount he also has to attend to indigent patients. And it comes as somewhat of a surprise to learn that the health officer of sleepy, easy-going Port Hope should be better paid than this city's M.O.H. whose post is a long way from being a sinecure.

Thomas Morgan, 54, was run over by a waggon at St. Louis. Next day he walked into the city dispensary saying he thought he had a touch of rheumatism. Doctors found nine fractured ribs and internal injuries.

Angle worm diggers who supply bait for New York fishing tackle stores are on strike. They refuse to supply dealers with worms unless the latter agree to sell them to fishermen at 30 cents a dozen.

China Clay Used in Paper.

The fact that an amalgamation with a capital of £2,000,000 has been formed to control the richest and best clay-fields in Devon and Cornwall, where alone china-clay exists in Great Britain, recalls the story of one of the most interesting and historic industries in the country.

China-clay is the fine white clay used in making the porcelain articles we are handling every day. Its great virtue lies in the fact that it is of a pure, or nearly pure, white, both before and after being fired, making it of great value in the manufacture of porcelain. It is also used to a great extent by papermakers, and in less quantity in the making of some chemical products.

Technically, china-clay is known as kaolin, derived from Kaoling—"high ridge"—the name of hills in China where the clay was first discovered and used in the manufacture of porcelain. Jesuit missionaries introduced it to Europe, and in the middle of the eighteenth century the clay was discovered in Cornwall and later in Devonshire.

The total output represents nearly half a million tons per annum.—Tit-Bits.

Abyssinians' Gifts.

A delegation from Abyssinia bearing rich gifts of ivory and silks for the announced purpose of congratulating France on her recent victory, appeared at the Peace Conference in Paris. This is in strict accordance with the ancient Oriental procedure. The real purpose of a visit is not disclosed until preliminary ceremonies are concluded. These native Africans—claiming descent from Solomon and the Queen of Sheba—wished to be in on the carving up of the world, for they have interests which seem vital to them, although little known to the rest of the world. Seated in that natural bastion of Africa, the Abyssinians have lived in greater or less security for unknown centuries. They are not negroes, but a mixture of Hamitic and Semitic races, with a culture of their own and professing the Christian religion, being a branch of the Coptic Church of Egypt. Until recently they have been unmolested save by native tribes.

Spats Survive.

There is an old and trite saying that "imitation is the sincerest form of flattery," and in that connection one of those things not generally known is that the wearing of spats originated as a compliment to the kilted regiments who were then in the Indian mutiny. The gloriour deeds of the Highlanders in that campaign made them popular heroes, and in the late fifties many things in dress were adopted by the public in imitation of Scottish uniforms, but only spats survive.

Handicap Worth While.

When a handicap becomes the fulcrum over which we pry out success with the long iron bar of determination it ought to make us shake hands with the hindrance and say, "Thank you! You have helped me out fine!"

Symbol of Firmness.

You can't push a mule and you can't pull him. As an example of firmness what better do you want. A mule sure has the courage of his convictions.—Jacksonville Times-Union.

Salute to the Flag.

The salute to the flag is given by raising the right hand, palm outward, until the index finger is even with the lower edge of the forehead, and standing at attention.

Deeds and Words.

Deeds are greater than words. Deeds have such a life, mute but undeniable, and grow as living trees and fruit trees do; they people the vacuity of time and make it green and worthy. Why should the oak prove logically that it ought to grow, and will grow? Plant it, try it; what gifts of diligent judicious assimilation and secretion it has, of progress and resistance, of force to grow, will then declare themselves.—Carlyle.

Big Canadian Telescope.

The tube of the telescope erected by the Canadien dominion at Victoria, B. C., is large enough to permit of the passage of a small automobile and the reflector is 72 inches in diameter. The movable parts of the telescope weigh more than 40 tons, and the lens alone more than 4,000 pounds, yet one man can easily move the mass into any desired position.

And a woman's conscience is almost as elastic as her tongue.

Some Strange Coincidences

SOME marvellous things happen in this world of ours, things that seem to set at defiance all ordinary rules for the calculation of chances. Here are several instances, warranted to be true in every respect, only the names and locations in certain cases being changed:

A young business man who had called at a lawyer's office on business, was asked if he knew a certain officer in the army, one Lieut. Styles, who was on trial for some trivial offence against discipline. He replied that he did.

"Well," said the lawyer, "I have just been reading his history. I asked you about him because I remembered that you spent a year or two at West Point when you were a lad. Had he a brother named J. Simpson Styles?"

"Not that I have ever heard of," replied the young man.

"I have never heard of him either, but this account says he has. I think the writer of the narrative must have got two families mixed."

After some conversation on other matters, the caller took his leave.

In the afternoon of the same day he went out with his wife "house-hunting." The first flat they visited suited them so well that they closed a bargain for it at once. It was in a large apartment house. When they were about to take their leave the young man's wife said:

"Let's see who our next door neighbor is to be."

Whereupon they looked at the card tacked upon the door next to the one that led to their own apartment. It read:

"J. SIMPSON STYLES."

Investigation proved that he was the brother of Lieut. Styles.

Another instance has to do with a newspaper reporter who had been detailed to go to a city a hundred miles distant to write up a political meeting. His work being done, he was waiting at the station for the train that was to take him home, when he saw the principal orator of the meeting walking up and down the platform.

Obeying a sudden impulse he approached him and introduced himself as a reporter for the Globe, but without giving his name.

"Glad to meet you, sir," said the orator. "Your home is in ———, I presume?"

"Only temporary," said the reporter. "I am from Hartford, Connecticut."

"Well," rejoined the other, "I knew just two persons in Hartford, and that was thirty years ago. One of them was Col. Thompson, with whom I became acquainted while making a trip out West one summer, and the other was Miss Barbara Jones, an exceedingly bright young woman, whom I happened to meet at a reception in Washington once. Ever know them?"

"Yes, sir," said the reporter, "They are my father and mother."

Perhaps some may think that the most singular thing about these two coincidences is that they happened to the same young man, at intervals of only a few months apart. Others, possibly, may consider that the most wonderful of the whole story is that a man and his wife were suited with the first flat at which they looked.

Lord Acton for many years kept a record of coincidences. A strange one occurred within his own experience. A rumor has spread that his wife had drowned herself. She had done nothing of the kind, but it was quite true that a Baroness Acton had drowned herself at Tegernsee, where Lord and Lady Aacton was staying, and had drowned herself under their very window.

The strangest of all coincidences noted by Lord Acton concerned Sir Edmund Berry Godfrey, who was murdered at the bottom of what is now Primrose Hill, but was then known as Greenberry Hill, in London. Three men were hanged for the murder. Their names, respectively, were Green, Berry and Hill.

In the list of coincidences pertaining to accidents a number of interesting examples are of authentic record. It has been pointed out that very often persons have been surprised by events occurring, as it seemed, at the immediate suggestion of the victims. In the excitement of the moment they have offered "fate" or some unknown law of association of power of mind over matter as suitable explanations, but when all is said calm reason may classify such phenomena as pure coincidence.

Some years ago a well-known business man who was accustomed to making weekly trips between an eastern city and Chicago had the uncomfortable experience of having a wheel break immediately under his seat while the train was going at full speed. It was only by the most fortunate of leaps that he was able to escape losing his life. Naturally this experience made a very deep impression upon him.

It was almost a year later that he took the same train, and by a strange chance was assigned the same chair. During a chat with a friend whom he had just met he glanced out of the window and recognized the landscape and the very spot of his narrow escape. He told the story of the broken wheel. Just as he reached the climax of his recital, saying: "The cold shivers go down my back at the mere thought of it. There it is again!" Incredible as it may seem, the identical accident happened on the same train, almost between the same two fields adjoining the track and the victim of this oddest of coincidence barely escaped the same way as before.

Such weird coincidences are always difficult of credence, but no less an authority than Darwin, the naturalist, mentions one of the same kind, though different in degree.

Beautiful Suzy Depsy Serves Term in Prison For Trading With Enemy

WHATEVER may be the change of opinion in other parts of the world towards the Huns, now that the war is officially at an end, the French will undoubtedly continue to hate and distrust them for generations to come. As soon as the armistice was signed, some soft-hearted people began to feel that the time had come for less severity. That such is not the view of the majority of the French people was indicated by the recent trial of Suzy Depsy, the beautiful Parisian actress. The charge against Mme. Depsy was that she had been trading with the enemy. The offence was not a very grave one. There was no suggestion that Mme. Suzy Depsy was disloyal to her country or that she would have betrayed any secrets to the Huns that might have aided them in winning the war. It happened that the Germans could supply the actress with an article that she was not able to obtain elsewhere, and she accordingly committed the offence of "trading with the enemy." The popular actresses of Paris are usually the spoiled darlings of the public, and they are a law unto themselves in matters of conduct, but Mme. Suzy Depsy soon discovered that she had overstepped the bounds of popular patience. She had committed a crime which the public of Paris would not tolerate, even though she was a very beautiful woman. She was convicted and sentenced to serve a term of ten months in prison. Her beauty did save her a little, however. Her husband was implicated in the same offence, and he went to prison for eighteen months besides paying a fine of 2,000 francs. Suzy Depsy is married to Emilio Guillier, who is one of the best known of the prize fight promoters of France.

SUZY DEPSY.

A Western Fable.

On the eastern slope of the Manzano Mountains in New Mexico stand the ruins of an old mission church, and a few scattered walls and foundations, which bear the impressive name of Grand Quivina, and which are monuments to one of the greatest and most enduring lies ever told by the tongue of man, writes Niksah in the Savannah News.

The lie was started by a certain Indian back in the sixteenth century. He was found living among the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico by the great Spanish explorer, Coronado. Because he was a queer, dark-looking fellow, the Spaniards called him the Turk, but in reality he was a member of another tribe of Indians, living far to the east.

The Turk was anxious to return to his own people, so he told the Spaniards that to the east was a great land, the home of a people called the Quiviras, where was much gold and great houses. Coronado went in search of the place, taking the Turk as a guide, and found that the Quiviras were a savage tribe of wandering Indians who had no wealth whatever. He killed the Turk for having told such a monstrous lie.

But the lie strangely persisted, in spite of all Coronado wrote and said about the true state of Quivira, and for a long time men continued to search for Quivira, with its gold and great houses. Later, these ruins in the Manzano country were supposed to be the remains of the mythical city, and treasure-seekers dug all about them in the hope of finding buried gold.

Finally, Bandelier, an astute government ethnologist, made a study of the matter, proved that the Quiviras had never been anything but a poor nomad of a million built by the Spaniards for the purpose of civilizing the Indians.

His Phoney Best.

"Hubby!"

"Yes?"

"In to-day's daily storiette the husband takes the wife in his arms and sings to her sweetly."

"'Fraid I ain't much of a singer my dear," said Mr. Younghub, dubiously. "But you can sit on my knee and we'll turn on the phonograph."

The Greatest Hail Storm.

The greatest hail storm on record was in Europe in 1788; the biggest stones described as having then fallen were more than half a pound in weight.

Some men have penny wisdom and pound foolishness.

Good Looks and Long Wear Knitted into Stockings

Fine appearance and durability are knitted right into Buster Brown Stockings. Our employees have had years of special training in knitting Buster Brown hosiery.

We use extra-long yarn. We spin it ourselves to be sure it's right. We designed these stockings with a two-ply leg and three-ply heel and toe to stand the hard usage of the average boy.

Because we do all these things, Buster Brown Stockings are harder wearing. They make fewer trips to the mending basket. They cost less in the end.

BUSTER BROWN'S SISTER'S STOCKING

Buster Brown's Sister's Stocking for the girls is a splendid looking stocking at a moderate price. A two-thread English mercerized lisle stocking, that is shaped to fit and wears very well indeed.

Colors—Black, Leather Shade Tan, Pink, Blue and White.

Special attention is given their appearance, too. They are exceptionally well-made and well-fitting. Try your boy with a pair and get his opinion.

Eyeless Fish.

The inhabitants of the ocean differ in many respects, according to the depth at which they live, but most of all in their powers of vision.

Fish that live at very great depths have either no eyes at all or enormously big ones. There are two methods of getting about in the gloomiest abysses—by delicate organs of touch, or by sight, that collects the few rays of light due to phosphorescence or other accidental sources.

Fish which live near the top of the ocean have smaller eyes than those, say, eighty fathoms down. One hundred and twenty fathoms deeper, where daylight disappears, the eyes are bigger still. Beyond the depth of two hundred fathoms, small eyes prevail, with long feelers to supplement them.

At this depth, in fact, sight is practically useless. In the greatest abysses the fish are usually blind, feeling their way about solely by means of their sensitive bodies. Some, indeed, show signs externally of having once possessed eyes, but that is all.

In others—the oldest and most confirmed abysmal species—the eye has disappeared altogether externally, though traces of it are still to be recognized, embedded deeply in the tissues of the head.

Many deep-sea fish have a curious system of hollows in the skull or about the body which hold a kind of phosphorescent slime. Others have round or oval shining opalescent spots, placed on the head or along the body or tail.

All of them are abundantly supplied with nerves, and they are apparently organs for the production of phosphorescent light. If so, such a fish must swim about surrounded by a faint glow, somewhat like that thrown off by luminous paint.

One scientist even suggests that these fish may have the power of directing their rays in any direction, like a searchlight.—Tit-Bits.

Invisible Airplane Wings.

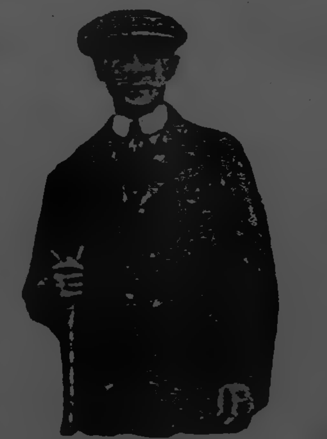
Wings of celluloid acetate, being transparent, make an airplane invisible at the height of a few thousand feet, also increasing the operator's field of vision. Sheets one one-hundredth-inch thick are about as strong as the ordinary wing cover, and the weight of nine ounces to the square yard is but slightly greater. The rapid spread of a tear when started is a disadvantage that may be overcome with a re-enforcing of loosely woven silk.

Free Board.

A restaurant in Yuma, Ariz., displays a sign that reads: "Free board every day the sun doesn't shine." At first sight the offer of free board every day the sun doesn't shine might seem a reckless one, but, as a matter of fact, a day without sunshine in that desert country is far rarer than blackberries in May. If it rains at all, it is only for a very short time, leaving most of the day for sunshine, so that the sign would only catch a tenderfoot.

American Millionaire Now a British Subject As Result of Great War

IT will be remembered that during the early days of the Great War, several prominent citizens of the United States became British subjects to show their disapproval of the attitude of their native country in remaining neutral and prosperous while other nations were fighting the battle of democracy. Probably the best known of the men who declared in this practical manner their admiration for the stand taken by Great Britain against the Germans was Henry James, the famous novelist who has since died, but there were many others as well. One influential American who took a similar step was Charles Garland, a young millionaire. He did not come out with a written declaration of his views, as did Henry James, but he showed how he felt regarding the war in a very practical manner. Early in the struggle, Charles Garland, who was a good horseman, having always had plenty of leisure for riding, entered the British cavalry. He served with distinction throughout the struggle, and was honorably discharged at the end when he decided to go back into civilian life. It is evident that Mr. Garland found the British officers very congenial company, as he has decided to remain in England and has secured a beautiful home in Warwick. He became a naturalized Britisher, and at the request of the discharged soldiers he has taken charge of the affairs of these men in his own neighborhood. He looks forward also to entering public life, and will probably be a candidate for the House of Commons in the next British election, with a soldiers' backing. In short, the former American millionaire is now every inch a British subject.



CHARLES GARLAND.

MATTHEWS-BLACKWELL LOSE TO LINDSAY--SCORE OF FOUR-THREE

Game Was Interesting All Through—Visitors Started Scoring

Four runs to three, eight hits to six was the score on Saturday in favor of the Lindsay I. O. F. team over Peterborough Matthews-Blackwell team. This sounds very interesting and it was very much so, although the game lacked some of the pep and excitement seen last week in the Central Ontario League final fixture. The crowd was fair, but not the size it should have been for the importance of the game.

Lindsay started scoring in the fourth when by means of two hits and an error they secured two runs. After that they were never headed nor could the Packers even things up, although they kept trying until the last man was out.

It was a pitcher's battle from the first, but McElory's left-hand delivery had Dan McCabe's hitters at his mercy most of the time, Frost being the only one to get two safeties. The Lindsay outfielders had an easy day. "Chuck" Carew having the only chance of the trio when he grabbed Shaughnessy's hard drive in the eighth with Lowe on second base and two out.

This defeat makes a play-off necessary on neutral ground to be chosen by the O.A.B.A. executive.

First Inning.

Lindsay—A. Carew grounded out to Lowe; Starr struck out and Logan ground to Frost. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough—Adams gounded to A. Carew; Lowe fanned and Holyman hoisted one to Hill. No runs, hits or errors.

Second Inning.

Lindsay—Cooms and Hill fanned; C. Carew hit one at Lowe who put him out unassisted on his way to the bench. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough—McElory here developed a wild streak and passed Corrin and Shaughnessy. He tightened up, however, and struck out Cunningham and Coursey and took care of Lefane's grounder. No runs hits or errors.

Third Inning.

Lindsay—Richmond grounded to Cairns; Lipsett bunted foul on his third strike and was called out; McElroy and A. Carew followed with singles and worked a double steal but the danger was staved off when Starr popped up to Lowe. No runs, two hits, no errors.

Peterborough — Frost opened up with a single that bounced off A. Carew's shins and Adams beat out a bunt; Lowe struck out and Frost was forced out at third when Holymnn grounded to the pitcher; Corrin made the third out, McElroy to Cooms. No runs, two hits, no errors.

Fourth Inning.

Lindsay—Logan grounded out; Cooms singled and stole second and third; Hill hit to Holyman, who threw wild to home, allowing Cooms to score. Holyman's usual good throwing was hampered by a very sore thumb. C. Carew singled, scoring Hill; Richmond popped to Lowe and Lipsett struck out. Two runs, two hits, one error.

Peterborough—Shaughnessy and Cunningham struck out and Coursey runs, hits or errors.

Fifth Inning.

Lindsay—McElroy drew the only walk Frost allowed, and was forced at second by A. Carew, Adams to Holyman; Starr was thrown out by Frost and Logan fanned. No runs, hits or errors.

Peterborough—Lefane popped to Lipsett; Frost fanned and Adams grounded to the pitcher. No runs, hits or errors.

Sixth Inning.

Lindsay—Cooms grounded to Frost; Hill got two bases on a fly that Cunningham misjudged and then fumbled the grounder; C. Carew grounded to Holyman, Hill going to third on the play; Richmond came through with a timely single that scored Hill but was caught off first. One run, two hits, no errors.

Peterborough—The mighty Lowe struck out for the third time; Holyman singled and stole second, scoring on Corrin's single to right field; Shaughnessy fanned and Cunningham went out at first, Cooms to McElroy. One run, two hits, no errors.

Seventh Inning.

Lindsay—Lipsett got a life when Corrin let the throw get away from him and stole second; McElroy flied out to Cunningham and A. Carew and Starr grounded to Lowe and Frost respectively. No runs, no hits, one error.

Peterborough—Courcey was safe on McElroy's bad throw, Lefane singled; Courcey scored when A. Carew let the throw get away from him and Lefane and Frost ended up on second and third; Adams drove one that put the safety label on it but Cooms pulled it down, doubling Lefane at third. Frost went out trying to steal third. One run, one hit, two errors.

Eighth Inning.

Lindsay—Logan was safe on Adams' bad throw; Cooms was hit and Hill singled, filling the bases; C. Carew hit to Frost who was too slow to first to complete a double; Cooms scored on a pass ball and Richmond struck out. One run, one hit, one error.

Peterborough—Lowe was safe when Cooms missed the throw; Holyman popped to the pitcher on an attempted sacrifice; Corrin struck out and Shaughnessy flied out to C. Carew. No runs, no hits, one error.

Ninth Inning.

Lindsay—Lipsett grounded to Corrin; Courcey missed McElroy's high fly, but he was out trying to stretch it into three bases; A. Carew singled but Starr struck out. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Peterborough—The Packers went into the ninth full of fight but Cunningham dampened their hopes by striking out for the third time; Courcey was hit on the head but was forced at second by Lefane who went to second on a passed ball; Frost came through with a good single on which Lefane scored but McElroy intersepted the throw home and caught Frost trying to go to second for the final out.

OCEAN-GOING VESSEL LAUNCHED IN TORONTO

POLSON IRON WORKS' 150TH BOAT TAKES TO THE WATER.

Toronto, Aug. 16.—Making the number of ships launched from their slips 150, the Polson Iron Works launched the War Halton at the foot of Frederick street on Saturday at noon. The vessel is named after the County of Halton by the Victory loan committee on account of the district having been the first in the Victory loan campaign of 1918.

At the first shriek of the noon whistles, F. E. Wall, in charge of the proceedings, fired a small cannon and Mrs. Donald Roberts of Milton who was the sponsor, launched the full bottle against the bow in the immemorial manner. The War Halton has a length over all of 261 feet with a molded breadth of 43 feet six inches and a depth of 23 feet.

Among those present were: George and Mrs. Elliott, C. A. E. Goldman, Major Gardner, Mrs. F. E. Wall, New York; Mr. and Mrs. George J Noonan, Buffalo; Mrs. H. Matthews, Col. J. B Millen, Mr. and Mrs. H. Miller, Mr and Mrs. A. H. Jeffries.

SAGE TEA DANDY TO DARKEN HAIR

It's Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Color and Lustre To Hair

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost over night if you'll get a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this famous Sage Tea Recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, are sold annually, says a well known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray or becoming faded have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few

BOWMANVILLE MAN IS KILLED BY LIGHTNING

THOMAS HOAR WAS STRUCK WHILE LIGHTING LAMPS SATURDAY NIGHT.

Bowmanville, Aug. 18. — While lighting the lamps at the Bowmanville harbar Saturday last Thomas Hoar the harbor master, was struck by lightning and instantly killed. A number of people saw the lightning strike the lighthouse, and running out found Mr Hoar dead, about half way dow nthe stairs with his clothes burned nearly all off his body. The lighthouse was on fire, but it was put out with pails of water. Where it was struck the house was smashed from top to bottom, solid posts being splintered to kindling wood. Large crowds visited the scene Sunday. The funeral will take place from his late residence Wednesday afternoon.

GRENADIER BAND TO ARRIVE HERE FRIDAY

CONCERT AT GRAND IN EVENING AT PRICES WITHIN REACH OF ALL.

Manager Dahn of the Grand Opera House received a telegram today announcing that the famous Grenadier Guards Band will arrive in the city Friday morning and asking him to secure accommodation for the sixty-five members of the company they will probably be put up at the Empress. Nothing has as yet been done by the city officials in the matter of arranging a civic reception for the distinquished visitors, but there is still time and the Board of Trade is ready to cooperate.

The concert will be given at the Grand Friday evening, the only appearance of the Band in Ontario, except for the Toronto Fair. The tremendous amount of expense and details in connection with arranging for their [illegible] musical event did not dismay the management of the Grand who [illegible] determined to [illegible] the musical lovers of the city the best of all, if possible, at a [illegible] of prices within the reach of everybody.

The Grenadier Guards Band had the honor of leading into battle in those gloomy days of September, 1914, the pride of England, the Grenadier Guards, and they spent many months at the front doing their bit. Among the personnel of the band are some of England's greatest soloists under the direction of Capt. A. Williams who holds the rank of senior bandmaster of the Band.

EDITORS AND TRIBUNE.

Five Members of the Profession Volunteer to Pay Verdict.

Seattle, Ore., August 18. — Five members of the Oregon Editorial Association have come to the aid of the Chicago Tribune and have opened their checkbooks and in a marvellously short time subscribed a total of six cents to satisfy the verdict of the jury in favor of Henry Ford.

"We would have paid it had the amount been twice what it is, yes, even three times that," was their generous announcement.

CONSUMERS BUILD BAKERY

Foreigners in St. Catharines Will Bake Own Supply.

St. Catharines, Aug. 18.—Although a lull has occurred in the campaign of local women to combat the recent increase in price of bread, foreigners in the Facer street district have decided to solve the question for themselves. Ninety-nine of them have formed a co-operative company and have already secured a permit for the erection of a $4,000 bakery on Facer street. The members of the company are doing the work themselves, and have already excavated for the foundation.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

BY EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

The other man did not reply, but regarded Mr. Magee wonderingly through white puffs of smoke. His face was kindly, gentle, ineffectual.

"Yes," he admitted at last. "Yes, I'm Quimby."

Mr. Magee threw back his coat, and sprayed with snow Mrs. Quimby's immaculate floor.

"I'm Magee," he elucidated again. "William Hallowell Magee, the man Hal Bentley wrote to you about. You got his letter, didn't you?"

Mr. Quimby removed his pipe and forgot to close the aperture as he stared in amazement.

"Good Lord," he cried; "you don't mean—you've really come? Why, we—we thought it was all a joke!"

"Hal Bentley has his humorous moments," agreed Mr. Magee, "but it isn't his habit to fling his jests into Upper Asquewan Falls."

"And—and you're really going to"—Mr. Quimby could get no further.

"Yes," said Mr. Magee brightly, slipping into a rocking chair. "Yes; I'm going to spend the next few months at Baldpate inn."

"It's closed," expostulated Mr. Quimby. "The inn is closed, young fellow."

"I know it's closed," smiled Magee. "That's the very reason I'm going to honor it with my presence. I'm sorry to take you out on a night like this, but I'll have to ask you to lead me up to Baldpate. I believe those were Hal Bentley's instructions—in the letter."

Mr. Quimby towered above Mr. Magee, a shirt sleeved statue of honest American manhood. He scowled.

"Excuse a plain question, young man," he said, "but what are you hiding from?"

"I'm not hiding," said Magee. "Didn't Bentley explain? Well, I'll try to, though I'm not sure you'll understand. Sit down, Mr. Quimby. You are not, I take it, the sort of man to follow closely the frivolous literature of the day."

"What's that?" inquired Mr. Quimby.

"You don't read," continued Mr. Magee, "the sort of novels that are sold by the pound in the department stores. Now, if you had a daughter—a fluffy daughter inseparable from a hammock in the summer—she could help me explain. You see—I write those novels. Wild thrilling tales for the tired business man's tired wife—shots in the night, chases after fortunes, Cupid busy with his arrows all over the place! It's good fun, and I like to do it. There's money in it."

"Is there?" asked Mr. Quimby, with a show of interest.

"Considerable," replied Mr. Magee. "But now and then I get a longing to do something that will make the critics sit up—the real thing, you know. The other day I picked up a newspaper and found my latest brain child advertised as 'the best fall novel Magee ever wrote.' It got on my nerves. I felt like a literary dressmaker, and I could see my public laying down my fall novel and sighing for my early spring styles in fiction. I remembered that once upon a time a critic advised me to go away for ten years to some quiet spot and think. I decided to do it. Baldpate inn is the quiet spot."

"You don't mean," gasped Mr. Quimby, "that you're going to stay there ten years?"

"Bless you, no!" said Mr. Magee. "Critics exaggerate. Two months will do. They say I am a cheap melodramatic ranter. They say I don't go deep. They say my thinking process is a scream. I'm afraid they're right. Now, I'm going to go up to Baldpate inn and think. I'm going to get away from melodrama. I'm going to do a novel so fine and literary that Henry Cabot Lodge will come to me with tears in his eyes and ask me to join his bunch of self made immortals. I'm going to do all this up there at the inn, sitting on the mountain and looking down on this little old world as Jove looked down from Olympus."

"I don't know who you mean," objected Mr. Quimby.

"He was a god—the god of the fruit stand men," explained Magee. "Picture me, if you can, depressed by the overwhelming success of my latest brain child. Picture me meeting Hal Bentley in a Forty-fourth street club and asking him for the location of the lonesomest spot on earth. Hal thought a minute. 'I've got it,' he said, 'the lonesomest spot that's happened to date is a summer resort in midwinter. It makes Crusoe's island look like Coney on a warm Sunday afternoon in comparison.' The talk flowed on along with other things. Hal told me his father owned Baldpate inn and that you were an old friend of his, who would be happy for the entire winter over the chance to serve him. He happened to have a key to the place—the key to the big front door, I guess, from the weight of it—and he gave it to me. He also wrote you to look after me. So here I am."

CHAPTER II.

Alone on Baldpate Mountain.

"THIS ain't exactly—regular," Mr. Quimby protested. "No, it ain't what you might call a frequent occurrence. I'm glad to do anything I can for young Mr. Bentley, but I can't help wondering what his father will say. And there's a lot of things you haven't took into consideration."

"There certainly is, young man," remarked Mrs. Quimby, bustling forward. "How are you going to keep warm in that big barn of a place?"

"The suits on the second floor," said Mr. Magee, "are, I hear, equipped with fireplaces. Mr. Quimby will keep me supplied with fuel from the forest primeval, for which service he will receive $20 a week."

"And light?" asked Mrs. Quimby.

"For the present, candles. I have forty in that package. Later, perhaps, you can find me an oil lamp. Oh, everything will be provided for."

"Well," remarked Mr. Quimby, looking in a dazed fashion at his wife "I'll reckon I'll have to talk it over with ma."

The two retired to the next room, and Mr. Magee fixed his eyes on a "God Bless Our Home" motto while he awaited their return. Presently they reappeared.

"Was you thinking of eating?" inquired Mrs. Quimby sarcastically, "while you stayed up there?"

"I certainly was," smiled Mr. Magee. "For the most part I will prepare my own meals from cans and—er—jars—and such pagan sources. But now and then you, Mrs. Quimby, are going to send me something cooked as no other woman in the county can cook it. I can see it in your eyes. In my poor way I shall try to repay you."

He continued to smile into Mrs. Quimby's broad, cheerful face. Mr. Magee had the type of smile that moves men to part with ten until Saturday and women to close their eyes and dream of Sir Launcelot.

"It's all fixed," he cried. "We'll get on splendidly. And now—for Baldpate inn."

"Not just yet," said Mrs. Quimby. "I ain't one to let anybody go up to Baldgate inn unfed. I 'spose we're sort o' responsible for you while you're up here. You just set right down and I'll have your supper hot and smoking on the table in no time."

Mr. Magee entered into no dispute on this point, and for half an hour he was the pleased recipient of advice, philosophy and food. When he had assured Mrs. Quimby that he had eaten enough to last him the entire two months he intended spending at the inn Mr. Quimby came in attired in a huge "before the war" ulster and carrying a lighted lantern.

"So you're going to sit up there and write things," he commented. "Well, I reckon you'll be left to yourself, all right."

"I hope so," responded Mr. Magee. "I want to be so lonesome I'll sob myself to sleep every night. It's the only road to immortality. Goodby, Mrs. Quimby. In my fortress on the mountain I shall expect an occasional culinary message from you." He took her plump hand. This motherly little woman seemed the last link binding him to the world of reality.

"Goodby," smiled Mrs. Quimby. "Be careful of matches."

Mr. Quimby led the way with the lantern, and presently they stepped out upon the road.

"By the way, Quimby," remarked Mr. Magee, "is there a girl in your town who has blue eyes, light hair and the general air of a queen out shopping?"

"Light hair!" repeated Quimby. "There's Sally Perry. She teaches in the Methodist Sunday school."

"No," said Mr. Magee. "My description was poor, I'm afraid. This one I refer to, when she weeps, gives the general effect of mist on the sea at dawn. The Methodists do not monopolize her."

"I read books, and I read newspapers," said Mr. Quimby, "but a lot of your talk I don't understand."

"The critics," replied Billy Magee, "could explain. My stuff is only for low brows. Lead on, Mr. Quimby."

Baldpate inn did not stand tiptoe on the misty mountain top. Instead it clung with grim determination to the side of Baldpate, about halfway up, much as a city man clings to the running board of an open street car. This was the comparison Mr. Magee made, and even as he made it he knew that atmospheric conditions rendered it questionable. For an open street car suggests summer and the ball park; Baldpate inn, as it shouldered darkly into Mr. Magee's ken, suggested winter at its most wintry.

About the great black shape that was the inn, like arms, stretched broad verandas. Mr. Magee remarked upon them to his companion.

"Those porches and balconies and things," he said, "will come in handy in cooling the fevered brow of genius."

"There ain't much fever in this locality," the practical Quimby assured him, "especially not in winter."

Silenced, Mr. Magee followed the lantern of Quimby over the snow to the broad steps, and up to the great front door. There Magee produced from beneath his coat an impressive key. Mr. Quimby made as though to assist, but was waved aside.

"This is a ceremony," Mr. Magee told him, "some day Sunday newspaper stories will be written about it. Baldpate inn opening its doors to the great American novel!"

He placed the key in the lock, turned it, and the door swung open. The coldest blast of air Mr. Magee had ever encountered swept out from the dark interior.

"Whew," he cried, "we've discovered another pole!"

"It's stale air," remarked Quimby.

"You mean the polar atmosphere," replied Magee. "Yes, it is pretty stale. Jack London and Dr. Cook have worked it to death."

"I mean," said Quimby, "this air has been in here alone too long. It's as stale as last week's newspaper. We couldn't heat it with a million fires. We'll have to let in some warm air from outside first."

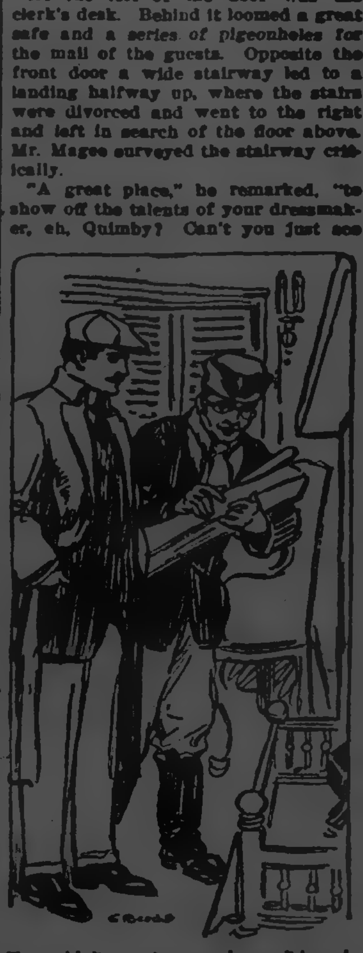
"Warm air—humph!" remarked Mr. Magee. "Well, live and learn."

The two stood together in a great bare room. When they stepped forward the sound of their shoes on the hard wood seemed the boom that should wake the dead.

"This is the hotel office," explained Mr. Quimby.

At the left of the door was the clerk's desk. Behind it loomed a great safe and a series of pigeonholes for the mail of the guests. Opposite the front door a wide stairway led to a landing halfway up, where the stairs were divorced and went to the right and left in search of the floor above. Mr. Magee surveyed the stairway critically.

"A great place," he remarked, "to show off the talents of your dressmaker, eh, Quimby? Can't you just see the stunning gowns coming down that stair in state and the young men below here agitated in their bosoms?"



"I wouldn't wander round none," he advised. "You might fall down something—or something."

"No, I can't," said Mr. Quimby frankly.

"I can't either, to tell the truth," laughed Billy Magee. He turned up his collar. "It's like picturing a summer girl sitting on an iceberg and swinging her openwork hosiery over the edge. I don't suppose it's necessary to register. I'll go right up and select my apartments."

It was upon a suit of rooms that bore the number seven on their door that Mr. Magee's choice fell. A large parlor with a fireplace that a few blazing logs would cheer, a bedroom, whose bed was destitute of all save mattress and springs, and a bathroom comprised his kingdom.

Mr. Magee inspected his apartment. The windows were all of the low French variety and opened out upon a broad snow covered balcony which was in reality the roof of the first floor veranda. On this balcony Magee stood a moment, watching the trees on Baldpate wave their black arms in the wind and the lights of Upper Asquewan Falls wink knowingly up at him. Then he came inside, and his investigations brought him presently to the tub in the bathroom.

"Fine," he cried—"a cold plunge in the morning before the daily struggle for immortality begins!"

He turned the spigot. Nothing happened.

"I reckon," drawled Mr. Quimby from the bedroom, "you'll carry your cold plunge up from the well back of the inn before you plunge into it. The water's turned off. We can't take chances with busted pipes."

"Of course," replied Magee less blithely. His ardor was somewhat dampened—a paradox—by the failure of the spigot to gush forth a response. "There's nothing I'd enjoy more than carrying eight pails of water upstairs every morning to get up an appetite for—what? Oh, well, the Lord will provide. If we propose to heat up the great American outdoors, Quimby, I think it's time we had a fire."

Soon Quimby came back with kindling and logs, and subsequently a noisy fire roared in the grate.

"I wouldn't wander round none," he advised. "You might fall down something—or something. I been living in these parts off and on for sixty years and more, and nothing like this ever come under my observation before. Howsomever, I guess it's all right if Mr. Bentley says so. I'll come up in the morning and see you down to the train."

"What train?" inquired Mr. Magee.

"Your train back to New York city," replied Mr. Quimby. "Don't try to start back in the night. There ain't no train till morning."

"Ah, Quimby," laughed Mr. Magee, "you taunt me. You think I won't stick it out. But I'll show you. I tell you I'm hungry for solitude."

"That's all right," Mr. Quimby responded. "You can't make three square meals a day off solitude."

"I'm desperate," said Magee. "Henry Cabot Lodge must come to me, I say, with tears in his eyes. Ever see the senator that way? No? It isn't going to be an easy job. I must put it over. I must go deep into the hearts of men up here and write what I find. No more shots in the night. Just the adventure of soul and soul. Do you see? By the way, here's $20, your first week's pay as caretaker of a New York Quixote."

"What's that?" asked Quimby.

"Quixote," explained Mr. Magee, "was a Spanish lad who was a little confused in his mind and went about the country putting up at summer resorts in midwinter."

"I'd expect it of a Spaniard," Quimby said. "Be careful of that fire. I'll be up in the morning." He stowed away the bill Mr. Magee had given him. "I guess nothing will interfere with your lonesomeness. Leastways I hope it won't. Good night."

Mr. Magee bade the man good night and listened to the thump of his boots and the closing of the great front door. From his windows he watched the caretaker move down the road without looking back, to disappear at last in the white night.

Throwing off his great coat, Mr. Magee noisily attacked the fire. The blaze flared red on his strong, humorous mouth, in his smiling eyes. Next, in the flickering half light of suit 7 he distributed the contents of his traveling bags about. On the table he placed a number of new magazines and a few books.

Then Mr. Magee sat down in the big leather chair before the fire and caught his breath.

Yes, here he was, and here was the solitude he had come to find. Mr. Magee looked nervously about, and the smile died out of his gray eyes. For the first time misgivings smote him. Might one not have too much of a good thing? A silence like that of the tomb had descended. He recalled stories of men who went mad from loneliness. What place lonelier than this? The wind howled along the balcony; it rattled the windows. Outside his door lay a great black cave, in summer gay with men and maids, now like Crusoe's island before the old man landed.

"Alone, alone; all, all alone," quoted Mr. Magee. "If I can't think here it will be because I'm not equipped with the apparatus. I will. I'll show the gloomy old critics! I wonder what's doing in New York?"

New York! Mr. Magee looked at his watch. Eight o'clock. The great street was ablaze. The crowds were parading from the restaurants to the theaters. The electric signs were pasting lurid legends on a long suffering sky; the taxis were spraying throats with gasoline; the traffic cop at Broadway and Forty-second street was madly earning his pay. Mr. Magee got up and walked the floor. New York!

AUSTRALIAN HILL TO BOX IN STATES

FAMOUS FEATHERWEIGHT ANXIOUS TO MEET AMERICAN BOXERS.

New York Aug. 18.—Jimmy Hill, the Australian featherweight, who recently arrived in this country, has not since invading the States, taken part in a bout, but he will soon be seen in action. Hill is becoming acclimated on this side of the water and is taking on a little weight.

The Australian is anxious to meet some of the leading lightweights here, and he may be given a chance to show his skill against Champion Benny Leonard, Johnny Dundee, Lew Tendley, Ritchie Mitchell and Joe Walling are also on his list.

In the antipodes, Hill was considered the greatest featherweight Australia had since the days of young Griffo. William F. Corbett, an Australian sporting authority, declared just before Hill left for this country, that he was one of the cleverest fighters in the ring, and in fairly good condition he should encounter little trouble in defeating men within five or six pounds of his weight. Hill, besides showing skill in his bouts, proved he could hit hard.

RACE ENTRIES AT TORONTO EXHIBIT

THREE-YEAR-OLD NO FILLED—REOPENED TILL WED., AUG. 25.

The following incomplete list of entries to the eight races at the Canadian National Exhibition was obtained to a late hour Saturday:

2.30 trot—Miss Clara Todd, The Saxon, Harry Ross, Bernard McKinney, Nannie Extellion, Mae McKinley, Helena Bingen.—(7).

2.30 pace—Billy Patch, Opera Boy, Bob Abdell, Helena Ringen, Viril Maid, Bub, Frank M., Lady of the Lake, Darkey Hal, Jr., Steve Ayres, The Baronet.—(11).

2.18 trot—Miss Clara Todd, Farmer Gentry, Todd Megregor, Mony, Battle, Nannie Extellion, Letanna, Koralia.—(8).

2.22 pace—Mansfield Bertha Walsh, Imbre, Elsie Onward, Mary Peters, Cleo B, Camelia.—(7).

Three-year-old trot—Leonard S., Jim Fletcher, Bob Bin.—(3).

2.12 trot—Mony, Ingra.—(2).

Free for all pace—Hal B., Jr., 2.02¼; Hazel H., 2.04 ¼! Camelia, 2.04¾; Frank Bogash, Jr., 1.59¾; Mussel Schell, 2.06¼.

The directorate of the big fair are highly elated over the general entry, only regret the fact that the three-year-old trot failed to fill, however, to encourage colt racing, this race and the 2.12 trot have been re-opened until Wednesday, August 25. Entries for these two events will be accepted bearing the post mark of that date, and since the success of this event will largely determine the establishment of a futurity in this country, it is of vital interest to breeders.

THORPE HAS LOST BATTING LEAD

PHILADELPHIA MANAGER GAVVY CRAVATH NOW HEADS THE LIST.

Chicago, Aug. 16.—Jim Thorpe, the Indian outfielder of the Boston Braves, has relinquished the batting leadership of the National League, according to averages released today, and which include games of last Wednesday. He has dropped to second place, with an average of .348. Gavvy Cravath, Philadelphia, former league leader, who was dethroned early in July by the Indian, has again advanced to the head of the list with a mark of .351. The number of .300 hitters is gradually dwindling, the list being cut to thirteen. Benny Kauff, New York, and Cravath, are sharign home-run honors, with nine circuit drives for each. Cutshaw, Pittsburg, continued to show the way to the base stealers with 29 thefts. Other leading batters of the National League, who participated in forty or more games, are: McHenry, St. Louis, .330; Roush, Cincinnati, .323; Z. Wheat, Brooklyn, .318; Hornsby, St. Louis, .310; Myers, Brooklyn, .308; Doyle, New York, .306; Barbare, Pittsburg, .305; Stock, St. Louis, .302; Holke, Boston, .300; Clemons, St. Louis, .300.

Ty Cobb Detroit's star, increased his lead among the American League batters during the past week, and now is fourteen points in front of the runners up. Veach, a team-mate, and Sisler of St. Louis, who are tied for second place with .371. Sisler is out in front among the base stealers with 24 stolen sacks to his credit. Ruth, Boston, seems unable to increase his home-run total, which remains at sixteen.

Other leading batters in the American League for forty or more games: Peckinpaugh, New York, .340; Jacobson, St. Louis, .338; Jackson, Chicago, .331; Rice, Washington, .323; Heilman, Detroit, .323; Flagstead, Detroit, .322; Fewster, New York, .322; Ruth, Boston, .311; Chapman, Cleveland, .311.

FRANCE BEATS BELGIUM

London, Aug. 17.—In the Davis cup match France beat Belgium three to nothing. Deucgis beat Deborman, 6-2, 6-3, 6-4; Laurentz beat Lammens, 5-7, 6-3, 6-4, 5-2. Decugis and Laurentz of France beat Deborman and Lammens, 6-3, 7-5 6-2.

WILL STIMULATE INTERNAT'L GOLF

RECENT CHAMPIONSHIP EVENT THE BEGINNING OF AMERICAN-CANADIAN MEETINGS.

New York, Aug. 18.—According to Chas. Evans, jr., national amateur golf champion the international match with Canada recently was only the beginning of these meetings between golfers from this country and across the border. Evans compares the international contest with the seniors' gatherings, and says that as one grows so will the other. He pointed out that George S. Lyon, many times Canadian champion, had the honor of being the only golfer eligible to play on both the teams. Evans, who is a great admirer of things Canadian, made the following comment:

"I recall the American and British flags waving together over a little club house at Guelph, Canada, where the first Red Cross match on this continent was played in 1916, and the next day at Hamilton I saw the Stars and Stripes floating out, underneath the flag of Britain, on the warm July breeze. Wherever I played on that course I could see the two flags, and I thought what a wonderful thing was the game of golf thus to bring them together. That was before we entered the war and every golf club in Canada was mourning its dead.

"Canada challenged us to this contest. Not with the hope of winning, however, because she knew she had little chance; in fact, I heard a prominent Canadian golfer say that he did not expect their team to win a single match. They are looking to the future, the object being to institute an annual international team clash. In years to come it will be considered a great honor to play on the teams."

Maybe by 1928.

"We are reorganizing the police department to make it more efficient and to speed it up in its operations, but I think this would be just a little bit too fast for Indianapolis," remarked George V. Coffin, chief of police, as he handed over a letter he had received from an eastern corporation urging the Indianapolis police department to put in an aviation section in connection with its other departments.

The letter explained how a machine equipped with a wireless telephone, and operated by a police aviator, could keep the chief informed of conditions at all points within a radius of twenty miles of his office. It also said that many lives and millions of dollars would be saved in such catastrophies as the Minnesota forest fires, the Dayton and San Diego floods, by the use of airplane communication.

General O'Ryan's Constellation.

It is not often that a military commander perpetrates a pun, observes Outlook. A veritable pun, however, has been imprinted on the helmets and motortrucks of the American Twenty-seventh division. A recent number of the Gas Attack shows a device in which a number of stars are so arranged as to correspond with the constellation Orion. Now, as every one knows, the gallant and efficient commander of that division is General O'Ryan. The idea is clever, and perhaps a bit humorous. Certainly General O'Ryan has proved himself a military star, and the Twenty-seventh division in its capture of Mont Kemmel and its thrust through the Hindenburg line south of Cambrai is truly entitled to be considered some constellation.

Alaskan Indians End War.

War, mostly of the smoldering variety, but which in past generations has blazed up and drawn blood, no longer exists between the Sitka and Wrangell clans of the Kock-Wan-Ton caste of the Thlinket Indian tribe of southeastern Alaska. Peace has been declared. The Indians decided to set aside their tribal customs. Disputes, the Indians decided, in the future will be settled by the white man's law, instead of by hostilities. No Indian now living can remember the time when the Sitkas and Wrangells were at peace. With the passing of many of the old tribesmen, however, the younger men, imbued with the ideas of modern civilization taught them in the government schools, decided they wanted peace.

Another Prince in America

THE visit of the Prince of Wales to the United States recalls the famous occasion when his grandfather, then Prince of Wales and later King Edward VII visited the republic.

The former Prince of Wales stood on American soil for the first time on September 17, 1860, at Niagara Falls, wishing to get his last view of them from the American side, but his official visit began three days later when he landed in Detroit. So densely were the streets packed that the prince, or Baron Renfrew, as be called himself for the visit, had to enter his hotel by a side door; and one spectator remarked that there could have been no greater curiosity manifested if the distinguished visitor had been George Washington come to life again.

From Detroit, the royal party went to Chicago, where some 50,000 citizens turned out to do the prince honor, and where about the same number sought to entertain him. So exhausted was the young man by the hospitality of the Chicago folks that on the train for St. Louis he had a temporary breakdown. A stop was made accordingly at Dwight's Station, where there was good shooting, and in the course of a short stay the prince bagged a number of quail and rabbits. His host, a Mr. Spencer, said of the guests, "The party dress roughly and walk about the village, smoking pipes in the most democratic style." An unpleasant incident occurred at Dwight's Station, for one day the party were about to enter a farmhouse, when the owner appeared and said, "Not you, Newcastle! I have been a tenant of yours and have sworn that you shall not set foot on my land." So the journey was resumed in such a way as to avoid touching the property of this former Englishman.

From St. Louis the prince went to Cincinnati and attended a great ball, but it is recorded that the thrifty or forgetful Cincinnatians having neglected to provide a supper, the royal visitor left at 12.30. On this occasion, the prince having announced his desire to have the second dance with Miss Groesbeck, a beautiful young lady who had gone to the ball devoid of any jewels, her mother removed her own jewels and asked her daughter to wear them. The young lady declined, however, and danced with the prince arrayed only in her own beauty and her severely simple attire. From Cincinnati the prince went by way of Pittsburg and Harrisburg to Washington, taking up his residence at the White House, where he remained for five days. He visited the tomb of Washington at Mount Vernon, and many an editorial article was written on the text of the young heir to the British crown standing bareheaded at the foot of the coffin of the man who had wrested the thirteen colonies from the Empire he was one day to reign over.

After he left Washington, President Buchanan wrote to Queen Victoria: "In our domestic circle he has won all hearts. His free and ingenuous intercourse with myself evinces both a kind heart and a good understanding." From Washington the prince went to Baltimore, then to Philadelphia, where he heard Adelina Patti sing, and was so delighted that he asked that she be presented to him, and then on to New York. He was met by Mayor Wood, and drove to his quarters in the Fifth Avenue Hotel, through a throng of half a million people. Here again there were magnificent balls and receptions arranged for him, and probably he never had a busier week in his life, what with listening to addresses, planting trees, visiting various institutions and seeing points of historic interest. The great ball held at the Academy of Music was the greatest social function in the history of New York society, and there were 3,000 invitations. So great was the crush that the flooring gave way, and two people were slightly hurt.

A rather untoward incident occurred when the prince was driving through Madison Square a day or so later. An Englishman, named Edward Moncane, rushed to the side of the royal carriage and shouted: "Who are you? I can whip you, anyway. You will never be King of England if you live a hundred years." He later explained to a magistrate that he had to come over from a steamboat on which he worked "to see what sort of boy the Americans were making fools of themselves over." Again, when the prince was leaving New York for Albany, an Irishman yelled, "An' sure an' he's gone, an' may he never come back!" an insult that so enraged a gentleman named Morrow, who was standing nearby, that he "knocked him for a goal." Passing through Albany the Prince of Wales reached Boston, where he met Longfellow, Holmes, Emerson and other famous Americans. At Bunker Hill he exchanged autographs with Ralph Farnham, sole survivor of the famous battle, and who remarked that "He wished to show the boy that he bore no anger for old times." The party left Portland on the homeward voyage, but encountered such rough weather that the Hero was several days overdue before she made port, and intensifying the enthusiasm with which the beloved prince was welcomed back.

To Draw the Prince of Wales

(1) Sixteen of these wonderful engines will soon be running on the C. P. R. lines.
(2) A Front View: The 2300 is capable of drawing a train twice the size of an ordinary train.

Big and still bigger locomotives are being turned out by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Sixteen new ones are being built at the Angus Shops, Montreal, at the rate of one for every five and a half working days. They are masterpieces of engineering workmanship, the largest and heaviest passenger locomotives in the Dominion, and construction has been speeded up so that those required might be ready in time to draw the Royal Train carrying the Prince of Wales across Canada. They were specially designed, and constructed under the direct supervision of Mr. W. H. Winterrowd, chief mechanical engineer of the C. P. R. The total weight of each engine and tender in working order is 480,000 lbs., the cylinders are 25 inches by 30 inches, the diameter of the driving wheels 75 inches, and the boiler carries 200 lbs. steam pressure—giving the locomotive a tractive effort of 42,000 lbs.

The boilers are very large, each one containing approximately 5,000 square feet of heating surface. A superheater delivers the steam to the cylinders at a high temperature. The tender holds 8,000 imperial gallons of water and 12 tons of coal.

The engines are equipped with a vestibule cab which completely protects the engine men from the bad weather. These cabs are very comfortable and are conveniently arranged, being provided with large clothes lockers.

The new locomotives are to be used in the passenger service of the C. P. R., between Fort William and Winnipeg, and between Smiths Falls, Trenton and Havelock. They are sufficiently powerful to eliminate the necessity for running a number of heavy passenger trains in two sections, one of the new engines being able to handle the number of cars that it formerly took two locomotives to draw.

Navy Vegetables.

Admiral Simms said at a dinner in New York.

"It's no wonder that the Turkish navy failed to do much in the war. The Turks were never a maritime people.

"The story goes, in fact, that when they came to set up a navy in Turkey, they were very much embarrassed by the shortage of naval words in their language. They had no word for mainsail, no word for fore-top-gallant, and so on.

"To get over the difficulty, the Turks tied different vegetables and the like to the different sails and ropes, and the men learned their duties to such commands as:

"'Hoist the potato!'

"'Now, then, my hearties, let go the tomato with a will!'

"'All hands aloft to reef the beefsteak!'"

An inventor has added a strap cutter to the familiar nail-puller for packing cases.

Disapproves Old Adage.

In spite of the old adage to the contrary, some things done by halves are done most satisfactorily, as for example the much-used Quinsigamond bridge at Worcester, Mass. Here traffic suffered a minimum of interruption by completing and putting into use one longitudinal half of the new structure before the other half was built.

MAY BE TRUTH IN LEGEND.

Investigation of an Enchanted Table In New Mexico.

An isolated butte rising out of a vast plain in the vast southwest—a flat-topped hill 430 feet high and with sides so nearly vertical that for many centuries it was supposed to be hopelessly climb-proof, is one of the most interesting of the natural wonders of this part of the United States.

Many Attempts to climb the "Enchanted Table" or "Mesa Encantada," as the first Spanish settlers called it, have been made, but Indian superstition has attributed their failure largely to a supernatural influence that balked the ascent. Hence the name "Enchanted."

According to the Indian legend, the mesa, which is three miles northeast of the well-known Acoma pueblo, in New Mexico, was very anciently the site of a prehistoric village. A frightful storm carried away part of the rock and with it the rocky staircase which offered the only patch of access to the summit.

As a result, the people in the village were cut off from the plain below. They could not clim down, no help could reach them, and they starved to death. The only survivors were a few who by chance were absent from the mesa top at the time of the disaster. From them, it is explained, are sprung the present-day inhabitants of the pueblo of Acoma.

But science, while disposed to be incredulous of things unproved, is at the same time inclined to investigation. Hence an expedition which the United States Government bureau of ethnology sent out to climb the Mesa Encantada. The party, after almost incredible efforts, arrived upon the top.

What they expected to find was—nothing. But, to their surprise, they discovered, on the summit of the mesa, plain and unmistakable evidences of ancient occupancy, such as ruined walls, and what they saw there afforded a measurable confirmation of the Indian legend.

GOOD SCORES AT SHOOT

The Peterborough Gun Club held their weekly shoot Friday evening and some good scores were handed in. Roy Hutchinson broke 24 out of 25 after some nice shooting. Chris Wood and T. Curvin had a match shoot and it ended in a tie, each breaking 23. They will shoot it off next Friday evening.

The members of the local club are very enthusiastic over the splendid shoot and treatment accorded them at Port Hope last Wednesday. They say the sky line at the southern town trap is ideal. It is expected that the Shoot open to the Trent Valley District may be pulled off at Port Hope when squads and gunners from Belleville, Trenton, Stirling, Campbellford, Cobourg, Port Hope and Peterborough will take part. In the McGraw Cup Series which ended with Friday's shoot, Stan Coon won the Cup with Chris Graham second and Chris Wood and C. Mills tied for third place.

1,300,000 LETTERS HELD DURING WAR

STOPPED BY CENSORS WILL BE SENT TO DESTINATION SHORTLY.

London, Aug. 17. The forwarding of mail detained during the war by the postal censor will be completed on August 30, the war office announces. The mail was held because its transmission would have assisted the German military and naval plans, increased the commercial and financial resources of the enemy or added the far-reaching German political and commercial propaganda campaign.

The handing over of this delayed matter began on June 25. It is estimated that 630,000,000 pieces of mail were examined during the war and that 1,300,000 were detained of which 592,500 had been released recently. Approximately 150,000 pieces of mail originated in the United States or were going to the United States when they reached the censor's hands. Of the remaining matter, that originating in or destined for the United Kingdom, will be destroyed, except the letters or packages containing articles of value and documents of importance.

For Prize Court.

In regard to mails routed over the United Kingdom to and from foreign countries, and mails handed from neutral ships which entered territorial waters, it has been decided that pieces containing goods, currency, securities and other valuable financial papers will be put into prize court. Commercial and private correspondence containing valuable documents will be released. Other private correspondence will be destroyed because of the great cost of re-examination. The war office statement adds:

"The disposal of these detained packets has been the subject of long and careful consideration. The decisions reached have been governed by a desire to guard the interests of neutral as well as of allied nations, to avoid as far as possible injury to commercial firms and invividuals and to avoid unreasonable expense.

THEATRICAL

TOM MOORE'S FACE REQUIRED PATCHING AFTER PISTOL FIGHT

In spite of his amiability and invariable good nature Tom Moore has his moment of storm and stress on the screen when his audiences do not know. The likable star has made his mark in comedy-dramas laid in the environment of polite society or simple domestic life. For this reason his admirers do not associate with him the narrow escapes and thrills attending the efforts of more strenuous players. But if they stopped to think—or if they were let into the secrets of producing Goldwyn Pictures—they would come to realize that even the quietest play has its moments of suspense and in some cases, even danger.

Take "One of the Finest," for instance, his newest Goldwyn Picture, which comes to the Grand, today, Tuesday and Wednesday. It is an appealing human sort of play, replete with moment of quiet charm and fresh humor. Yet it is in this very production that Tom Moore had most to contend with. As a policeman, the role assumed by the star, he might be expected to to meet with stirring adventures in the performance of his duties. This is precisely what does happen though the danger of the scenes is not guessed by the audience.

When he sees a limousine speeding in the park, where he is on guard as a mounted officer, there is no danger in the brisk canter which brings him up to the machine. Nor is there danger—except to his heart—when beautiful Seena Owen, as the society heroine, meets his eyes with a cold stare and listens to his rebuke. She construes it as impertinence and has him demounted as a result. Certainly there is on danger in that, except to the policeman's pride. But later when she is astride a runaway horse and the same policeman dashes to her rescue there is a very real danger for both. It is a wild ride, the smooth bridle path at breakneck speed with the star in alarmed pursuit. This is depicted on the screen with absolute fidelity and in such a way that it is easily seen other people were not risking their lives for Tom Moore and his leading woman. Both insisted on no substitutes being provided.

In a obsleter episode however the star bucked up against more serious peril. It came about through an encounter with Edwin Sturgis in the role of Gus Andrews, an escaped convict. The latter attempts to burglarize the home Tom Moore is guarding as a plain clothes man and the two indulge in gun play which eventually leads to the temporary undoing of the intruder. In this exchange of shots, accomplished on the screen with telling effect, Tom Moore sustained an injury. First the scene was photographed at closer range than appears in the play, the result being that he was badly burned about the face. Although blanks were used, of course, the exploding powder came dangerously near his eyes.

At once there was consternation among the company while Tom Moore, hardly knowing what had happened, begged them not to be alarmed, that he was all right. His chief regret was that he was shown in the picture that something unexpected had happened and spoiled a good scene. Of course he was patched up and the incident retaken. But it was several days before the close-up in which Seena Owen dabs his temples with her handkerchief could be done because of the condition of Tom Moore's countenance. All of which gives the lie to the popular belief that a favorite screen hero is protected in the manner of a jewel in a glass case.

CIVIC RECEPTION TO GRENADIER'S BAND

COMMITTEE OF BOARD OF TRADE TO CO-OPERATE WITH COUNCIL.

Arrangements are being completed between the reception committee of the Board of Trade and the City Council to give the Band of the Grenadier Guards a royal welcome when they arrive in the City next Friday for their concert at the Grand Opera House that evening. This wonderful musical organization is coming direct from England, by permission of His Majesty King George to play a limited engagement at the Canadian National Exhibition Toronto, and Peterborough is very highly honored in having this distinguished British Band visit here, especially as it is the only concert in Ontario, before their engagement at the Toronto Fair.

DANCED WITH THE PRINCE

The present Prince of Wale's grandfather, the late King Edward, visited Cobourg in 1860 and opened the Victoria Hall. Up to a few years back there resided in Peterborough three elderly maiden sisters, the Misses Corrigan, one of whom danced at that opening with the then heir apparent to the throne of Great Britain. The late Mr. F. R. Yokome, this city at the time of his death had in his possession the piano that was played at the Cobourg dance on that occasion. But, to the regret of Cobourg citizens, the intineary of H. R. H. the Prince of Wales does not include our popular Ontario lake summer resort.

AMERICAN AVIATORS HELD BY BANDITS FOR RANSOM RESCUED THIS MORNING

Capt. Matlock, of Eighth Cavalry, Played Sharp Trick and Saved Half Ransom Money Demanded—Aviators Held Captive For a Week Had Engine Trouble and Landed on American Side of Rio Grande

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Marfa, Tex., Aug. 19.—Lieuts. H. G. Peterson and Paul H. Davis, aviators of the United States army, held captive for more than a week by Mexican bandits who demanded a ransome of $15,000. were rescued early this morning by Capt. Matlack of the eighth cavalry, who, according to an agreement, made the journey into the Mexican rendevous, unaccompanied. The men are not safe in American territory.

Officer Played Sharp.

Capt. Matlack brought back with him one-half of the ransom money. He said, after Peterson had been released on payment of $7,500, Davis was brought forward by the bandits and the two mounted Capt. Matlack's horses. The bandits here demanded the remainder of the ransom money, but Capt. Matlack and Davis answered by riding rapidly . .

Story of the Capture.

The aviators landed on American side of the river, Lieut. Peterson said. Upon their arrival at Candelaria a week ago Sunday, their engine developed trouble and they were forced to land. smashing their landing gear and fusilage in doing so. The two aviators then tried to find their way to the nearest army camp and became confused. They walked and swam down the Rio Grand during Monday. Lieut. Peterson and Davis then hired Mexican burros after Peterson developed fever.

Overtaken by Bandits.

The two officers had started for Candelaria when they were overtaken by a band of armed bandits, Lieut. Peterson said. They continued on their forced journey until Friday night, when the bandits compelled the aviators to write messages demanding a ransom and telling of a death threat. They were unharmed.

Troops in Pursuit

Troops of the United States cavally crossed the Mexican border this morning in pursuit of the bandits who held aviators Peterson and Davis for ransom. Aviators are cooperating with the cavalry as scouts to locate bandits.

ARCHDUKE JOSEPH TO RESIGN POST

WILL NO LONGER HOLD TEMPORARY DICTATORSHIP OWING TO OPPOSITION OF SOCIALISTS.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Budapest, Aug. 19. Archduke Joseph has agreed to resign his place at temporary dictator of the Hungarian government because of socialists objecting to him. But he has consented to remain at the head of the state for the time being, as Peasant leaders and members of the reactionary party protested.

These leaders were said to have declared they would cause the food blockade against Budapest to be re-established unless the Archduke continued to act as regent.

BRITISH FLEET SENDS BOLSHEVIK SEA FIGHTING UNIT TO BOTTOM OF OCEAN

Engagement in Gulf of Finland Results in Loss of Battleship "Andres Pervosven," Battle Cruiser "Petropariovsk," Transport and Guardship—British Loss 3 Motor Boats, 8 Officers, 3 Men Killed.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Helsingforse, Finland, Aug. 19.—Bolshevik battleship "Andres Pervosven," the battle cruiser "Petropaviovsk," with transport and guardship, are reported today to have been sunk during an engagement with British fleet in the Gulf of Finland on Sunday.

The British are said to have lost three motor boats and to have had eight officers and three men killed.

Reported Sunk Before.

The "Andrea Pervosan" was reported as probably sunk by a torpedo near Kronstadt, on June 19, according to dispatches received in London shortly afterwards, but there was no confirmation of this. At the same time it was said the Bolshevik battleship "Petropavlousk" had hoisted the white flag.

The "Pervosvan" was 454 feet long, carried normally a crew of 933 men and was armed with four 12-inch guns, fourteen eight-inch guns, twelve 4.7-inch guns, and a heavy minor battery. She was built in 1907. "Petropaulovsk" was a late type of Russian battleship, five hundred feet long, and with a displacement of 23,370 tons. She carried twelve 12-inch guns and the usual batteries of smaller weapons.

CONFERENCE ON THE PEACE TREATY

PRESIDENT WILSON DISCUSSES QUESTION WITH SENATE AND FOREIGN RELATIONS COM. TODAY.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Aug. 19.—In a conference at the White House today, unprecedented in American history, President Wilson discussed the peace treaty with the Senate and Foreign Relations Committee, answered questions put by Senators and gave out a strenographiq transcript of the proceedings to the public. Some of the inside details of the Peace Conference, how League of Nations' covenant was drawn and other historic happenings were handed out verbatim for the world to read, in contrast to the time honored procedure of secrecy, presidential and senatorial confidence.

Plea For Ratification.

Making a plea for ratification of treaty that the world may be turned wholly back to a peace basis, the President said he saw no reasonable objection to the Senate pressing its interpretation of the League of Nations' covenant, so long as these interpretations did not actually become part of the act of ratification.

JUDGING THE LOCAL LAWNS

Mr. W. H. Foord Here—Meeting This Evening Called Off.

Mr. W. H. Foord, formerly superintendent of Little Lake Cemetery, now superintendent of Mount Pleasant Cemetery, Toronto, is in the city today judging the lawns and gardens entered in the competition for prizes offered by the Horticultural Society. It was planned to have Mr. Foord address a meeting of the members of the society and other citizens at the rooms of the Board this evening but Mr. Foord finds it necesary to return to Toronto this afternoon so that the meeting has been called off.

ENFORCEMENT BILL GETS O.K.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 18. — A favorable report on the house prohibition enforcement bill, as redrafted by a subcommittee, was ordered today by the judiciary committee of the senate.

G.N. GORDEN TALKS OF AN ACTION FOR DAMAGES AGAINST REVIEW

Alleges that His Client Sergt. Blade, Has Been Libeled by This Paper and Demands Apology Which Review Refuses to Make

The Review has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the following communication from Gordon & O'Brien, under date of August 18th:

Re: A. W. BLADE VS. REVIEW PRINTING CO., AND A. H. STRATTON

Mr. A. W. Blade, a member of the Peterborough Police Force, has retained us to act for him and has instructed us to bring an action against you personally, and the Review Company for damages for a libelous statement contained in the Daily Review on Tuesday, August 12th., 1919, reflecting upon him and his position as a member of the police force.

This is only one of a series of articles, one being contained in a former issue of the Review, and that complained of, being a communication from you to the Great War Veterans' Association of Peterborough.

Mr. Blade complains that this has injured him in his profession, and that your motive for attacking him and attempting inflame public opinion against him is malicious, and without justification and the statements contained in the various communications are in part untrue.

Unless a written apology, in a form approved of by us, is delivered to us we will serve notice of action tomorrow and follow the same by a Writ in the Supreme Court for Libel.

Yours Truly,
GORDON & O'BRIEN,
Per. G. N. Gordon.

Mr Gordon is at liberty to proceed with his threatened action for libel. There is no intention on the part of The Review to retract anything that it has said in connection with this case. The Review has simply discharged its duty as a purveyor of the current news of the day. The Great War Veterans' Association, of which we believe Mr. Gordon is solicitor, sent to the Police Commission a protest against a particular member of the police force engaging in private occupation while off duty, a procedure which, it seems, is prohibited by the printed regulations of the Department. This fact was duly chronicled in The Review, with editorial comment. For this we have no apology to offer.

The alleged offending article to which Mr. Gordon seems to take special objection, published in The Review of August 12th, last, was as follows:

THE CASE OF SERGT. BLADE

The members of the G. W. V. A. sent to the Police Commission a communication protesting against Sergt. Blade of the force engaging in side lines during his off hours, such as washing autos, acting as chauffeur and soliciting insurance. The Trades and Labor Council is also on record as holding the same view.

The Commission decided that they could not interfere with what one of their men does when not actually engaged on city work. Sergt. Blade can continue to draw his wages as a civic employe and at the same time edge some man, even if that man be a returned soldier, out of a job. This too, at a time when so many men are idle.

How long would any member of that Police Commission stand for the same conditions in private business? How long would any member of the Board employ a man at regular and adequate wages and permit him to work for someone else during his leisure time? The Police Commissioners are not helpless in this matter as they appear to claim They would be well within their rights if they insisted that every member of the force either confine himself to the duties for which he is paid or resign his position. The same principles should be applied to the management of civic affairs as those which prevail in private business.

When Mayor Duncan was a plain alderman he was in favor of a police board under aldermanic control, just as he has at times expressed himself with relation to expenditures by the school board. Not so many years ago Mayor Duncan supported a resolution in favor of reducing the salaries of the members of the police force. That was when he stretched his legs under an aldermanic desk. When be became mayor and a member of the Police Commission he seems to have undergone a change of heart. It is of record that the mayor moved for an increase of police compensation less than a year ago. He is, too, an avowed friend of the Veterans, and yet it seems that he filed no protest against the action of his colleagues in deciding to permit Sergt. Blade to do double duty.

The War Veterans in this matter have another illustration of what is meant by fair weather friends.

The Review here and now reaffirms every statement in the above article and stands by it in its integrity. Mr. Gordon will please accept this answer as final and govern himself accordingly. We say as much in regard to any other article we have published concerning this case. Mr. Gordon can do his best—or his worst.

Mr. Gordon in his letter speaks of one of the alleged offending articles as a communication from this paper to the G. W. V. A.. There is evidently some mistake. The Review has never sent such a communication and Secretary Whatley is ready to bear us out in this statement.

WILL LAY CASE OF SERGT. BLADE BEFORE THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

That Action Was Decided at Meeting of G.W.V.A Last Night—Members of Association not Permitted to Hold Two Positions

The Great War Veterans' Association will lay all the facts and data connected with their complaint that Police Sergt. Blade is engaged in other pursuits than his duties as constable, in off-hours before the Attorney-General, I. B. Lucas, for his ruling on the matter. This decision was reached by the G. W. V. A. in regular session last night, when Secretary Whatley, reported the Police Commissioners' reply to the effect that members of the force are at liberty to indulge their own inclinations in off hours so long as they keep within the law and rules and regulations governing the force.

Should Devote all Time

President Staunton quoted from the police rules and regulations that the force are to devote their whole time to the service.

The construction put on this by the Veterans was that the police are also to consider themselves liable to be called on at any time should occasion warrant.

Not One-Sided Press Story

One said some citizens had looked upon the complaint in question as a one-sided press story, but on learning that the same principle involved obtained with the G.W.V.A. in regard to their own members, they endorsed the veterans' stand, and advised that all such incidents be given limelight in open meetings in the association's rooms.

In this conection, the association is objecting that a member employed at the local post office is working for the street railway evenings, and the matter is now before Postmaster Edgar for adjustment.

A comrade remarked that the returned soldier said to have been affected by the constable alleged to be washing and running cars in off hours, had resigned his position now.

All Veterans in attendance last night were a unit in concluding to lay the whole matter before the Attorney General of the Province.

BRITISH FLEET OFF KRONSTADT

Attacking Naval Port of Petrograd—Kronstadt is Burning.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Stockholm, Aug 19—The reinforced British fleet, which has been engaged with Bolshevik war vessels, is concentrated against Kronstadt, the naval port of Petrograd, a dispatch from Helsingfors says. The city of Kronstadt, it is said, is burning.

Sinking Confirmed

London, Aug. 19.—The British Admiralty officially confirmed day, the sinking on Monday morning of a Bolshevik squadron in the Gulf of Finland.

DOWN WITH PROFITEERS

St. Catharines' Grape Growers Gather For Action.

St. Catharines, Aug. 19. Amaciable arrangements between the growers, the wine manufacturers an dthe dealers with a view to eliminating, it possible, the profiteer, is the aim of the Niagara District Grape Growers' Association, which was formed with an initial membership of 200 in the court house.

James A. Livingstone, of Grimsby, speaking of this aim of the association, referred to the prices of last year when grapes sold hee for 30 cents a basket and were retailed in Calgary f or90 cents, three times as much as the grawer received. Various forms of action were discussed.

EMPLOYERS HELP VETERANS

New quarters in remodelled offices in Brantford have been occupied by the vocational branch of the department of soldiers' civil re-establishment. The local branch claims a record in placing men. Major Fitzpatrick, officer in charge of staff, gives high praise for this to the local employers who are working with the department.

FORTY-EIGHT HOUR WEEK, LIVING WAGE FOR BRITISH INDUSTRIES

Lloyd George Plans Improved Labor Conditions—Proposes Joint Council of Employers and Employees—Partial Govt. Control of Coal Industry Also on Programme.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 19.—The House of Commons, which listened yesterday to Premier Lloyd George's declaration of the Government's policies on many British problems, took recess today until October 22.

Three Conclusions.

The country has now before it three principal conclusions, which Lloyd George told the House yesterday, had been reached by the government. These were abandonment on Sept. 1 of the present system of licensing. which is to be replaced by measures to prevent "dumping" the declaration that the Government plans a partial control of the coal industry, giving miners a share in controlling mining policies and the announcement that the Government will recommend a joint industrial council of employers and employes. and provide a forty-eight-hour week and living wages in virtually every industry

AVIATOR AND REPORTER KILLED

Paducah, Ky., Aug. 19.—Lieut. Jas. D. Stewart of Park field, Memphis, and S. Reed Cmpbell, a reported employed by the Commercial Appeal, were killed when the army airplane in which they were giving exhibition flights fell near the Country club here last night

NO GRANT FOR TUNNEL

In a communication from Premier Sir Robert Borden received by Mayor Winter of Windsor, it was stated that owing to the retrenchment made necessary by the war no Governmental aid could be expected for the construction of an international bridge or tunnel to connect Windsor with Detroit "for many years to come."

NEWSPAPERS SAY THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT HAS NO POLICY

Declare Lloyd George Does Not Know his Own Mind, That Nation is Filled With Disquietude at Government's Failure to Show Strong Leadership—Coal Policy Criticised.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 19.—Newspapers of widely differing views declare Mr. Lloyd George's speech in the Commons yesterday showed that the Government has not policy and does not know its own mind. These newspapers declare the nation will be filled with disquietude at the Government's failure to show strong leadership.

Coal Proposals Criticised.

Even the Premier's proposals on the coal situation are generally criticised. Advocates of the nationalization of coal industry, express, indignation and accuse the Government of breaking its promise to carry out the findings of the Sankey Commission.

Provoke Direct Action.

The Herald, a Labor paper, notifies the Government that workers are determined to have nationalization, and that a rejection of the Sankey report which favored such a course will provoke "direct action."

Has Antagonized Labor

According to the Lobby correspondent of the Daily Mail the opinion in the lobbies of Parliament was that the Premier now seemingly had cast in his lot with unionists rather than with his old followers. His defence of business men, the correspondent says, definitely antagonized labor which henceforth will regard him as "a master's man."

A CHANCE FOR THE BOARD OF HEALTH

SOME OF THE careful house keepers of the city have taken up the work of making their own bread as a sanitary precaution rather than with a view to combatting the high cost of living. Complaints have been frequently received at this office stating that some of the bread delivered is insufficiently cooked, that it is even impossible to toast it properly. If there is any real foundation for these complaints—and there appears to be, from the standing and reliability of those who make them—here is an excellent opportunity for the members of the Board of Health, the sanitary guardians of the public, to render the citizens a service.

THE REASON FOR THE REVOLT

THE HAMILTON SPECTATOR, usually staid and dignified in its attitude on all public questions has joined the ranks of the revolters in the provincial Conservative party. It wants an immediate convention of the organization and a new declaration of principles. "A convention is needed," says the Spectator to purge the political atmosphere of the suspicions and doubts and grumblings which are gathering force like a miasma."

The Spectator is a bit mixed in its metaphor. A miasma does not gather force. It is dangerous only when it arises from its poisonous source. As it spreads itself and mingles with the surrounding atmosphere it generally loses strength and eventually becomes harmless.

This inchoate revolt which the Spectator has apparently joined is like the miasmatic vapors to which it refers. It may poison the air near the cesspool from which it arises but it loses virility as it attempts to circulate. The Spectator and its fellow revolters, whether they be newspapers or copperheads, either in or out of the Legislature, are not choking for a purified political atmosphere. Their yearning is for something more concrete. They are simply reactionaries sighing for former conditions and longing for the fleshpots they left behind them in Egypt three years ago. In a word they are ambitious to secure a new leader.

Whoever heard of a party holding office with the majority that sustains the Hearst Government, with such a record as that Administration can boast, holding a convention a few weeks before a general election? The Ross Government did summon the faithful in conclave on the eve of a contest but the Ross Government was moribund at that time.

As before hinted the Spectator and its fellows in revolt are not gasping for pure air. Their only object in calling a convention is to make an attempt to put at the head of the party a man whose views are opposed to those of the present leader on the great issue now before the people, a man already in public life and one whose record in his own field is not altogether invulnerable. Leave it to the revolters and they would effectually and thoroughly wreck the party, wreck it irremediably and for all time. But the miasma is not pernicious once it spreads from the vicinity of its origin. There is purity enough in the political atmosphere to nullify the effects of inconsequential poisonous vapors.

Here in Peterborough there are signs of a revolt, but not among the supporters of the Government. There are members of the referendum committe, men who have for years been active in the cause who are lukewarm now. They have attained their objective only to throw away the prize in return for a party victory. The partison hand is in evidence in every move they make. They worked for the cause, prayed for its success upon the housetops, but that was in the old days when their hope for achievement lay in a different direction.

There is a miasma in other places than in the office of the Hamilton Spectator, miasma subject to the same refining influence.

THE LIBERAL PLATFORM

(Hon. W. S. Fielding, in Journal of Commerce)

Like the covenant of the League of Nations, the platform adopted by the Ottawa convention, cannot now be amended. But, as Mr. Taft proposes in the case of the League, some of its friends may feel obliged to receive it with "interpretations of reservations." One is reminded of the old story of the colored porter of the Pullman car who remonstrated with his passengers for remaining outside. "You shouldn't stay here, gemmen," said Sam "that's not what the platform is for," "What is it for then, Sam?" "Platforms, gemmen, is only to get in on." No doubt there were at the convention —as there must be at every Opposition political gathering—many men whose first thought is as to the paramount importance of getting in, leaving the future to take care of itself. But there may come a day of settlement, and those who are called upon to fulfill the agreement may have cause to regret the largeness or the order that was accepted.

The most important part of the platform is that concerning the tariff. It might have been wiser with an eye to the future, to deal more in principles and less in details. In their general character the tariff declarations are substantially in accord with the economic views which most Liberals have held in the past. If the Liberal ideas are being pressed further than in former days, it is because events have made a large section of the party less disposed to moderation than they formerly were. The "interpretations and reservations," however, still leave room for a belief that the resolutions do not mean the extreme and alarming policy that is being ascribed to them by some hostile critics.

THE SHAME OF CIVILIZATION

MODERN CIVILIZATION has a good many defects and failings for which to answer. One of the most glaring and unjustifiable of these is the legal status which it still insists upon with regard to those unfortunate children who are born out of wedlock. Dr. Hastings, the medical health officer of Toronto, who is in a position to know the social conditions in his city as well as any man in public place, finds it necessary to protest, which he does emphatically and logically. "If," he says, "we are sincere in our professions of moral obligations to the parentless child, we must first see to it that our laws affecting these children are stripped of their cruelty and injustice. How long is our so-called Christian civilization going to tolerate the gross injustice of branding the helpless innocent born out of wedlock as an illegitimate child?"

How long, indeed? How long, too, before the State will pass a law holding the father of such a child responsible for its support, giving the offspring the name of its male parent and all the legal property rights of the so-called legitimate issue? Why should any child be compelled to go through life handicapped, socially and legally ostracized, because of the offences of those responsible for its existence? Why should a child be denied any interest in the estate of its parents for no other reason than the failure of a minister of the gospel to formally declare the parents husband and wife?

Over in the United States those conditions are no better. The late Marshall Field left an estate of two hundred million dollars, and the disposition of half this property is now in the hands of the courts. If it can be shown that the grandson's parents were never joined in legal wedlock the young man will be pauperized. The offices of a clergyman alone stand between him and penury.

Scriptural perverters are always ready with quotations from Holy Writ to attempt to justify any human ill or condition. There are those who seek in the Bible Divine sanction for the use of liquor. In the days of slavery there were those who glibly quoted scripture to show that the sons of Ham were doomed to bondage by decree of Providence. In the case in point, people, including the law makers, find balm for their conscience in the passage, "Visiting the sins of the fathers unto the children of the third and fourth generation."

If that is a Divine law it is simply the natural sequence of human evil. The man who thrusts his hand into the fire will suffer agony. His one hope of escape is to avoid such liberties with the laws of nature.

STRANGE PLATFORM CHUMS

HARTLEY DEWART, the chosen and the rising hope of the liquor interests and Major (Rev.) J. C. Tolmie of Windsor appeared on the same platform in a western Ontario constituency last Saturday. The gallant major swore eternal fealty to the new leader and his policies. These two men as the heads respectively of the opposing wings of the party, were rivals for first place at the recent convention. Surely Major Tolmie has not completely renounced the views he held or abandoned the position which he maintained so tenaciously at that time.

But politics like poverty makes strange bedfellows and platform co-workers.

THE PENALTY OF EXTRAVAGANCE

(New York Commercial)

One of the causes of the high cost of living is to be found in our national extravagance. Labor was never so well paid and never before have the farmers had so much money to spend. The result is a demand for everything money will buy, and particularly for luxuries. Shoe dealers report that their greatest demand is for the high priced shoes and that medium and low priced shoes are practically neglected. Persons wholly unaccustomed to such luxuries are paying eight and ten dollars for silk shirts, while silk hosiery is more common than cotton. Factory hands and lumberjacks are driving high priced automobiles. It is a natural expression of reckless expenditure by persons who have hitherto been denied these luxuries. The demand for them has caused an increase in wages and has added to the cost of living, against which these same reckless buyers are now protesting. Nothing can be done about it except to let the situation work itself out, which it will do in the course of time.

IS MACKENZIE KING to be known to fame as "The Man From Glengarry?"

• • • • •

IT IS EVIDENT that some local men have been identified with the temperance movement all these years simply for the political opportunities it offers.

• • • • •

NATURALLY, THE FAITHFUL in Glengarry hesitate about taking on a candidate who is a party Ishmaelite with two recent defeats to his credit and still searching for a resting place.

• • • • •

THOSE EDITORIAL articles on Leader King and Chinese Labor that were published in The Review recently are going the rounds of the Conservative press. Great is truth and its final triumph is assured.

• • • • •

"If," says the Simcoe Reformer, "the job of Opposition leader is to be a protracted one, the selection of W. L. M. King was wise," Then the choice certainly shows wisdom, the indications being that the job will be protracted indefinitely.

• • • • •

HON. W. S. Fielding in the Journal of Commerce, admits that Mr. King has had some practical parliamentary experience. This experience would have been more extended but for the heartlessness of the Canadian voters.

• • • • •

THE LIBERAL PARTY is like the British Empire. It is democratic with a King at its head, says the Kitchener Telegraph. The comparison is not apt. The party is more like one of the moribund monarchies in Europe where the royal personage is hanging on to his job by his eye lashes.

What Will Canada Do About It?

(Farmers' Telegram.)

Canada, whatever others may think, is quite satisfied in her own mind that she has attained to the status of an independent nation, and she has much and very justifiable faith in her own youthful vitality. Canadians, however, are not so egoistic as to be above taking a hint from others and they might do well to consider, at least, the example now being offered them in the matter of dealing with profiteers, by the United States and Great Britain.

In the latter country proceedings are being taken against the great meat packing concerns, and the common people, who after all form the final court of judgment, are evidently in so determined a mood that it is safe to conclude that these will be pushed to the limit. When a high official of so enlightened and conservative a body of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers says that, unless redress be given, "Labor might advocate a firing squad for profiteers," it is certainly time that the U.S. government should deal with these gentlemen without fear or favor.

In Great Britain a central authority is about to be established which will deal with profiteering, and according to Sir Auckland Geddes, minister of reconstruction, its decisions may not only affect the present and the future, but may also be retroactive.

In both countries it is evidently felt that the mere infliction of fines upon those who are proved guilty of that which is ethically high treason against the state, is only trifling, and not at all likely to have any deterrent effect upon men to whom paying a fine of almost any amount is all in the day's work.

In these days it is pretty generally conceded that in dealing with lawbreakers, the methods adopted should be curative rather than punitive, but this is largely because society feels that its neglect and indifference has been contributory to the delinquency of the ordinary criminal. The profiteer, however, is not as a rule entitled to be classed as an ordinary criminal; he is usually a man of some education and no little intelligence, although his intelligence is far from being of the highest type, and many of his class have had the opportunities which have been denied to the less exalted members of the criminal class.

He cannot, therefore, claim leniency on any of the grounds which might have earned the sympathy of Caesare Lombroso or any other student of inherited criminal tendencies and the effect of unfavorable environment, and in his case the punishment ought surely be made to fit the crime, unless, of course, the Bolshevik dictum that there is no such thing as crime be universally admitted.

It looks as if, at last, Great Britain and the United States means real business in this matter. What is Canada going to do about it?

LOCAL PICTURES A FEATURE AT THE GRAND LAST NIGHT

Novelty Creats a Great Deal of Amusement—Many Recognize Friends.

Everyone laughed, laughed again and then kept on laughing was the result of the local pictures shown at the Grand last night. The same will no doubt be the result tonight and tomorrow night when an entirely new set of pictures will be shown. The photographer, who snapped those pictures must have a good sense of humor for he got some people with very peculiar expressions on their faces. But if a prize were to be awarded it would go to the stout postie tearing along his beat quite unconscious of the publicity he is going to receive. This picture probably amused the large audience more than any other, although every picture drew laughs and applause from sections of the audience, who recognized the unfortunate individual whose picture appeared on the screen. It must indeed be an exciting moment while one recognizes one's own picture in some very awkward or amusing position in full view of a vast and appeciative audience. Everyone who can should go to laugh at his or her neighbor or friend, but be prepared to accept laughter toward yourself in good spirit. This novelty is "great sport" as it was characterized by one enthusiastic juvenile last night.

Besides this novelty, two good plays and a Charlie Chaplin comedy were presented.

"The Unveiling Hand."

"The Unveiling Hand" was a good illustration of the running power of strong drink and a delegation of the Liberty League would do well to visit the theatre to see plainly illustrated what they are standing for.

A young scientist succeeds in obtaining from the college of his town sufficient financial support for an expedition into the desert of Africa to study the civilization of the ancient Greeks, whom he believed had settled there. He was a very weak man and refused to undertake the task unless a certain beautiful girl of the village, upon whom he looked for mental support and encouragement, would marry him and accompany him on his expedition. She did not love the scientist but for the sake of science and humanity she agreed to the marriage. The expedition was accompanied by a strong young man as financial agent who was truly in love with the wife of the scientist.

On the desert the true heart of the weak drunkard was shown. While his wife was lying between life and death in a high fever he drank the last of the brandy which was to save her life. This act was witnessed by an Arab who followed the scientist to the place where he had made some wonderful discoveries and by letting a large beam fall over the mouth of the excavation buried him alive.

The lady recovered and returned to her native town where great honor was done to the dead hero scientist. On the day of the unveiling of a tablet in his memory, the scientist having dug his way out of the excavation in Africa, returned a worn-out, drunken sot. His wife refused to receive him. He tried to blame his wife and this financial agent for conspiring against him in Africa. None would believe him in his present condition and he died from the effects of a knife cut from the Arab who had witnessed his dastandly deed committed in Africa because of his unconquerable love of drink.,

"One of the Finest."

This is the story of a policeman who attended strictly to his duty at all times and was ready for all emergencies, never being engaged in washing cars or anything like that. He stopped the car of haughty Miss Hudson and she was very indignant. She could not forget the good Irish smile of the traffic cop. She looked for him at the same corner, but he had been transferred to another station. She did meet him at a wedding where he was the plain clothes man delegated to guard the gifts. She apologizes for her snobbishness and they become strongly attached to each other. He has at his home a little girl, the daughter of a criminal. He adopted this girl and she learned the call him daddy. Miss Hudson's sister hears this child call the policeman daddy and reported it to her. At this time the policeman was on guard at the Hudson home during the absence of Mr. Hudson. A discharged criminal attempts to shoot the policeman but he is warned by the mother of the girl whom he has adopted. The presence of this girl leads to some complication with Miss Hudson, but it is smoothed out, the criminal is shot and the rich young gentleman who tried to put the police "in wrong" goes away disappointed.

The policeman who attends to his duty will be rewarded.

TO-DAY'S STORY

They lived in the same street and had met in the homeward bound. The conversation turned to their neighbors.

"Ye-es," Mr. Robinson said, in reply to the remark of his friend that Mrs. Nexdoor was "a wonderfully sweet-tempered woman."

"So cheerful and sunny, always looking on the bright side," went on the friend, enthusiastically.

"Ye-es," said Robinson. "But she rather overdoes that 'bright side business. The other night I was there, and Nexdoor—you know how absent-minded he is—put the lighted end of his cigar in his mouth. He sprang into the air like a mustang, and choked his endeavor to swallow his comments. Right in the midst of it all Mrs. Nexdoor remarked, blandly: 'How fortunate you were, dearest, to discover it at once."

Back to the Easier Job.

A professor of history met one of his class who had returned from fighting on the western front, and asked if he had learned any particular lesson from the war.

"Yes, I have, professor" replied the young man. "I discovered that it is a great deal easier studying history than it is making it."

Otherwise Very Quiet.

A great many changes have been ascribed with more or less truth to the influence of the war. The following passage, extracted from the letter of a correspondent at Hastings, suggests that a new standard of quietness may be among them. Describing the reception of the news of the signing of peace, the writer says: "Everything was very quiet here; there was nothing but the ringing of church bells and the firing of guns."

LATEST IDEA OF LABOR MEN

Now Propose Minimum Income for Men, Women and Children.

London, Aug. 18.—The latest thing in the labor programme of social reform is provision for a minimum income for every man, woman, and child. Under the scheme twenty per cent. of all incomes would be nationalized at the source and paid in a pool which would be devoted solely to the provision of a permanent weekly income of $2.25 a week to everybody. In this way, the sponsors of the plan say, it is hoped not merely to free the country from the future payment of old age pensions, but of most, if not all, of the national and private agencies for the distribution of relief.

COBOURG'S GREAT HORSE SHOW

AUGUST 19-23, 1919

Besides the many attractive features of Canada's most popular Horse Show, the directors have pleasure in announcing that they have secured the 48th Highlanders' Band for the week.

ROYAL CANADIAN DRAGOONS

lately returned from the great war, will not only take part in their famous musical ride, but many new features this year.

HIGH JUMPING AND TWO OR THREE EXCITING RACES EACH DAY

The Directors have arranged for Polo Matches each afternoon.

This is also the week when all Soldiers who enlisted with Cobourg Garrison Artillery, 139th, 235th, etc., are being invited to revisit their old comrades at Cobourg. They will be the guests of the Town of Cobourg and of the Horse Show.

EACH NIGHT A FAMOUS BRITISH MILITARY TATTOO

will be held, in which the War Veterans' Association and Cobourg Artillery, assisted by hundreds of returned soldiers and by the 48th Highlanders and Cobourg Bands, will participate. The Dragoons will also take part.

If you are a lover of the Clyde, Percheron, Hackney Thoroughbred, High Stepper. If you are a lover of Steeplechase, Across Country Horse Racing.

If you are a lover of High Jumping (the world's record was made at the Cobourg Horse Show by Confidence, ridden by Jack Hamilton, 7 feet 10½ inches.

If you have or have not seen the Royal Canadian Dragoons in their Musical Ride and other military sports.

If you wish to witness the British Military Tattoo each evening.

If you are a lover of good Music,

Then plan to see the Horse Show, which this year will eclipse its own wonderful record.

But far and above all, every effort is being put forth to secure the honor of a visit from

HIS R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES

during the Show.

All these events promise to make the Cobourg Horse Show more attractive than ever. The charge for autos will be 25c, including parking.

WHEN WIVES WERE BOUGHT.

Proceeding Was Universal Many Centuries Ago.

Among far older civilizations than that of the Anglo-Saxon the system of wife-purchase had ceased before Britain was a real country. The Indian law-giver, Manu, strictly forbade it, and, said: "A man who through avarice, takes a gratuity, is a seller of his offspring." In the historical times of the Greeks they no longer bought wives. In Rome "coemptio" was only a symbol of the ancient custom. In the Jewish Talmud the purchase is also symbolic, as is frequently the Mohammedan "mahr." Withal, the bride price, "foster leans" and marriage gifts, when returned, were converted into dowry and became at first the bride's property. Thus marriage portions chiefly derived their origin from the habit of purchase and dowry often became, as with the Hebrews, a religious duty. Not less than the tenth of the father's property was considered a just dowry. In Aristotle's time nearly two-fifths of all Sparta belonged from this cause to the women. Sir Henry Maine considers that the amazing thrift of the French is also owing to this custom, which probably descended to them from the marriage law of Augustus Caesar. It was only by an anachronism that Euripedes made Medea lament that women were obliged to purchase husbands at a great price. And it is often as true to-day as when the Latin poet sang.

When marriage ceremonies first did arise it was by degrees and in many ways, and customs such as capture when superseded became by symbolism a part of the succeeding legal form of contract. To eat maize pudding from the same plate or to eat in any way together is a widely distributed marriage ceremony. In Brazil a couple may be married by drinking brandy together; in Japan by so many cups of wine; in Russia and Scandinavia it used to be one cup for both. The joining of hands among Romans and Hindus is common in many parts of the world. In Scotland it is called "hand fasting," and couples live together after. To sit on one seat while receiving friends or to have the hands of each tied together with grass or to smear with each other's blood, or for the woman to tie a cord of her own twisting around the naked waist of the man constitutes a marriage in one place or another. In Australia a woman carries fire to her lover's hut and make a fire for him. A Loango negress cooks two dishes for him in his own hut. In Croatia the bridegroom boxes the brides' ears, and in Russia the father formerly struck his daughter gently with a new whip—for the last time—and then gave the weapon to her husband.

Strange Dogs.

The smallest of all recognized breeds of dogs is the Chihuahua, pronounced "She-wah wah," which is also one of the most intelligent of all the canine family. This breed is a product of Mexico, and is named after a northern province of that country where there are thousands of these little dogs running wild and multiplying each year. It seems a remarkable thing that, in spite of the fact that they have never had any dog shows in Mexico, one only has to visit that country and try to purchase a really good, typical little Chihuahua from a native to realize that the Mexicans know the worth of this dog of his own country. How these dogs were bred probably never will be known. Some authorities have intimated that they were bred some generations back from large squirrels, and this view is borne out by the fact that at one time these dogs ran wild in the woods and that the Chihuahua is nearly as proficient in running up trees as the squirrel.—Family Herald.

Beans.

The common bean is a native of South America and was introduced into Europe during the sixteenth century. Now it is represented by over 150 varieties. The big broad bean is probably a native of southwest Asia and northeastern Europe. The broad, but not thick, lima bean, called by some "butter bean," is a pale variety that comes from South America.

MOONSHINE WHISKEY BRINGS $11 A GALLON

LARGE SUPPLY FROM ILLICIT STILL SEIZED BY POLICE AT WHITBY.

Whitby, Aug. 18.—A big seizure of illicitly made whiskey was made here by Chief of Police MacGrotty, when he unearthed thirty-three five-gallon containers on the property of P. Uhrynowich, a Ukrainian, living at Port Whitby, together with a quantity of mixture in the process of distillation. Chief MacGrotty discovered the stock of 165 gallons hidden under a pile of ties. It is said to have been selling for $11 a gallon, the value of the seizure being over $1,700. Labels and caps for bottles were also found which would make it appear when bottled as MacPherson's Pure Scotch Whiskey. The affair will be aired in the Police Court this week.

Detroit, Aug. 18.—A fine hog, frozen hard, which has been in cold-storage for twenty-six years, was one of the finds of a Federal investigator in his search through the plant of the Detroit Refrigerating Company Saturday.

Records show that live hogs were selling for five cents a pound on August 16, 1893, while the price on Detroit market Saturday was over 23 cents a pound.

EAT LESS MEAT IF BACK HURTS

Take a glass of Salts to Flush Kidneys if bladder bothers you.

Eating meat regularly eventually produces kidney trouble in some form or other, says a well-known authority, because the uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked; get sluggish; clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region; rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acid in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts cannot injure anyone; make a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus avoiding serious kidney disease.

Grass Grows Two Feet a Day.

The giant bamboo grass of Japan and China grows at the rate of two feet a day in some instances, and sometimes to the height of 150 feet and a diameter of two feet. A clump is planted and it widens over the landscape with remarkable rapidity. The bamboo takes the place of steel and iron to a great extent in China and Japan. The farmer uses it to build his house and fence; his household furniture is manufactured from it, and the tender shoots furnish him with a delicious vegetable for his table. It supplies framework for awnings, ribs of sails and handles of rakes, material for chicken coops and bird cages, stuffing for pillows and mattresses, chopsticks for eating, pipes for smoking, brooms for sweeping, chairs to sit upon, skewers to pin the hair, hats to screen the head, paper to write on, the pencil to write with, the crab net and the fishpole.

The Sponge.

A constant circulation of sea water is taking place within the sponge in its natural habits. This flow is accomplished by series of cells, the like of which is not to be found in any of the higher animals.

A GEM OF LITERATURE FROM THE PEN OF BELLEVILLE AUTHORESS

Lillian Leveridge's War Poem on "The Hills of Home" a Competitor for Fame With "In Flanders Field"

Every body is familiar with Lieut.-Col. John McCrae's "In Flander's Fields." Almost every journal in Canada and United States, at some time or another, has printed this beautiful poem. We have heard it read and recited, until the lilt of the lines has crept into our very souls. It has been set to music and ranks as a classical production of today. Yes and some inspired one has penned an answer, which, though not measuring up to the standard of the original, is a very clever and fitting answer. This is all as it should be. "In Flander's Fields" is a clear jewel in the casket of Canadian letters and will live as long as the memory of the past war can stir people with its tragic reminiscence.

But why should the splendor of this literary gem completely overshadow all the others? This war has thrown into the lime-light of recognition much talent, that otherwise would have remained obscure. It has furnished the inspiration for masterpieces of art and literature, though it is hard to believe there could be anything inspiring in its ghastly story.

It may interest some who, perhaps, do not already know that a little Belleville girl, Lillian Leveridge, has contributed to the wealth of colonial literature with a heart song that girdled the globe, "Over the Hills of Home." Lillian Leveridge did not lock her message of hope and sweet consolation in the casket of classical form. She did not confine the light she had to give, in a way that would render it accessible only, to the cultured few. Lillian Leveridge wrote for the people. She wrote for the fathers and mothers who had seen the light of their declining years, snuffed out in the smoke of "No Man's Land."

She wrote for the wives and sweethearts, the brothers and sisters, who hid the ache in their hearts with a smile on their lips, as they said, good-bye, to an idolized one and sent him out there to die. She wrote for the great mass of humanity that mourned its loss in tears of blood and she did not write in vain.

The simple beauty—the deep pathos of her lines—touched a responsive chord in the hearts of many. The numbers of letters that poured in to the young authoress were touching and sincere in their expressions of sympathy. Letters from United States and England, from France, Italy, China, Australia. Bereaved souls in every clime found an ease in the light of her glorious vision. Sisters in sorrow, in every land, wished her a warm hand-clasp across the sea

"Over the Hills of Home" was written in memory of a brother, Lieut.-Col. Leveridge who, like the thousands of others, went "over the top" and never came back.

Take the opening verse:

"Laddie, little laddie, come with me over the hills,
Where blossom the sweet May lillies and the dog-wood and daffodils
For the spirit of Spring is calling, to our spirits that long to roam
Over the hills of home, laddie, over the hills of home."

Notice the simplicity of the language, the clear-cut beauty of thought. Notice how the touch of the thing gets into the throat. These qualities are no doubt the greatest reason for its world-wide appeal. What a true and realistic word picture is painted in the following verse:

"Laddie, little laddie, 'tis time that the cows were home;
Can't you hear the klingle-klangle of their bell in the greenwood gloam;
Old Rover is waiting, eager, to follow the trail with you;
Whistle a tune as you go, laddie; whistle a tune as you go."

But the great message of the poem is in the last three verses. Brave and beautiful verses that breathe of trust in the Great Beyond:

"Laddie! laddie! laddie! somewhere in France you sleep,
Somewhere 'neath alien flowers and alien winds that weep;
Bravely you marched to battle—nobly your life laid down—
You unto death were faithful, laddie, your's is the victor's crown.

"Laddie, little laddie, how dim is the sunlight grown
As mother and I, together speak softly in tender tone,
And our lips that quiver and falter have ever a single theme
As we list for your dear lost whistle, laddie:
Over the hills of dream.

"Laddie! laddie! laddie! how soon should we cease to week,
Could we glance through the golden gateway whose keys the angels keep;
Yet love—our love that is deathless, will follow you where you roam
Over the hills of God, laddie, the beautiful hills of home."

Truly, this sweet and noble heart-song woke to life the stilled music of hope and trust in many a sorrow-numbed soul.

Soldiers' Effects Unclaimed.

Scores of tons of material, the effects of American soldiers who died in France, are stored in Hoboken awaiting claimants. The property includes jewelry, hundreds of wrist watches, souvenirs and many other articles, some of considerable value. An officer of the effects bureau says that everything possible is done to get the effects of the men to their relatives, but that many letters of notification are returned, and others are unanswered.

Dentistry and Engineering.

It does not require much imagination to realize that pulling an elephant's tooth is something of an engineering as well as a dental job.

An example of this was when Albert, one of the biggest elephants in the Ringling herd at Madison Square Gardens, New York, had refused to eat, and the circus veterinary found a great tooth cavity which was beyond remedy by filling.

The tooth that was giving Albert so much discomfort was as large as a man's fist. After a liberal dose of cocaine had been injected, forceps as big as ice tongs were clamped to the tooth, a rope attached to the forceps, and a squad of trainers made ready to supply the pulling power.

At a given signal the trainers gave a tremendous pull, and out came the huge tooth.

In this part of dental work the unknown quantity lies in what the elephant will do. Albert had been taken out of the menagerie to prevent panic among the rest of the herd in case he developed an inclination to object to the process. However, he underwent the ordeal calmly, and as soon as his jaw was dressed he was conducted back to his stall.—Tit-Bits.

Traveling Fingers.

Typists' fingers are the most amazing travelers in creation, and are capable of going tremendous distances without the fatigue that would come to the feet and legs in performing a similar journey, says an exchange. In ordinary typewriting the hand may travel, according to an expert, 10,000 miles a year and not indicate any impairment in efficiency. This refers, of course, to the average typist in an office.

A Veteran War Horse.

San Toy, a veteran war horse, 28 years old, was recently retired to the Home of Rest for Horses, Westcroft Farm, Cricklewood, England. He served throughout the Boer War and the world war without missing a day's duty, and his story attracted the attention of three women, who generously provided for his old age.

Now San Toy is destined to spend the remainder of his days in ease, far beyond the sound of the guns. To him it is peace.

Linen for Airplanes.

The British Government had in stock, when the war ended, about 40,000,000 yards of fine linen for airplanes, or about three years' supply.

Beef Suet Not Indispensable.

Norway has discovered that beef suet is not absolutely necessary to the manufacture of margarine. Cod liver oil, herring oil and other fish oils are said to be excellent substitutes.

To Kill Plant Lice.

To kill insects on a cactus plant spray it with a very weak solution of alum—1½ to 2 per cent. This solution is said to be perfectly harmless to the plant but to kill the plant lice.

Burglar's Mascot.

Seldom will a burglar proceed to "crack a crib" without a mascot of some sort in his possession, says an exchange. Some burglars will not break into a house that bears a number they dislike—it is generally that of the policeman who effected their arrest on a previous occasion. Others will not undertake a midnight job if there is a new moon. This has been regarded as a bad omen, but a halo around a full moon gladdens the heart of Bill Sikes. Pickpockets, too, are highly superstitious. The light-fingered fraternity seldom pick the pockets of a cross-eyed or a club-footed person. To do so would mean courting disaster. Finding a twisted coin among the contents of a stolen purse will often induce a pickpocket to throw the purse away. The keeping of it is supposed to signify early arrest.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

BY EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

Probably the telephone in his rooms was jangling, vainly calling forth to sport with Amaryllis in the shade of the rubber trees Billy Magee—Billy Magee who sat alone in the silence on Baldpate mountain. Few knew of his departure. This was the night of that stupid attempt at theatricals at the Plaza, stupid in itself, but gay, almost giddy, since Helen Faulkner was to be there. This was the night of the dinner to Carey at the club. This was the night—of many diverting things.

He strode to the window and looked down at the few dim lights that proclaimed the existence of Upper Asquewan Falls. Somewhere down there was the Commercial House; somewhere the girl who had wept so bitterly in that gloomy little waiting room. She was only three miles away, and the thought cheered Mr. Magee. After all, he was not on a desert island.

And yet he was alone, intensely, almost painfully, alone—alone in a vast moaning house that must be his only home until he could go back to the gay city with his masterpiece. What a masterpiece! As though with a surgeon's knife it would lay bare the hearts of men. No tricks of plot, no—

CHAPTER III.

The Crack of a Pistol.

MR. MAGEE paused. For sharply in the silence the bell of his room telephone rang out.

He stood for a moment gazing in wonder, his heart beating swiftly, his eyes upon the instrument on the wall. It was a house phone. He knew it could only be rung from the switchboard in the hall below. "I'm going mad already," he remarked and took down the receiver.

A blur of talk, an electric muttering, a click, and all was still.

Mr. Magee opened the door and stepped out into the shadows. He heard a voice below. Noiselessly he crept to the landing and gazed down into the office. A young man sat at the telephone switchboard. Mr. Magee could see in the dim light of a solitary candle that he was a person of rather hilarious raiment. The candle stood on the top of the safe, and the door of the latter swung open. Sinking down on the steps in the dark, Mr. Magee waited.

"Hello," the young man was saying; "how do you work this thing, anyhow? I've tried every peg but the right one. Hello, hello! I want long distance—Reuton, 2876 West—Mr. Andy Rutter. Will you get him for me, sister?"

Another wait—a long one—ensued. The candle sputtered. The young man fidgeted in his chair. At last he spoke again:

"Hello! Andy? Is that you, Andy? What's the good word? As quiet as the tomb of Napoleon? Shall I close up shop? Sure? What next? Oh, see here, Andy, I'll die up here! Did you ever hit a place like this in winter? I can't—I—oh, well, if he says so! Yes; I could do that. But no longer. I couldn't stand it long. Tell him that. Tell him everything's O. K. Yes. All right. Well, good night, Andy."

He turned away from the switchboard, and as he did so Mr. Magee walked calmly down the stairs toward him. With a cry the young man ran to the safe, threw a package inside and swung shut the door. He turned the knob of the safe several times; then he faced Mr. Magee. The latter saw something glitter in his hand.

"Good evening," remarked Mr. Magee pleasantly.

"What are you doing here?" cried the youth wildly.

"I live here," Mr. Magee assured him. "Won't you come up to my room—it's right at the head of the stairs. I have a fire, you know."

Back into the young man's lean, hawklike face crept the assurance that belonged with the gay attire he wore. He dropped the revolver into his pocket and smiled a sneering smile.

"You gave me a turn," he said. "Of course you live here. Are any of the other guests about? And who won the tennis match today?"

"You are facetious." Mr. Magee smiled too. "So much the better. A lively companion is the very sort I should have ordered tonight. Come upstairs."

"All right," he said. "But I'll have to ask you to go first. You know the way." His right hand sought the pocket into which the revolver had fallen.

"You honor my poor and drafty house," said Mr. Magee. "This way."

He mounted the stairs. After him followed the youth of flashy habiliments, looking fearfully about him as he went. He seemed surprised that they came to Magee's room without incident. Inside, Mr. Magee drew up an easy chair before the fire and offered his guest a cigar.

"You must be cold," he said. "Sit here. 'A bad night, stranger,' as they remark in stories."

"You've said it," replied the young man, accepting the cigar. "Thanks." He walked to the door leading into the hall and opened it about a foot. "I'm afraid," he explained jocosely, "we'll get to talking and miss the breakfast bell." He dropped into the chair and lighted his cigar at a candle end. "Say, you never can tell, can you? Climbing up old Baldpate I thought to myself that hotel certainly makes the Sahara desert look like a cozy corner. And here you are, as snug and comfortable and at home as if you were in a Harlem flat. You never can tell. And what now? The story of my life?"

"You might relate," Mr. Magee told him, "that portion of it that has led you trespassing on a gentleman seeking seclusion at Baldpate inn."

"Trespassing, eh?" said the young man. "Far be it from me to quarrel with a man who smokes as good cigars as you do, but there's something I haven't quite doped out. That is—who's trespassing me or you?"

"My right here," said Mr. Magee, "is indisputable."

"It's a big word," replied the other, "but you can tack it to my right here and tell no lie. We can't dispute, so let's drop the matter. With that settled I'm encouraged to pour out the story of why you see me here tonight, far from the madding crowd. Have you a stray tear? You'll need it. It's a sad, touching story, concerned with haberdashery and a trusting heart, and a fair woman—fair, but, oh, how false!"

"Proceed," laughed Mr. Magee. "I'm an admirer of the vivid imagination. Don't curb yours, I beg of you."

"It's all straight," said the other in a hurt tone. "Every word true. My name is Joseph Bland. My profession, until love entered my life, was that of haberdasher and outfitter. In the city of Reuton, fifty miles from here, I taught the Beau Brummels of the thoroughfares what was doing in London in the necktie line. I sold them coats with padded shoulders and collars high and awe inspiring. I was happy, twisting a piece of silk over my hand to show them how it would look on their heaving bosoms. And then—she came."

Mr. Bland puffed on his cigar.

"Yes," he said, "Arabella sparkled on the horizon of my life. When I have been here in the quiet for about two centuries, maybe I can do justice to her beauty. I won't attempt to describe her now. I loved her—madly. She said I made a hit with her. I spent on her the profits of my haberdashery. I whispered—marriage. She didn't scream. I had my wedding necktie picked out from the samples of a drummer from Troy.

"From here on—the tear I spoke of, please. There flashed on the scene a man she had known and loved in Jersey City. I said flashed. He did—just that. A swell dresser—say, he had John Drew beat by two mauve neckties and a purple frock coat. I had a haberdashery back of me. No use. He outdressed me. I saw that Arabella's love for me was waning. With his chamois gloved hands that new guy fanned the ancient flame."

He paused. Emotion—or the smoke of the cigar—choked him.

"Let's make the short story shorter," he said. "She threw me down. In my haberdashery I thought it over. I was blue, bitter. I resolved on a dreadful step. In the night I wrote her a letter and carried it down to the box and posted it. Life without Arabella, said the letter, was Shakespeare with Hamlet left out. It hinted at the river, carbolic acid, revolvers. Yes; I posted it. And then"—

"And then," urged Mr. Magee.

Mr. Bland felt tenderly of the horseshoe pin in his purple tie.

"This is just between us," he said. "At that point the trouble began. It came from my being naturally a very brave man. I could have died—easy. The brave thing was to live. To go on day after day devoid of Arabella—say, that took courage. I wanted to try it. I'm a courageous man, as I say."

"You seem so," Mr. Magee agreed.

"Lion hearted," assented Mr. Bland. "I determined to show my nerve and live. But there was my letter to Arabella. I feared she wouldn't appreciate my bravery. Women are dull sometimes. It came to me maybe she would be hurt if I didn't keep my word and die. So I had to—disappear. I had a friend mixed up in affairs at Baldpate. No; I can't give his name. I told him my story. He was impressed by my spirit, as you have been. He gave me a key he had—the key of the door opening from the east veranda into the dining room. So I came up here. I came here to be alone, to forgive and forget, to be forgot. And maybe to plan a new haberdashery in distant parts."

"Was it your wedding necktie," asked Mr. Magee, "that you threw into the safe when you saw me coming?"

"No," replied Mr. Bland, sighing deeply. "A package of letters, written to me by Arabella at various times. I want to forget 'em. If I kept them on hand I might look at them from time to time. My great courage might give way. You might find my body on the stairs. That's why I hid them."

Mr. Magee laughed and stretched forth his hand.

"Believe me," he said, "your touching confidence in me will not be betrayed. I congratulate you on your narrative power. You want my story. Why am I here? I am not sure that it is worthy to follow yours. But it has its good points—as I have thought it out."

He went over to the table and picked up a popular novel upon which his gaze had rested while the haberdasher spun his fabric of love and gloom. On the cover was a picture of a very dashing maiden.

"Do you see that girl?" he asked. "She is beautiful, is she not? Even Arabella in her most splendid moments could get a few points from her, I fancy. Perhaps you are not familiar with the important part such a picture plays in the success of a novel today. The truth is, however, that the noble art of fiction writing has come to lean more and more heavily on its illustrators. The mere words that go with the pictures grow less important every day. There are dozens of distinguished novelists in the country at this moment who might be haberdashers if it weren't for the long, lean, haughty ladies who are scattered tastefully through their works."

Mr. Bland stirred uneasily.

"I can see you are at loss to know what my search for seclusion and privacy has to do with all this," continued Mr. Magee. "I am an artist. For years I have drawn these lovely ladies who make fiction salable to the masses. Many a novelist owes his motorcar and his country house to my brush. Two months ago I determined to give up illustration forever and devote my time to painting. I turned my back on the novelists. Can you imagine what happened?"

"My imagination's a little tired," apologized Mr. Bland.

"Never mind. I'll tell you. The leading authors whose work I had so long illustrated saw ruin staring them in the face. They came to me on their knees, figuratively. They begged. They pleaded. In order to escape them and their really pitiful pleadings I had to flee. I happened to have a friend involved in the management of Baldpate inn. I am not at liberty to give his name. He gave me a key. So here I am. I rely on you to keep my secret. If you perceive a novelist in the distance lose no time in warning me."

Mr. Magee paused, chuckling inwardly. He stood looking down at the lovelorn haberdasher. The latter got to his feet and solemnly took Magee's hand.

"I—I—oh, well, you've got me beat a mile, old man," he said.

"You don't mean to say"—began the hurt Magee.

"Oh, that's all right," Mr. Bland assured him. "I believe every word of it. It's all as real as the haberdashery to me. I'll keep my eye peeled for novelists. What gets me is, when you boil our two fly by night stories down, I've come here to be alone. You want to be alone. We can't be alone here together. One of us must clear out."

"Nonsense," answered Billy Magee. "I'll be glad to have you here. Stay as long as you like."

The haberdasher looked Mr. Magee fully in the eye, and the latter was startled by the hostility he saw in the other's face.

"The point is," said Mr. Bland, "I don't want you here. Why? Maybe because you recall beautiful dames—on book covers—and in that way, Arabella. Maybe—but what's the use? I put it simply. I got to be alone—alone on Baldpate mountain. I won't put you out tonight"—

"See here, my friend," cried Mr. Magee, "your grief has turned your head. You won't put me out tonight or tomorrow. I'm here to stay. You're welcome to do the same, if you like. But you stay—with me. I know you are a man of courage, but it would take at least ten men of courage to put me out of Baldpate inn."

They stood eying each other for a moment. Bland's thin lips twisted into a sneer. "We'll see," he said. "We'll settle all that in the morning." His tone took on a more friendly aspect. "I'm going to pick out a downy couch in one of these rooms," he said, "and lay me down to sleep. Say, I could greet a blanket like a long lost friend."

Mr. Magee proffered some of the covers that Quimby had given him and accompanied Mr. Bland to suit 10, across the hall. With a brisk good night Mr. Magee returned to No. 7.

But he made no move toward the chilly brass bed in the inner room. Instead he sat a long time by the fire. He reflected on the events of his first few hours in that supposedly uninhabited solitude where he was to be alone with his thoughts. He pondered the way and manner of the flippant young man who posed as a lovelorn haberdasher and under whose flippancy there was certainly an air of hostility. Who was Andy Butter, down in Reuton? What did the young man mean when he asked if he should "close up shop?" Who was "he" from whom came the orders, and, most important of all, what was in the package now resting in the great safe?

Mr. Magee smiled. Was this the stuff of which solitude was made?

He threw off his dressing gown and began to unlace his shoes.

"There has been too much crude melodrama in my novels," he reflected. "It's so easy to write. But I'm going to get away from all that up here. I'm going"—

Mr. Magee paused, with one shoe poised in his hand. For from below came the sharp crack of a pistol, followed by the crash of breaking glass.

CHAPTER IV.

Blonde and Suffragette.

MR. MAGEE slipped into his dressing gown, seized a candle and, like the boy in the nursery rime with one shoe off and one shoe on, ran into the hall. All was silent and dark below. He descended to the landing and stood there, holding the candle high above his head. It threw a dim light as far as the bottom of the stairs, but quickly lost the battle with the shadows that lay beyond.

"Hello!" the voice of Bland, the haberdasher, came out of the blackness. "The Goddess of Liberty, as I live! What's your next imitation?"

"There seems to be something doing," said Mr. Magee.

Mr. Bland came into the light, partially disrobed, his revolver in his hand.

"Somebody trying to get in by the front door," he explained. "I shot at him to scare him away. Probably one of your novelists."

"Or Arabella," remarked Mr. Magee, coming down.

"No," answered Bland. "I distinctly saw a derby hat."

ICELAND.

Has Been Called the "Greece of the Far North."

The recognition of the full sovereignty of Iceland recently accorded by Denmark, by which the island enters the Danish federation on equal terms with Denmark, draws attention to this remarkable northern island.

Geographically and geologically Iceland is a part of — a continuation of — the British Isles, for it is situated on the same submarine mountain ridge, stretching from the southeast to northeast across the North Atlantic.

Iceland is not a bleak, Arctic region, embedded in thick-ribbed ice, though its northernmost peninsula, Rifstangi, projects a mile north of the Arctic Circle.

No country on earth of equal size contains so varied and wonderful phenomena. The glaciers of Switzerland; the fjords, salmon rivers, and midnight sun of Norway; the volcanoes, grottoes and solfataras of Italy, on a grander scale; the mineral springs of Germany; the geysers of New Zealand; the largest waterfall, next to Niagara, in the world—all are here. Nowhere has nature been so spendthrift in giving a geological lesson to man. If there be sermons in stone, volumes lie unread here. Here we see her titanic forces at work building up a country. Nowhere is it possible to study so well the geological conditions prevailing toward the close of the Glacial Epoch in Europe.

Iceland has another and greater claim to one's interest. It is, as William Morris said: 'the Greece of the North.' It produced in the twelfth and Thirteenth centuries a literature unparalleled after Rome before the golden age of England and France, in character drawing, in passionate dramatic power, in severe, noble simplicity, in grim humor.

"Yet this literary people still live in a pastoral and Homeric civilization which is a modern lesson of the healthfulness of human life in close contact with the free, wild life of nature, such as would have delighted the heart of Rousseau or Thoreau.

For 400 years Iceland was an aristocratic republic, ruled by the great families of the early settlers, among whom was a Norse queen of Dublin. A fourteen days' open parliament of all Iceland met annually in June at Thingvellir, and the speaker of the law (logsoguman) used to recite from memory the whole of the unwritten, elaborate laws of the country to the assembly. In 1262-1264 Iceland was united to Norway, and in 1380, with Norway to Denmark. The Danish rule ruined the island economically, but since the granting of self-government and the re-establishment of the old Parliament, in 1874 at Reykjavik, great progress has been made.

Got Ideas from Beasts and Birds.

The dwellers in a big city are always mourning over the artificiality of it all. That is really only a left-handed way of congratulating themselves that they have become so differentiated from the lower animals that they have totally lost sight of the origin of things they consider conventional evidences of civilization. As a matter of fact, man got most of his ideas originally from the beasts and birds.

Cave-dwelling creatures taught him the advantages of a lair, and burrowing beasts probably gave him the first notion of building one for himself. He learned the art of plastering from the birds—the swallow is particularly adept. He got his primal lessons in mechanics from nature. Has any inventor improved on the screw pattern of the shark's egg case?

Someone has claimed that the art of dancing is the very epitome of civilization. Absurd. We got our latest popular steps from tribal dances of the people who learned them direct from the birds. The lady oriole was an expert skirt dancer before woman had draperies with which to imitate her vibrant plumes. Remember the stately minuets of the whooping crane.

Like the birds, too, man has a singing voice in mating time. It is merely a product of this mechanical age that now, instead of trusting to it, he is more apt to buy his sweetheart the phonograph record of some song he feels more perfect than his own; the primary intention is all the same—to please her fancy. Does he take her out to dine? I have seen the towhee offer the bird of his choice a particularly luscious morsel to the same end.

The most unnatural appearing product of civilization is clothes. I took a puritanical exception to the raiment of a pretty, sweet-voiced girl in a garment she would have hesitated to don if it were offered her to wear at a fancy dress ball instead of on the streets as an exposition of the current styles. Perhaps the uniformity of the feathered clans was in my inmost mind. "Why does she attract attention to herself that way?" I thoughtlessly demanded.

Her employer had a twinkle in his eye. "Stupid," he said, "this is no place for her, in an arid office, caged behind a desk; she wants a nest."

Cramp it by economic pressures, deny it for any consideration you can name, beneath our surface veneer, beneath the very barriers we set up to blind your tantalized eyes, lies the big reality we share with all living things, the need of our own nest.

Burgundy at Its Best.

Burgundy wines of 1915 are reported by the most eminent connoisseurs of Paris to be the best since 1865. In fact, their verdict is "perfect."

The summer of 1915 was hot, so was the autumn, with light rains now and again at exactly the right intervals. M. Mathieu, celebrated savant on the subject of wines, writes: "Since 1865 there has been no Burgundy like that of 1915 in delicacy or strength. The 1915 vintage is a remarkable synthesis of bouquet, aroma, body and flavor."

But, of course, all this is of merely academic interest to us.

PRICE OF GAS AT ST. KITTS

Flat Rate of 75 Cents to Prevail After Sept 1st.

St. Catharines, Aug. 18.—The United Gas Companies, in view of the increased cost of production and distribution of natural gas, have increased their rates of all consumption over 1,000 cubic feet, the new rate to go into effect with the September reading. This increase in rates will not effect the ordinary domestic consumer, being aimed at the larger consumers who use to a great extent for heating. The old rate for natural gas was 75 cents for the first 1,000 cubic feet and 45 cents per 1,000 feet thereafter, with a discount of five cents per 1,000 on all bills paid on or before the tenth of the month. The new rate is a flat rate of 75 cents per 1,000 with the usual discount.

GRAVEDIGGERS ON STRIKE

Ask Raise of Wages From $4 to $4.50 a Day.

New York, Aug. 18.—Forty gravediggers, most of them foreigners, laid down their shovel in Mount Olivet cemetery, in the Haspeth section of Newton, Queen's, and walked out because their demand for an increase of wages from $4 to $4.50 a day had been refused. Approved strike methods were adopted, and the entrances to the cemetery were picketed.

Utrecht, Holland, Aug. 18. — Former Emperor William, who has been living at Amerongen since his arrival in Holland, has purchased the estate and house of Doorn at the village of Doorn, near Utrecht, according to the Dagblad. The estate was bought from Baroness de Beaufort. It is about five miles north of Amerongen in the direction of Utrecht.

Observed Father's Wish.

Thackeray's daughter, Lady Ritchie, the widow of Sir Richmond Ritchie, died recently at the age of eighty-two. She had endeared herself to a wide public by her delightful reminiscences of her father and of the other famous Victorians among whom her early life was spent.

If as a novelist she achieved no popular success she was incomparable in relating anecdotes of the sort that illuminate, about the many remarkable men and women whom she had known intimately. It is much to be regretted that, in obedience to Thackeray's dying wish, she was precluded from writing her father's "Life."

Ritchie's "Thackeray" would have ranked with Lockhart's "Scott." Lady Ritchie's charming introductions to the biographical edition of "Thackeray" tantalize without satisfying his devotees. The reader wants more.—Living Age.

Recording Tree Growth.

Botanists of the Carnegie institution keep an interesting record of the growth of tree trunks, with their daily and seasonal changes of shape, by means of a new apparatus called the "dendrograph." It has two forms, each using as a supporting belt a series of wooden blocks hinged together and fastened around the tree. In one form of the instrument, plungers, supporting an encircling wire at their outer ends, touch the trunk at selected points, and any movement of a plunger is transmitted by the wire to a recording pen on a revolving cylinder. In the other form, a yoke carrying four contacts surrounds the tree, the variation in the distances between the contacts caused by any change in the tree's girth being indicated on the recording drum.

Astronomers Puzzled.

Some astronomers are of the opinion that the moon was once upon a time part of the earth, and that, while the latter was in a plastic state, our satellite was thrown out from it. They point to the Pacific ocean as the gash from which it was rudely rent.

Maybe so. But nobody knows why the surface of the moon, of which we never see much more than half, is covered with so-called "craters" that bear no likeness to anything on the earth. They are bowl-shaped, usually circular, and rimmed by cliffs 5,000 to 10,000 feet high. There are at least 25,000 of them visible to the telescope, the biggest being 800 miles in diameter.

The late Professor Pickering of Harvard was convinced that the moon has a little moon of its own, a few hundred yards in diameter, which can be seen only when the earth passes between the sun and the lunar orb, throwing the latter into its shadow.—Exchange.

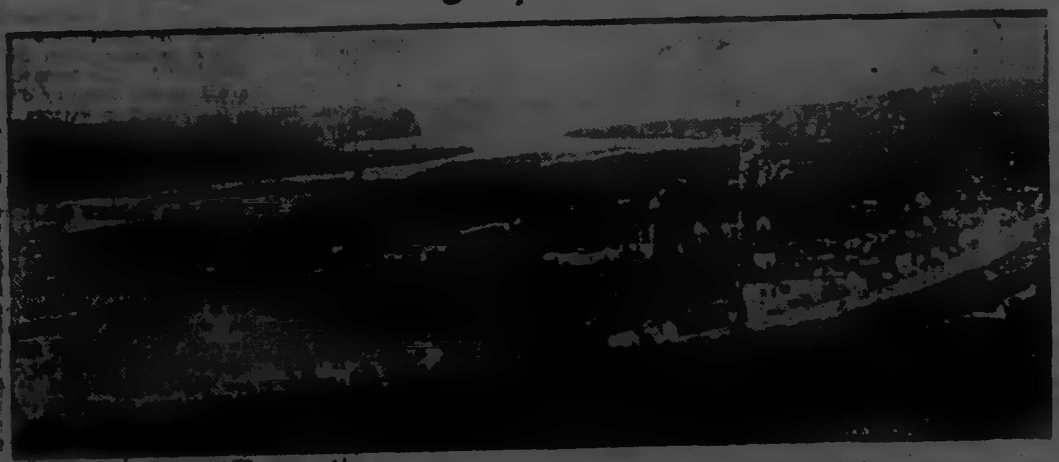
In the Days of the Bustle.

I was making a new dress for myself. It was a good many years ago, in the days when we wore bustles. The bustle which I wore was a home-made, crude affair. When fitting the dress, I had put on the bustle in order to get the proper hang to the skirt. So, to save time, I tied the bustle around outside of my house dress, and then tried on the new skirt.

During the morning I found it necessary to go to the store, and while waiting in the crowded grocery for my parcels, a friend, came up to me and said, to the amusement of the bystanders: "Why, Lillie, what have you tied around your waist?"

I found I had forgotten to take the bustle off, and had worn it on the outside of my house dress all the way to the store.—Exchange.

The Story of Nipigon



Nipigon, Ont., Lies Picturesquely Along Waters Abounding With Fish.

During the warm summer months tourists from all parts of the world make their way to Northern Ontario. Here they find the climate most delightful and plenty of fish in the rivers for sport and an abundance of wild animals for hunting. Those especially fond of fishing usually come to the Nipigon river which is known far and wide for its speckled trout.

Tourists desiring to visit this world-famous river usually come on the Canadian Pacific Railway to the village of Nipigon, which is situated on the Nipigon River about three miles from Nipigon Bay and sixty-six miles east of Port Arthur. As one steps off the train at Nipigon one sees the homes of all the inhabitants stretched along on either side of the track. Besides the homes of the villagers the tourist would notice other buildings worth mentioning. He would see three churches, a Hudson Bay store, another general merchandise store, owned by William McKirdy and Sons, two hotels, a restaurant owned by Mr. Goodridge and a school. The stranger to the village would likely follow a side street to the river and here he would find rapids in the river. Because Nipigon is situated near this fast water, it was so named. NIPIGON is derived from an Indian word which means "large quantities of water beyond." Just above the rapids the river widens out into a lake, known as Lake Helen.

As the tourist stands on the river's bank and surveys the surrounding country he is greatly impressed by the size and color of the rocks in the hills around the village. Not only is the place noted for its beauty, but there are many places of historical interest along the river near the village.

About a couple of miles down the river from Nipigon is a place known as Red Rock. It was so named because of the steep, massive red rocks which form the right bank of the river. Directly opposite Red Rock on the left bank of the river is a steep cliff. Painted red on the rocks near the water is the figure of the devil and several canoes carrying Indians with their paddles in hand. These pictures were painted here years ago by the Indians. They painted the picture of the devil there because they thought the evil spirit lived near by. The other paintings of the canoes was a sign to other Indians showing what tribes had passed that way.

The Indians living around Nipigon belong to the Ogibway tribe. It was the fish in the waters of the river that first drew the Indians to this spot. In early history when the various tribes of the Indians were at war with each other, the Iroquois being the better warriors, pursued the Ogibway up the Nipigon River into Lake Superior. The Ogibway managed to reach the shore in safety. They climbed a steep cliff and bravely kept the enemy on the lower ground. The clever Iroquois landed on an island in the lake and there dug holes in the ground in which they intended to hide and await the return of the Ogibway. However, the Ogibway saw and understood the plans of the cruel Iroquois. By means of their bows they shot arrows into the pit-falls on the island and forced the Iroquois to leave their hiding place.

Nowadays the Indians living in and around Nipigon village live as the white people do. The government has granted certain areas of land to them. These areas are known as reservations. Each year the government grants the sum of four dollars to each Indian. Mr. W. R. Brown, Indian agent, of Port Arthur, by assiduous study of Indian affairs has added much to the comfort of the Red Rock band of Ogibways at Nipigon.

The Hudson Bay post at Nipigon is an old one. The site first chosen for the post at Nipigon was on the bank of the river. Here the company received the furs from the Indians who came up and down the river in their canoes. Since those early days Nipigon has developed some. Foreigners, chiefly Finlanders, have bought up farms in Nipigon township from the government. They promise to clear and settle upon the land in return for the pulp wood on their farms. On account of the increase of population, the Hudson Bay company found it necessary to build a larger store in which they could keep on hand a large supply of groceries and merchandise. Now they have a big store opposite the C. P. R. station on the front street. It is of interest to know that Mr. McDonald, our deputy minister of game and fisheries, spent a part of his early life in the employ of the Hudson Bay company at Nipigon.

The country about Nipigon is one of vast natural resources. There is an immense area of forest from which the people get pulp wood, timber and railroad ties. The wood is hauled in the winter time to the station to be loaded on cars or to the water's edge to be floated in a raft in the spring to the pulp wood boats in Nipigon Bay. Most of these boats belong to companies in the United States.

There is much beautiful hard rock suitable for buildings in the neighborhood of Nipigon. The rock is drilled out and sent to where it is required. Many homes in the Twin Cities have been built from rock taken from near Nipigon.

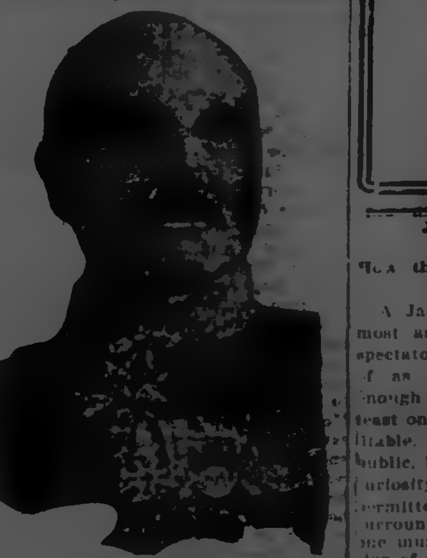
The waters in Nipigon township teem with fish. There is a small fishing station called Port McDiarmid on Orient bay from where the fish is shipped in vast quantities to all parts of the country.

Recently Dr. Robinson of Nipigon, offered a prize for the best history of that village. The prize was won by a little Finnish girl, [illegible] Paapala, whose essay is given above.

Candid Teutonic Writer Left Some War Memoirs That Told Too Much Truth

THE late Gen. Helmuth von Moltke of the very late imperial German army left behind him a batch of memoirs when he departed hence and the German Republic doesn't believe it is advisable to let his estate print them—at this time.

Von Moltke was nothing if not abrupt, and it is hinted that he so logically places the blame for the war that it would be best for at least one nation concerned if nothing was printed until—well, until it is not possible for the Allies to exact larger penalties every time they secure fresh proof of Germany's guilt. He was, indeed, abrupt and penetrating.



GEN. VON MOLTKE.

Von Moltke was not the son, but the nephew, of the "organizer of victory" and when the war broke out in 1914 the Kaiser made him chief of the General Staff. It was he who knitted together and organised the first 5,000,000 men that Germany flung against Belgium and France.

While the world knows that Gen. von Moltke came a cropper he, at least, fared as well as a number of his successors who also came very croppy croppers.

Von Moltke was the gentleman who eliminated much of the fireworks from the German soldier's training. The Kaiser liked to witness bold cavalry charges (at a mythical enemy) across level fields. It looked nice. But it would have lost a division or two in real battle. So von Moltke cut it out.

Muscular Power.

According to excellent authority, the muscles, in common with all organs of the human body, have periods of development and decline, our physical strength increasing up to a certain age and then decreasing. Tests of the strength of several thousand individuals have been made, and the following figures are given as the averages derived from such tests—The lifting power of a youth of 17 years is 280 pounds; in his 20th year this increases to 320 pounds; and in the 30 and 31st years respectively it reaches its height—365 pounds. At the expiration of the 31st year the strength begins to decline, very gradually at first. By the 40th year it has decreased eight pounds, and such diminuations continue at a slightly-increasing rate until the 50th year is reached, when the figure is 330 pounds. Subsequent to this period the strength falls more and more rapidly, until the weakness of old age is reached. It is found impossible to obtain trustworthy statistics of the 50th year.—Family Herald.

Prince George of Bavaria.

In 1912 the newspapers had much to say of the petition of the Princess George of Bavaria for an annulment of her marriage. Princess George, who was Archduchess Isabella Maria of Austria, and who is a daughter of Archduke Frederick, after ten months of marriage declared that she had made a mistake. It was recalled that her husband and she had quarrelled on their honeymoon. In the end the marriage was dissolved by papal decree.

Recently an announcement from Munich was to the effect that Prince George, who is now thirty-nine years old, had entered a Jesuit monastery at Innsbruck. His name was not conspicuous during the war.

In order to be supremely happy one must have something to do, something to love and something to hope for.

What Bradstreets Says:—

"Bradstreets" has been looking into the interesting subject of the relation existing between business failures and the advertising world. It has gathered statistics indicating the proportion of failures among business men who advertise, and it has discovered the highly significant fact that 84 per cent. of all failures are among "non-advertisers."

If any proof were needed of the truth of the old axiom that "it pays to advertise," here it is upon the very best authority. It is needless to draw a moral from the tale, because the moral is self-evident. It is worthy of remark, however, that "Bradstreets" speaks with an authority with no selfish motive, not being interested itself in the advertising business. It neither advertises itself in the ordinary sense nor does it deal in advertising in a general sense. It is simply an expert on finance and trade, interested only in discovering the truth relative to the value of advertising.

With only 16 per cent. of our business failures among advertisers and 84 per cent. among those who do not advertise, the average Peterborough business man should not be long in determining his policy.

JAPANESE JUSTICE.

How the Law Is Enforced In the Far East.

A Japanese criminal court is almost as difficult to get into as spectator as it is difficult to get out of as a prisoner, but there are enough unusual points to make at least one visit instructive, if not profitable. Criminal trials in Japan are public, but not blatantly so, and idle curiosity is not encouraged. To be permitted to even enter the grounds surrounding the court buildings one must secure the formal permission of the stern police official at the gate, and that permission is only secured through the presentation of some good reason why the solicitor should be permitted to pass.

Once past the guardian of the gates, however, one may proceed into the courtroom itself without trouble, provided always that he removes his hat immediately he enters the building, removes his overcoat if he happens to be wearing one, walks quietly and holds his remarks and questions down to a faint whisper. In the main courthouse in Tokio, which houses the Supreme Court and the various local courts, the corridors are lined during the sessions by sworded gendarmes, between the rows of which the one with business before the judges warily walks. No chance is lost to impress upon everyone the fact that the dignity of the law in Japan is something which must not be trifled with.

Ordinary police court cases in Japan are disposed of in the police stations themselves and the police inspectors in charge have the power to exercise a wide discretion. Ordinary drunks, of whom there are very few considering that almost every [illegible] grocery store and every tea [illegible] and restaurant sells intoxicants, and there are saki shops every [illegible] yards on almost every [illegible], are simply kept long enough to sober up and are discharged with a warning. [illegible] squabbles are settled by the policemen on the beats. Street [illegible] are rare, and offenders are usually made to perform profound apologies to each other and the police and are let go, and other minor offenders are punished by the scare the inspectors are always able to throw into them, while the more serious violators of law are passed on to the headquarters of the metropolitan police and thence into the local courts.

Once he has been sent to headquarters a prisoner's troubles commence. As a preliminary to all else he is photographed and finger-printed, a decided reversal of the principle which bars a man from the Rogues' Gallery until he has been convicted of a felony. A suggestion that a prisoner be "mugged" in America before conviction would set every syllable of the constitution quivering but in Japan "it is an order" and as such goes. To question a police order is neither according to etiquette nor the dictates of prudence, and the records contain no instances of any one ever doing so. From the photograph room and the ink pad the prisoner passes on for his "examination," a legalized third degree, held in an underground room where, without benefit of counsel, he is sweated, perhaps for several days in succession, although the law prohibits the holding of a man without a definite charge for more than twenty-four hours.

A similar law is evaded in the United States by re-arresting the prisoner at the end of each day, but the process is simpler in Japan. Here [illegible] the fact of a suspect's arrest a secret, and there is no boasting to help enquiring friends, if any are foolish enough to run their own necks in a noose by making enquiries. The examinations are legal, however, and are always held in camera, following which the prisoner is either released or committed for trial. There is nothing else corresponding in any way to the Canadian grand jury system.

Then after waiting his turn the prisoner goes to the local court where he faces a bench of usually four judges, one of whom is head judge and who does all the questioning of the witnesses. On the bench also sits the prosecuting lawyer, with the lawyer for the defence occupying a desk and seat immediately facing the head judge, but on a level about four feet below that of the bench. Judges and lawyers are all gowned, with stiff black crepe [illegible], the collars and chests liberally decorated with embroidery, the judges and prosecuting officers in [illegible] and the members of the bar in white. All wear caps of black crepe, somewhat resembling a Scotch bonnet without the tail ribbons.

Everything is solemn, everything is decorous and, without a jury to work on, there are none of the [illegible] of oratory with which the lawyers call upon heaven to witness either the scandalous nature of the prisoner's crime nor the halo of innocence so plain to the attorney for the defence.

The handling of the prisoners is pure Japanese, however. Delivered at the court house for trial, the prisoners are marched from the police wagon in single file, handcuffed and tied together by a stout rope that circles each man's waist and is twisted through his obi. Their jail kimonos are of a dull drab and on their sockless feet are grass sandals, in which they flop through the corridors.

The most unusual feature of all to a stranger is the fact that each prisoner has his head covered by a wicker mask, more like an inverted wastepaper basket than anything else, the object of which is to prevent recognition of the prisoner, to permit him to hide his shame under the disguise, and, very possibly, to prevent the whole file from making a bolt for liberty. The sight of a prisoner so arrayed is ghastly, the mask bringing up the suggestion of the hangman's cap. Once in the prisoner's box, however, the masks are removed, while the prisoners sit with deeply bowed heads in an attitude of the utmost humility.

"Mizpah."

Mizpah is a word from the Hebrew and its frequent use as an inscription on rings is based upon the words voiced by Laban in the twenty-third chapter of Genesis in connection with the setting up of the heap of stones by Jacob and his brethren as follows: "The Lord watch between me and thee when we are absent one from another."

A Problem.

This advertisement from a daily paper gives the reader an unlooked-for glimpse into the inner life of a family: Wanted—Houseworker to run small household in country place; must know how to care for boy five and girl twelve and be tactful enough to get along with their grandmother.

His Reason.

"I wish I had been able to go into the army," said Mr. Cumrox. "A noble ambition." "Not exactly. It's mostly selfish. If I were a soldier maybe mother and the girls would collect funds to buy tobacco for me instead of ordering me out of the house every time I light a cigar."

Music as a Business Stimulus.

With the introduction of music into the business comes the probable development of a company band, a company chorus or glee club, a company concert party or minstrel show.

We hear a good deal about recreation for employes. We are convinced that picnics and even books are good for them, and will return their cost to the employers, but this music idea is dealing with something deeper and more fundamental than anything which has ever been tried before. It may require longer vision than the other ideas, but it will go farther.

No matter how small your organization the use of music as a business stimulus is surely possible, and will pay a profit for you. Outside of the spiritual benefit to your employes this is getting under their skins and getting loyalty by winning them through the most important part of the human system—the heart!—Forbes' Magazine.

Not Much of a Pusher.

It was the elevated station at 8:30 on a weekday morning. The advice of the Irish guard who helps close the gates of the rear cars was an education in itself. But he had a competitor in a girl who was doing her valiant best to get on. "Push, push," she urged of a weak little masculine beside her. In a wish-washy voice he replied that he was pushing. Back came the swift retort: "You make me tired! You push like a jellyfish!"—New York Sun.

Opium.

Opium is the dried juice of the white poppy, a flower that grows in many parts of Asia. A few days after the flowers have fallen off the plants men go through the fields in the afternoon and make little cuts in the poppy head. Out of these cuts a milky juice oozes, which dries into a brown, sticky paste. Every morning the men go through the fields again and scrape off this paste, which they put into jars. Later on it is made into half-pound balls and then packed for shipment.

Fat Men In History.

The general idea seems to be that fat and fame do not go together.

This is probably accounted for by the fact that those of large bulk are inclined to be easy-going and therefore lacking in that push which is said to bring a man to the fore. The only great statesman one can recall who was really a fat man was Charles James Fox, as can be seen even by his effigy in the Palace of Westminster, where he would make three of his great rival, Pitt the younger.

Jamie Thompson, the author of "The Seasons," is probably the only really fat poet. He was a comfortable, lazy, slovenly man, of whom it is related that he would eat peaches off the wall, not taking the trouble to take his hands out of his pockets to pluck them. Yet, despite his lazy disposition, he managed to write one of the longest of English poems, as well as "The Castle of Indolence"—a castle in which he habitually dwelt.

G. K. Chesterton, one of the stoutest of living celebrities, has on several occasions made up in the character of the Sage of Fleet Street with excellent success. It is a little remarkable, too, that one of his closest friends, Hilaire Belloc, is almost as noted for his bulk as he is for his criticism of military operations, his poetry, his history and his fiction.—Tit-Bits.

AGENT GAVE IT UP

Nothing for Him to Do but Hand Out Ticket.

Now He Makes Plaintive Appeal for Rule by Which He Can Tell a Minister From Ordinary Run of Mankind.

"Sky pilots! Whe-e-w!" whistled the ticket agent of a Missouri town the other day, so the story goes. "Well, it seems to me there are just ten times as many as there used to be in this neck of the woods, and I tell you some of the guys who come up here to this window sayin' they're ministers and asking for half-fare tickets look more like ballyhoo men at a street fair or circus than sky pilots.

"The trouble is when a fellow comes up here to the window and says 'I'm a preacher,' there ain't any rules laid down for me to go by to tell him from a professional crook, or moll buzzer, or a right reverend, and so I have to hand out the ticket.

"The other night I was talking to my wife about it, and we hit on a scheme, and when I went down to work next morning I had the family Bible tucked under my arm, and when a sporty-looking old chap, puffing a cigarette, with a plaid suit and a necktie so loud it was screaming at you, came up to the window, and says 'minister's ticket to Kansas City, please,' I said respectful like:

"'Please excuse me, sir, but will you please tell me who wrote the second book of St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians?'

"He smiled at me friendly, and said pretty quick, 'Why Paul, of course. Now get busy with a ticket.'

"'Nope,' said I, just as cold as you please, looking him hard in the eyes. 'You're dead wrong there. Paul didn't do any such thing, and nobody else ever wrote a second book to those Galatians, for there ain't any such book,' and I thought I had finished him.

"But, mind you, he just sort of looked at me sad-like for a minute like he felt sorry for me, and then he reared back and said in a voice just like he was praying: 'Sir, I am a minister of the holy gospel, whether or not this finite thing called mind tricks me in reference to the number of books written by the blessed saint, Paul. I teach the philosophy of rational thought so as to co-ordinate with the elucidation of internal forces upon the outward or extraneous matter which operate in opposition to the complete domination of the purely physical to the intellectual—the soul, some call it—and that the elevation of the spiritual retards the development of disease and error on this terrestrial planet on which we live and move and have our being.'

"I looked at him a minute, and then I said out loud, 'Well I be dogged!' For I was thinking all the time to myself how a ten-dollar-a-week ticket man was ever going to get wise to a line of talk like that even with a Bible in his hand. And I handed out the ticket."—Kansas City Star.

Advice for Singers.

Sims Reeves, the famous English tenor, is quoted as saying: "A singer who does not recite or read the verses of a song aloud before attempting the music will never become a great artist." The young singer should memorise a text, should repeat it over and over aloud, testing the matter of emphasis or stress upon each word to determine just where it should be and the proper amount to give the best interpretation to the thought.

Handicapped by Law.

"You are suffering from brain fag and ennui," announced the specialist. "You should take more interest in your business."

"I would like to," replied the patient.

"Then why don't you!" demanded the specialist.

"The law won't let me," replied the patient. "I'm a pawnbroker."

Rats Cause Losses.

Losses from rats in cities are enormous. In 1908 the biological survey made a careful study of rat infestations in two cities, Washington and Baltimore, with the result that actual losses of produce and other property amounting annually to $400,000 and $700,000 respectively, were revealed. These sums are nearly in ratio to the populations. The Woman's Municipal league of Boston recently announced that losses from rats in that city amounted to $1,350,000 each year. Losses in Pittsburgh, Pa., have been estimated at over $1,000,000 a year.

HAPPENED IN THE STONE AGE

Beautiful Love Story of How Cave Man Showed His Great Devotion for His Mate.

Glub, the cave man, hurried home through the early dawn. Slung from his shoulder were three large stones, and on his face was an anxious grin. At the door of the cave stood Bla, the cave woman, a scowl of wrath in her face, and a large, knotty club in her hand.

Glub gulped when he saw her, and hastily set the stones on the ground. Grinning sheepishly, he approached and struck her affectionately on the side of the jaw following the blow with a tug at her black hair. But these blandishments were all lost on Bla, the stony-hearted, who fixed him in the eye with the largest knot on the club.

"Have a heart, sweetie"—or words to that effect—begged Glub.

At the sound of his voice Bla broke into a prehistoric snuffle and removed the club from her mate's eye.

"Where have you been?" she sniffed. "I'll bet I know. I'll bet you've been over with those nasty lowdown tree dwellers rolling bones till all hours, with your wife and children waiting for you and thinking you had been run over by a glacier, and the best ichthyosaurus stew you ever saw going to waste. O! Boo! Hoo!"

Breaking into loud, pitiable sobs, Bla once more brought the club to bear upon her spouse's pithecanthropic map. Glub was grieved and her reproaches made him feel guilty, so he knocked her down apologetically and confessed that she was right. He had been rolling bones with Sweek, the tree dweller.

"Yes," howled Bla. "I know it. I knew you were rolling bones. A fine thing for a man with a family to gamble away all his good shells and stones and even skins, when the children have hardly a whole fig leaf to their names, and the meat is so low that unless you scare up a dinosaur this very day we shall starve. Fine goings on for a man with a family that needs to be saving his strength to go out and get meat for them and fig leaves and skins to keep them warm!"

Glub was repentant.

"Bla," he said. "I know it was wrong to gamble—very, very wrong—but see what I won from Sweek, the tree dweller. See the three hollow stones filled with dinosaur meat and Adam's apples. Wah! What do you think of your Glub now?"

Bla, in the transports of her joy flung the club into the cave, and flung herself upon Glub's neck, choking him violently.

"My own Glub!" she cried. "Come into the cave and have breakfast."

Quaint Island.

Elmley, one of England's oddest little islands, though only 45 miles from London, is a parish where roads, shops, lamps, telephones, motor cars, public houses and postoffices are unknown. The island, which lies off the Isle of Sheppey, Kent, has an area of about 2,000 acres, and is the property of Oxford university. The inhabitants are mostly shepherds of large flocks of sheep. The oldest man of the village is in his seventieth year. He has yet to see a motor car. The school and church are the two chief landmarks on the island. The reason they were built in such a sparsely populated spot is that in winter it is almost impossible to leave the island, as the ferry which runs to and from the island is dangerous.

A novel method of obtaining the services of the ferryman, who lives opposite to the island, is the opening of the white door of a hut facing the shore. At night a lighted candle held aloft serves the purpose of the open door.

Stonewall's Plan.

As an American troopship pulled away from a New York dock on its journey to France, Stonewall Jackson and Welcome Brown hung over the forward rail and looked with solemn faces down into the choppy waters of the Atlantic.

"What you'all gwine to do, Stonewall, if one of dem pow'ful mean torpedoes smash into dis here boat?"

Stonewall remained silent for a minute, then he turned a sober face toward his brother in sorrow.

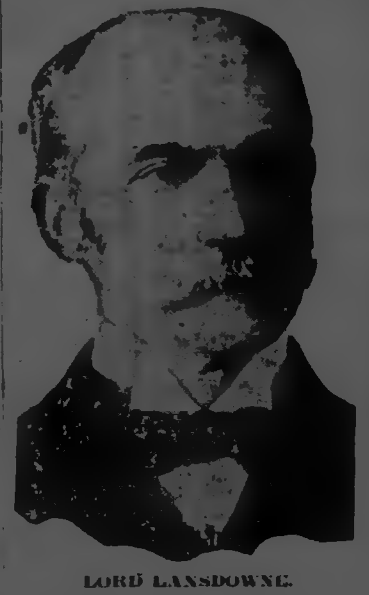
"What I gwine to do? Listen, Welcome, my ole mammy done tole me dat dere nebber wuz but one man dat eber walked on de water an' got away wid it—but ef one ob dem chasers ever smash into dis boat—say, Welcome, Ah'm goin' to be de second one."—John E. Scroggins, U. S. N., in

Strange Story Is Told About Lord Lansdowne And His Famous Letters

STARTLING revelations are to be rife now that peace is signed. Soon the world is to hear the inside of the Lusitania investigation regarding which the most extraordinary tales went about. If there is any inside story about Kitchener, his mission to Russia, and his tragic death on the Hampshire, that, too, will doubtless come forth. Many secret things will be cleared up, many mysterious events explained.

The following tale may be one of these revelations, but it sounds suspiciously like an after-the-war yarn and should be discounted as such: A Canadian lately returned from England brings a curious tale concerning the sensational letters to the press with which Lord Lansdowne electrified the world in the spring of 1918, and which letters brought a storm of execrations upon the head of that venerable peer. If the tale told by a highly placed British official in the sanctuary of a West End London club is to be credited, Lord Lansdowne was simply a martyr, and not the pacifist for which the world branded him.

It is well known that a ring of powerful families wield enormous influence in British politics. Their representatives hold high places both in the House of Lords and in the Commons. And in the last analysis it is this strong clique with its ramifications and affiliations which decides great questions of policy. Lord Lansdowne and Mr. Arthur Balfour are said to be very prominent among its members. Well, about the time the great Hun drive was sweeping back the allies and it looked as though the Americans had come in too late, when the British Army Council was actually debating the possibilities of having to give up either Paris or the Channel ports, matters were pretty desperate. With Paris in German hands the French, gallant as they proved themselves, might have thought seriously about giving up the struggle. With the Channel ports in Hun hands Britain would have been terribly menaced, and the war protracted for possibly years. So it was thought by well-informed military men who even at that late date had not perceived the feet of clay on which the still formidable German Colussus was standing. Things looked bad then.



LORD LANSDOWNE.

At this juncture, so the story goes, a meeting of the great family party, patriots one and all, was held, and it was resolved to test public opinion. Germany, for all her successes, would have eagerly snatched at a suitable offer of peace. This would have meant a return to the pre-war status for all the belligerent nations. Germany might even have given Belgium a good round sum to salve her wounds.

Did the war-weary people of Britain want peace on these terms, or were they united in their desire to fight it out to the end? That was the question to be decided. Some one must ask the question, and ask it in a very carefully guarded manner. It would never have done to debate such a matter in Parliament. The public pulse had to be tested. So it was resolved to test the sentiment of the people by a letter in the press, written by a highly placed Briton. Two names were said to have been put forward—those of Lansdowne and Balfour. Lansdowne then, without a moment's hesitation, volunteered to write the letter. He pointed out that his career was at an end, whereas Balfour was one of the strong men on whom the Empire was relying. Hence Lansdowne willingly became the goat and sacrificed his name and fame to find which way the wind blew, to discover, by raising a controversy, whether the people of Britain wanted peace at once or a fight to the knock-out.

Canadians will recall the furious wave of indignation aroused by publication of Lansdowne's first letter and the amazement that even he, for all his reputation as a former statesman, should have gone scot free after this and a succeeding apparently pacifist effusion. Lansdowne's letters certainly read like the cowardly whines of a reactionary old aristocrat who feared that the war would end in Britain's defeat, in revolution, and in the sweeping away of the British upper classes, with all their lands and riches, and privileges. But many people in London at that time thought they saw some strong backing behind the letter. Else how would the writer dare, and how would he escape punishment?

The price paid for a cradle is hush money.

RAN TRUE TO FORM

Nothing Really Remarkable About This Tree.

Considering Its Variety and the Place Whence It Comes, It Could Hardly Avoid Having a Criminal Nature.

The Boston Globe, in its "Odd Items" column, prints an item about a tree which absorbed some of a rail fence. We have lost the item, so we don't know where this tree was, or is, but it couldn't have been anywhere near Harmony, Me., says the Lewiston Journal. If it had, the owner never would have had the nerve to mention it in the face of the remarkable performances of a tree that stood on the land of a relative of ours.

Our relative had been a soldier in his youth and when he bought this farm he brought to it a number of shrubs, trees and flowers collected in his wanderings about the earth. This particular tree of which I speak was of the Thievohunnish variety, and came from Prussia.

It grew rapidly after it was set out and crowded out all other growing stuff for 20 feet around. In ten years it was three feet through, and in 15, four feet through at the base.

The peculiar thing about this tree was not its rapid growth however. Let us explain. Our relative built a barbed-wire fence by this tree and to save driving a post nailed it to the tree. Well, the ends of the fence began to disappear. Our relative thought someone was snipping off the ends of the wire for some reason. His wife was of the opinion that the wire had too much wool in it and was shrinking in the dews and rains. In any case from 10 to 20 feet of the wire would disappear every night.

My relative finally gave it up, and in about two weeks the wire had disappeared entirely and the mystery was greater than ever. We simply couldn't trace it.

Then we began to miss articles left near the tree. A hired man left a scythe in its branches one night. The next morning it was gone.

Some one left a pail near by and that disappeared.

Finally the matter was brought to a climax when the blooded bull calf which had been tied to a stake near this tree vanished during the night.

About this time my relative noticed that there seemed to be an extraneous growth of some sort of about six feet above the butt of the tree. He began to have his suspicions about this tree. He determined to sacrifice the tree to satisfy his curiosity. He got an ax and chopped it down. Inside the tree was the scythe, hundreds of yards of barbed wire, the partially dismembered carcass of the calf, pails, stones, a pair of overalls, one overshoe and many other articles.

The tree had a criminal nature and developed a kleptomaniac streak. Everyone was glad to see that tree cut down.

Flower Language.

In remote Alpine hamlets and villages, especially in the Bernese Oberland, there still exist ancient and pretty customs of proposing marriage by a language of flowers. If a maid accepts a bouquet of edelweiss from a man she at the same time accepts him as her fiance, the idea being that the man has risked his life to obtain the flowers for the woman he loves.

Another method which exists in the canton of Glarus is for the young man to place a flower pot containing a single rose and a note on the window sill of the girl's room when she is absent from home, and wait—perhaps days—for a reply. If the maid takes the rose the young man boldly enters the house to arrange matters with her parents, but if the rose is allowed to fade away the proposal is rejected without a single word having been exchanged between the couple.

They and We.

A wounded corporal in a hospital told how, while on patrol duty, he had seen the body of a noncommissioned French officer hanging by the feet, his face bashed in with muskets.

"My men and I were furious," he said, "and made up our minds that we'd do the same thing to the first German we caught. That night we found two Germans hidden in a barn. We fell on them and then as they were hungry we gave them bread. We could not do what they did, for we are not of the same race."—Everybody's Magazine.

Fowls Plucked With Vacuum.

A machine of the vacuum type for plucking fowls is described and illustrated in Popular Mechanics magazine. With it, it is said, a person can remove all the feathers, dry, from an average-sized bird in about five minutes. A motor-driven fan creates suction in a large flexible tube at the free end of which is a special plucking apparatus. Once loosed the feathers pass through the tube into a large receptacle overhead.

No Honeymoon Trip.

I attended a wedding of a dear girl friend whose father was a well-to-do farmer. After the ceremony we girls crowded around the blushing bride and she was asked where they expected to go on their honeymoon trip. She replied: "We aren't going to take a trip, for the money we would spend will buy a nice cow."—Chicago Tribune.

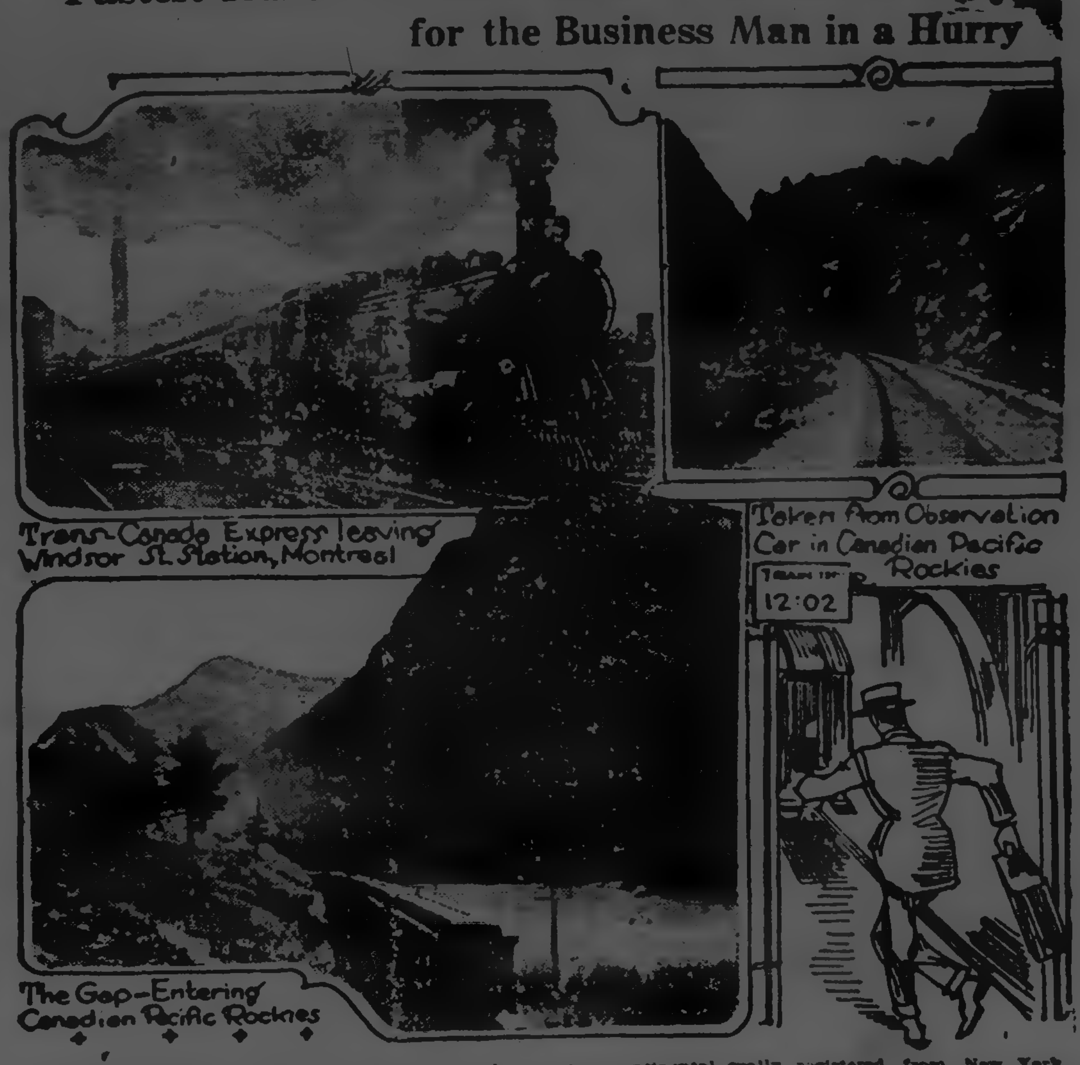
Fastest Transcontinental Train in the World for the Business Man in a Hurry



Trans-Canada Express leaving Windsor St. Station, Montreal
Taken from Observation Car in Canadian Pacific Rockies
12:02
The Gap—Entering Canadian Pacific Rockies

Now that the era of reconstruction is here, the business man, who has been taxed to the limit, bought bonds to his capacity and given until it hurts is to be considered again. He is to be permitted to get from place to place quickly, his freight is to be handled promptly and he is to be given every assistance to revitalize the business of America. The railways are the veins and arteries upon which a healthy business body must depend, therefore normally much of his help must come from them.

The Canadian Pacific, a privately run road is the first of the railroads to help the business man.

On June 1st the first "Trans-Canada"—the new transcontinental express of the C. P. R.—pulled out of the Windsor St. Station in Montreal filled to capacity on its three thousand mile run to Vancouver.

This is the fastest transcontinental train in the world making the trip from Montreal to Vancouver in less than four days, to be exact, 93 hours and 30 minutes, and from Vancouver to Montreal in 92 hours 15 minutes, the run being made without change of cars.

A whole business day is thus saved for the Business-Man-in-a-Hurry.

An interesting point in connection with this train is the fact that more than half of the passengers are generally registered from New York, Philadelphia, Boston and other American cities, a considerable number being booked for Banff, Lake Louise and points west.

One thinks of a transcontinental train as a single unit, but in reality it is made up of a number of complete units. A daily service, the trip being four days, requires four trains running each way simultaneously. The equipment of the new de luxe train has an estimated value of $6,000,000, using for the daily run eastbound and westbound, 69 sleeping cars, 5 compartment cars, 16 diners and 24 locomotives.

SIMPLY REFUSE TO BE OLD

Many Men Considered Beyond Their Prime Enter the Lists With Their Youth Renewed.

Two thousand years ago Cicero wrote of the occasional old man "whose mind stands out of the reach of the body's decay," and only a few months ago a farmer of seventy-five, whose body as well as his mind was still young, went into an employment office in Philadelphia to obtain a position in a munition factory. There are men who come back from retirement at an advanced age and make great successes in this or that industry.

Doctor Osler spoke of the old Roman who cut loose from his own companions and by living with young men extended his years to 150. A successful newspaper editor at the age of sixty-three was asked to head an important department in a great university. At first he thought he was too old, but then he had this idea:

"It is true that I am sixty-three, but there are one million men in this country today who are only twenty-three. I will join that group and look at everything from their viewpoint.

"That will be the motto of my life from this moment. Victor Hugo said that forty was the old age of youth and fifty the youth of old age. I will make the sixty the age of adventure."

These you may say are exceptional cases. But there is nothing exceptional about the fact that in many of the great commercial universities today fairly large numbers of men from forty to forty-five are taking courses. In one of the correspondence schools the average age is nearly thirty-five, which, allowing for the many very young clerks and the like who are enrolled, shows how the older fellows are still learning. It is literally true that age is to a considerable extent a habit of mind, largely within control of the individual.—Albert W. Atwood in Saturday Evening Post.

Who's Who?

In making the interesting portrait collection of Americans earlier than the eighteenth century, recently published by the Boston Athenaeum, the librarian of that oldest history in the New England capital had to take into consideration the tricks that time has a way of playing with the identity of ancient portraits. Several pictures of men and women who lived in the original group of colonies were excluded because it is no longer possible to say with certainty that the names by which they are known are those of the sitters. It is now known to be more than likely for example that the English poet, Charles Churchill, was the original of the picture long believed to represent the American soldier of King Philip's war, Col. Benjamin Church. The portrait generally thought to be that of [illegible] is open to the [illegible] [illegible] as the portraits of other persons.

Aerial torpedoes in the form of miniature airplanes were among the American war-waging prospects when the signing of the armistice ended the struggle.

A powerful weapon of destruction which could have been used with terrific effect against fortifications, cities and opposing armies was in process of experimentation, according to facts which have leaked out at Washington.

The secret of the invention has been closely guarded. Even now the authorities are unwilling to make public the details. Except that they appeared toylike, compared with the airplane, the construction was similar, engines and planes being provided. Unlike airplanes, they necessarily had to be self-propelling without pilots to guide them. The torpedoes had a range of 60 miles.

By means of a wonderful mechanism it was claimed to be possible to direct their course with great precision. At the exact moment desired the torpedo would explode, destroying the miniature airplane, of course, but causing widespread destruction. The torpedoes were designed to carry 300 pounds of T N T.

Keeping Up the White House.

President Wilson has been extremely conservative in allowing expenditures for the White House since he has occupied it, and not a dollar has been expended, particularly since the declaration of war, that could possibly be avoided. Last year, however, the walls in the state parlors were repapered, but the same design of wall paper was kept in all of the rooms. The handsome patriotic design of the blue field and stars, which was restored in 1903, and which has been so popular, still graces the walls of the blue chambers. The rugs were replaced by new ones, while dainty new curtains of lace were hung under the heavy draperies. All the furniture has been reupholstered in the same pattern. These small renovations have given to the first floor at the White House a very attractive appearance.

Bedouin Bards.

The descriptive power and fidelity of Arabic poetry in setting forth both the life of the people and the scenery of the clime are remarkable. It conjures up visions of tawny brows, flowing beards, soft eyes, picturesque turbans, pawing chargers, and patient dromedaries. We seem to be there. It is the land of the date tree and the fountain, the ostrich and the giraffe, the tent and the caravan. It is the home of the simoon and the mirage. It is the world of the desert and the stars. Hospitality waves her torch through the night to win the wanderer to be a guest. The very picture, embodiment, breath, blaze, of all this is in the lyrics of the Bedouin bards. The richness of their language and something of the character of the people who use it, are shown in the fact that it has 80 names for honey, 500 for the lion and a thousand for the sword!—William Russell Alger.

WHAT THE WORLD WAR COST

Ability to Meet It Consists in Country's Productive Power Exercised to the Limit.

The ultimate factor in war finance is not the dollar, but what the dollar can buy—at the moment when it is necessary to use it. The economic burden of a war is not borne by capital, that is, the stored-up savings invested in railroads, factories and banks, but by the productive power of the country, engaged in unproductive consumption. For war is waste, observes the April La Revista del Mundo.

When estimating the financial ability of a nation to make war a consideration of her wealth does not tell the story, just as a consideration of population, which would give Russia the first place, would be altogether false. It is the ability a nation has to master and mobilize her dollars and send them into the trenches and make them fight, that reveals her financial power as a military nation. Germany, with her long preparation, her autocratic government machinery, was able to conscript all production for war purposes, and mass her economic strength almost as speedily as she massed her fighting men.

Great Britain and the United States, not being versed in the science of war did not understand this factor. The economic resources of these countries were not mobilized and massed all at once, but each government was forced to take over more and more of the machinery of production as war needs became increasingly great. These two countries, with bulldog, but mistaken, determination, clung to the slogan, "Business as usual," as long as it was possible to do so. The business men of those countries believed that so long as there was plenty of money in circulation every one would be able to turn to, buy government bonds and thus assist in the business of war. But this fallacy is akin to the common one of mistaking dollars for wealth.

The cost of the war, as nearly as it can be estimated in money, shows the national debt which each belligerent now carries ranges from 4.6 per cent of the national wealth (in Japan) to 80 per cent of the national wealth (in Hungary). How these staggering liabilities are to be met is the problem for the future; but the United States, with a debt amounting to 6 per cent of her national wealth of $250,000,000,000, is in the favored position undoubtedly, facing unprecedented possibilities in credit expansion.

Pineapple Fiber for Cloth.

The pineapple, curious as it may appear to people in the occident who know it only as an article of food, is used in China for making cloth. At least, its leaves are so used. The leaf fiber, after being extracted by a simple process, is first made into thread. The thread is then spooled and run on bobbins. Old-fashioned native looms next handle the thread, converting it into a serviceable cloth.

PETERBOROUGH MAY HAVE VOCATIONAL TRAINING BRANCH FOR RETURNED MEN

G.W.V.A. Meet in Regular Session—Will Organize Athletic Club.

The Great War Veterans in regular session last evening, added another half dozen members to the association in the persons of A. D. V. Allison, A. J. Perks, Jesse Ayres, A. C. Stewart, Leonard Frazer and Cook.

Secretary Whatley reported receipt from D. C. Ross, supeintendent of attactions, of a contract for the G. W. V. A. band to play at the Toronto Exhibition.

The secretary also submitted the price of transfer shields to be used on glass doors and at other suitable spots in the club rooms, as 50 cents each, and some of these shields will be ordered.

Free Land.

The meeting was also notified that returned soldiers can now secure free land in Northern Ontario on applicatio to the Ontario Crown Lands Depatment, Toronto.

Vocational Training.

As to vocational training, Secretary Whatley reported that the matter of estabishing a sub-vocational training officer here for returned soldiers is receivnig consideration, with every hope of even a main branch being located in Peterborough. The authorities now are inclined to the view that changed circumstances here since a main vocational training branch was located at Oshawa warrant similar consideration for this district.

Investigating Charges.

Adjutant Buntin wrote that he could not possibly be present at this meeting to personally lay charges against a member of the association that he had endeavored to persuade members of the Temple band to join the band of the G.W.V.A. The adjutant would, however, be pleased to attend any specified meeting convenient to all concerned.

Complaint has been made to the local pastmaster that a returned soldier employed at the post office is engaging in street car work in the evenings, thus depriving, for all that is known to the contrary, some one of that extra work who really needs it. Postmaster Edgar has asked for a detailed verbial report of the complaint when he will look into the matter. The postmaster's request will be complied with.

Athletic Club.

On motion of Comrades LeBarr and Finlay, a meeting of all returned soldiers will be called with the object of forming an athletic club in connection with the association.

In moving this resolution Comrade LeBarr said there are quite a number of returned men not yet affiliated with the G.W.V.A., and this athletic club would be a means of inducing them to join their brathren from overseas. The club also would prove a source of revenue to the G.W.V.A. The baseball club, LeBarr reported, after paying for uniforms and supplies still turned nito the association n appreciable sum from late receipts.

Comrade Stanley was strong for he athletic club being exclusive to members of the G.W.V.A. only. Comrade Cooper also expressed this view.

Comrade LeBarr: "Many returned men outside this association want to know what we have here for them. Athletes are the mainstay of most men's institutions. Take the Y. M. C. A., for instance, it could not exist were it not for its athletic attractions. With an athletic club we would get the young men into the G.W.V.A. and hold them."

Comrade Stanley did not believe in the G.W.V.A. offering returned soldiers a bribe to join it.

Comrade LeBarr: "The reason I would call a meeting of returned men in regard to the proposed athletic club, is to get them up here in our rooms so that they may see what we have to offer members. I approve of any legitimate, reasonable means to incite membership.

The motion carried and returned men, members of the G.W.V.A. and non-members, will be invited to gather together on the question of an athletic club.

More Light.

The chairman of the city's Fire, Water and Light Committee will be asked to have a street electric lighted place outside the club rooms, in front of the building. This was the motion of Miller and Bacon.

To Frame Cable.

On motion of Comrades Stanley and Miller, the cable reply from Field Marshal Haig to the association's congratulations on his stand regarding British veterans, will be framed and hung in the association's rooms.

In the reply of the Field Marshal, he hoped veterans of the Empire would never forget their comradeship in the great war.

RETAIL MERCHANTS BOOST EXHIBITION

OTTAWA DEALERS ARE CO-OPERATING WITH MEMBERS FAIR BOARD.

At the request of Mr. A. J. Freiman, chairman of the publicity committee of the Exhibition Association, a meeting of the Retail Merchants' Association of Ottawa, was held last evening, at the summons of the president, M. E. R. Fisher, when plans for lending the maximum amount of co-operation to the Exhibition Association with a view to the success of the big fair were discussed.

As a result of this meeting, the largest in the history of the association, the business men of Ottawa are behind the Exhibition as never before.

Arrange Auto Tour

It was decided among other things to arrange an automobile tour for Saturday, Aug. 16, this tour to extend throughout Eastern Ontario as far as Brockville and Prescott, to advertise the exhibition Other organizations taking part in this tour will be the Kiwanis Club and the Ottawa Motor Club., Mr. Stewart De La Ronde is convener of the tour committee and all who desire to participate either by providing cars or as passengers, should communicate with him.

A brass band will accompany the party and a generous supply of banners and exhibition literature will be provided.

A committee was also appointed at last night's meeting to interview the Government to request that the Public Works Department leave in place for the Exhibition the decorations to be put up by the Government at the end of the month in honor of the visit of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. This committee is composed of Mr. Freiman, chairman; Mr. Fisher, Mr. W. H. Blair, M. W. F. Grant and Mr. B. G. Crabtree.

Another important committee will work with a committee of the Exhibition Association on arrangements for sleeping accommodations for out of town visitors during the fair and for the parking of cars. Mr. McElroy is chairman of this committee, the other members being Mr. S. L. Kyle, Mr. A. Alexander, and Mr W. Allen.

Information Bureau

In this connection the Retail Merchants' Association will establish information bureaus in various parts of the city for the convenience of visitors. The location of these will be announced before the opening of the Exhibition.

It was apparent at the meeting that the merchants of Ottawa are more enthusiastic concerning the Exhibition this year than ever before and inclined to do all in their power to assure its success. It is expected their efforts will be very effective in attracting attendance.

GETS AWAY WITH CASH

Partner in Lindsay's Boston Cafe is Much Wanted Man.

Chief of Police Short of Lindsay has been informed of the disappearance of one of the proprietors of the Boston Cafe, named Gadis, who left town suddenly one day last week, taking with him, it is alleged, some $600 or $700

Although the co-partner in the business left town about a week ago Chief Short was not notified of the fact until Saturday. The other partner explains this by the statement that he could not make himself believe Gadis would be guilty of a crime of this nature. He thought that perhaps he had gone away on a business trip and would return in a day or so.

The police received a hint that Gadis had left for Toronto, and if such is the case it will be an easy matter to locate him.

Prof. J. L. Morrison is returning from England, where he has spent four years, to take the chair of colonial history in Queen's University, Kingston.

BOY SCOUT NEWS

All Scouts of Mark Street Church and St. Luke's are requested to meet on Monday evening at 7.30 sharp, instead of Thursday. This meeting is very important. Come in full uniform.

All Scouts from Sam's Own No. 1 and 2 are requested to meet at the east side of Smith street bridge this evening at 7.30 sharp. All boys are asked to bring their bathing suits.

MARK ST. CHURCH NOTES

Notwithstanding the rain of last Sabbath Mark Street's congregation were good. The morning subject, "The Old Well by the Gate," occupied the deepest attention of the people and recalled many memories of younger days. The pastor in the evening took for his subject, "The Great Assize" or "The Judgment Seat of Christ." through this sermon the pastor showed how our deeds, good or bad, will still bear fruit after we are dead and we shall all have to give account for the fruits they have born throughout the world and receive our reward accordingly at the judgment seat of Christ.

A memoial service will be held in Mark Street Church next Sabbath morning at which Col. Johnson will speak and possibly Rev. Mr. Whattam.

Samuel Conn, a West Missouri farmer, who was to appear in court for non-support committed suicide by hanging.

PROPOSE TO REVISE RITES OF MARRIAGE

American Episcopalians May Strike Out Word "Obey" from Ceremony.

New York, Aug. 19.—Radical changes in the sanctioned practises of the Episcopal Church are provided for in a report made public here of the Church's Commission of the Revision and Enrichment of the Book of Common Prayer, to be submitted to the general convention of the church in October.

The report makes provision for faith-healing, anointing with holy oils, requiem, communions and prayers for the dead, reservation of the Sacrament and intention — the use of a dipped wafer instead of the common Communion Cup. There are a score of radical proposals and bitter controversy is looked for over them on the convention floor.

The Commission, constituted in 1913 is a joint body, acting with the authority of both the House of Bishops and House of Deputies of the Episcopal Church.

The recommendations for changes in Episcopal Church practises include:

Elimination from the marriage ceremony of the word "obey" for the bride, and "with all my worldly goods I thee endow," for the groom.

A prayer for the dead.

Change Whitsunday to the Day of Pentecost and all Sundays from then until Advent to read as Sundays after Pentecost.

Abbreviation of the ten commandments for the option of the clergy (their language not altered, but certain explanatory or opposite statements eliminated.

Alter the order for administration of the Lord's Supper in its designation, to read:

"The Divine Liturgy, being the order for the Lord's Supper, or Holy Eucharist, commonly called the Holy Communion."

The United Gas Companies St. Catharines, have raised their rates.

More than 5,000 attended the Aldborough Old Boys' Reunion held at St. Thomas.

D. I. Taylor, Wiarton, was nominated as join labor and U.F.O. candidate for North Grey.

JOHN M. ROSZEL GOES TO HIGHER POSITION

FORMER PETERBORO TEACHER IS PRINCIPAL OF ACTON CONTINUATION SCHOOL.

When Mr. John M. Roszel, one year ago, resigned his position as vice-principal of the King Edward School he was in receipt of a salary of $1,200 a year. He went from here to Tara where he secured an appointment that paid him $1450 a year and which place he filled up to the end of the last term. He was offered an increase by the School Board at Tara but declined the offer as he had other plans in view. Mr. Roszel took a special summer course in Toronto University and was successful at the examination, the result of which was announced yesterday. He has been appointed principal of the Continuation School at Acton, in Halton County, at an intial salary of $1800.

NEAR-RACE RIOT IN MONTREAL CITY

CAUSED BY THREE NEGRO BURGLARS ATTACK UPON HOTEL WATCHMAN.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Montreal, Aug. 19.— Montreal had a near race riot early this morning when, following an attack upon a watchman by three negro burglars at the Queen's Hotel, a large crowd of whites and blacks from the adjacent negro quarter engaged in a pitched battle on the street, in which revolver shots were freely fired.

One Shot in Head

Thomas White, one of the negro burglars was shot in the head while fleeing in an automobile, and is now under arrest in the hospital, while Patrick Casegrove, the watchman, suffered a fractured jaw in the melee.

Police reserves quelled the riot.

$2.15 PER BUSHEL IS NEW PRICE OF WHEAT

GOVERNMENT APPROVES RECOMMENDATION MADE BY BOARD OF CONTROL.

Ottawa, Aug. 19.—Sir George Foster, Acting Prime Minister, announces that the Wheat Board of Control has recommended an initial payment of $2.15 per bushel to farmers for wheat on the basis of No. 1 Northern, Fort William. The Government has approved of the price.

Peaches Jackson Finds Tom Moore An Ideal Victim For Her Pranks

Tom Moore with a child in his Goldwyn Pictures means as much to some thousands of people as Chauncey Olcott ever did when caroling to a crowd of youngsters in his Irish players. It's odd how these Emerald Islanders take to children and how children take to them. Odd, at least, if you don't happen to be in the secret of Tom Moore's popularity with kiddies and their real fondness for him. It is no accident, nor is it due to the resourcefulness or the scenario writer or the skill and sympathy of the director. It rests with Tom Moore himself.

There's a child in "One of the Finest," his newest Goldwyn Picture, to be shown at the Grand, today and Wednesday, and her name is "Peaches" Jackson. She has a real part too, and doesn't just happen to be on hand to serve as an excuse for Tom Moore to display his winning way with tots in general. "Peaches" assumes the role of Mary Jane Andrews, the child of a thief arrested by Larry Hayes (Tom Moore,) a traffic policeman. Later Larry and his mother give the child a home and bring her up in the right way. Mary Jane's mother coming to see them when her work permits.

With a child in his household Larry Hayes is the happiest policeman there ever was. There is no prank Mary Jane does not indulge in, no joke she does not play on her foster father, nor is there any pleasure dear to childish hearts that Larry Hayes does not give her. A birthday dinner is one, with a cake and candles and everything. Tom Moore is easily at his best in his scene with "Peaches" Jackson and the reason is not hard to find. He has a little daughter of his own, as most motion picture enthusiasts know. Her name is Alice and she's nearly as big as "Peaches" but not quite. She and her father are great pals and are separated only when he goes to the Goldwyn studios every morning. What the likeable star doesn't know about children isn't worth knowing. Most of all he is sympatthetic and loves them and knows how to adapt himself to every youngster he meets.

"All children are not alive," he says, "Each has a separate and marked individuality. My daughter is not at all like 'Peaches' Jackson, yet what I have learned about children from her enabled me to make friends with the little actress. And I think that anyone seeing 'One of the Finest' will realize that we are not acting but playing."

HIGH COST OF LIVING

Greater in England Now Than in Days of War

London, Aug. 19.—The official Labor Gazette states that the cost of living in England is now higher than at the tensest period of the war and unless the forthcoming steps against profiteering are more successful than anticipated the position is likely to become worse. The Gazette gives the increase as 117 per cent, as compared with 1914, but this represents only necessities, exclusive of many other everyday articles. Far greater efforts are now being made to stop profiteering in fruit, especially bananas, the shippers of bananas insisting that the retail price must not exceed 2½ pence each.

LINDSAY I. O. F. VS. MATHEWS-B. TO-DAY

Game to Decide who Stays in Running Called for 6 o'clock Sharp.

The game between Lind-say and Matthews-Blackwell called for 6 o'clock tonight is of great importance to local baseball fans. This is a sudden death game in the O. A. B. A. championship series and the loser is out of baseball for the season. The [illegible] are our last hopes and in tonight's game they must make good or Peterborough fans will see no more league matches this season. [illegible] McCabe and Crew will be out in full force to redeem their defeat of Saturday.

FOR AMATEURS UNDER AUSPICES OF MUSIC EXHIBITORS.

Two partial scholarships offered to the value of $300.00 to be divided equally between the two successful competitors, one male and one female, these scholarships to take the form of a year's vocal study with a teacher of the contestant's own choice.

This contest will commence Thursday, August 28th, and will terminate on Friday, September 5th, and will be held each afternoon from two to four. The following musicians have consented to act as judges:—Dr. A. S. Vogt, director of the Toronto Conservatory of Music; Herbert director of the Mendelssohn Choir; Dalton Baker, organist-choir master of Eaton Memorial Church; Dr. E. Broome, organist and choirmaster of Jaris Street Baptist Church; Sig. Morando, Dr. Albert Ham, Frank Welsman, teachers in Canadian Academy of Music; Healy Willan, organist and choir master of St. Paul's Cathedral; David Dick Slater, organist and choir master of Westminster Presbyterian Church; Sig. Carboni, teacher in the Hambourg Conservatory of Music; a number of whom will be present to adjudicate each afternoon during the contest.

1.—Each contestant is allowed to select his or her own song.

2.—Each contestant will bring an extra copy of song for judges.

3.—Each contestant will provide his or her own accompanist.

4.—Each contestant must be prepared to compete in the finals on the last day, using the same song, if he or her is chosen by the judges from a group in which he or she sings.

5.—Contestants must be twenty-five years of age or under and must be amateur singers.

6.—The verdict of the adjudicators will be final.

7.—All applications made for this contest will be addressed to Miss Mae Skilling, secretary (directress Perth Avenue school choir), 54 Wellington street west, Toronto.

WAS WORTH ITS WEIGHT IN GOLD

MRS. PROCTER VALUES TANLAC HIGHLY—GAINS TWENTY FIVE POUNDS

"I just think a medicine that will do as much for a person as Tanlac did for me is worth its weight in gold," said Mrs Sydney Procter, of 524 College Street, St. James, Winnipeg, Man., Canada while in the Liggett Drug Store in Winnipeg, recently.

"I was so badly run down and weak last winter I was scarcely able to get about," continued Mrs. Procter, "and this awful weakness although I tried all sorts of medicine in the hope of regaining my strength I wasn't able to do a bit of house work; in fact, it was just about all I could do to move from one chair to another and the condition my stomach was in had a great deal to do with keeping me weak. I didn't have any appetite at all and even the little food I did manage to force down kept me in misery, as it just seemed to lay in my stomach and ferment and cause me awful pain and the gas formed so badly at times my heart palpitated and I could hardly get my breath. Sometimes I had terribly dizzy spells and was so nervous I was easily upset by any sudden noise and I also suffered a lot with headaches and a severe pain right across my back. I hardly knew what a good night's sleep was like but would just lie awake for hours at a time, so restless and nervous that when I got up in the morning I was completely worn out and felt worse than if I had done a hard day's. That was the condition I was in following an attack of the "flu" and none of the medicines I took seemed to do me a particle of good.

"I started taking Tanlac because I had heard it highly recommended and it has certainly proved a boon to me. I have already gotten back my lost strength and can do all my housework with ease now. My appetite is fine and my stomach is in good condition. I can eat and enjoy anything I want and never suffer with indigestion, gas, or palpitation of the heart and don't have any of those awful dizzy spells. I have been entirely relieved of headaches and backaches and my nerves are in such splendid condition that when I go to bed now I fall asleep as soon as my head touches the pillow and I sleep as soundly as a child all night long and get up in the morning feeling bright and refreshed and ready for my house work. When I started taking Tanlac I was so thin I don't believe I weighed ninety pounds, but now I weigh something like 115 pounds, having gained about twenty five pounds in weight and I weigh more than I ever did before in my life. I am certainly glad to recommend and praise Tanlac to anyone."

THE CARE AND UPKEEP OF YOUR CAR

There are several things carbon will do to an engine. First, it may cause a knock, if it is very heavy. Second, it causes your engine to overheat, which means loss of power. Third; it causes premature explosion. That is your engine explodes at the wrong time, one cylinder works against the other, causing loss of power. Fourth, your valves, normally, rise only one-fourth inch above the surface, so if there is one-eighth inch of carbon, your exhaust escape is practically cut off. Sometimes all of the symptoms mentioned show up; at other times probably just loss of power and overheating.

There are several ways of cleaning out the carbon. One way is by scraping, another, by burning, and there are so called "carbon removers." The latter are not to be recommended at all, as they act like coal oil, softening the carbon to the consistency of honey, which gets down around the rings nad solidifies, causing the rings to "freeze" solid, scoring the cylinders. Scraping is good if done thoroughly but takes too much time. Now, as to carbon burning it makes no difference how bad the engine is carboned up, as soon as the oxygen hits it it immediately turns to carbon dioxide gas and passes away, leaving the interior as clean as when new.

JOS. E. SEAGRAM, EX-M.P., DEAD

Noted Distiller and Horseman Passes at Waterloo Home.

Waterloo, Aug. 19. The death occurred at 7.10 last evening of one of Waterloo's most prominent citizens, well-known throughout Canada, Joseph E. Seagram, ex-M.P., after an illness of several years.

He was in his seventy-ninth year, and was born near Galt. He came to Waterloo about fifty-five years ago, and was engaged in the retail business for several years before entering the distillery enterprise with which he has been identified for over half a century. From small beginnings the distillery plant has grown to be one of the largest on the continent.

A Great Horseman.

Mr. Seagram also operated a horse-breeding farm for many years, and was one of the pioneers of Canada in this enterprise, and his horses have participated in all prominent race meets on this continent. For thirteen years he has been President of the Ontario Jockey Club, succeeding the late William Hendry. He was also a member of the English Jockey Club for many years.

He represented North Waterloo in the Dominion Parliament for twelve years, being elected in 1896, and retiring in 1908. He was a member of the Waterloo Town Council for several years. Among his most generous contributions for philanthropic purposes was the site on which the Kitchener-Waterloo Hospital is located, consisting of 30 acres, which is considered to be one of the finest in the Province.

REPAIRS AT LOCAL Y.M.C.A. ARE NEARING COMPLETION

Interior of Building Has Been Rearranged and Re-decorated.

When the Y.M.C.A. opens its games and reading rooms next Monday the members will be astonished and pleased at the wonderful transformation brought about by the toil of Mr. Roper and assistants during the last few weeks.

The offices have been rearranged so as to be more compact and more suitable for giving information to strangers, as well as to render it easier for those in charge to keep those on both sides of the building under their watchful eye. The main office is where the old boy's secretary's office was, and has a large counter on three sides. The old office is to be strictly private, where the officials can take anyone for a confidential talk or to which they can go to get away from the noise of the game rooms for work.

The reading room has been changed to the south side of the building to insure peace and quietness for the readers. The old stationary seat in front of the mainentrance has been removed, making the corridor much roomier and more pleasant.

The boy's games room and reading room have been repapered and decorated in a suitable way. The senior game rooms have been repapered and decorated in very attractive colors. The locker rooms, shower bath and plunge room have been repainted in bright cheery colors. These rooms make probably the most apparent contrast over old conditions. The old shabby appearance has gone, and a bright, new, cleanly aspect prevails.

The gymnasium running track has received its much needed change at last. The floor has been elevated at the ends and covered with a cork linoleum. Local runners will be delighted to hear this, because the change will give an excellent chance for them to keep in practice during the winter months.

The floors of the lobby and parlor are being covered with cork linoleum, which will make these rooms much cosier and more pleasant. The exterior will be painted before renovation work is completed to make it look equally as acceptable as the interior.

The local board are looking for a competent and experienced boy's secretary to take the office made vacant by the decision of Mr. Harold Copp, to go to a Chicago college to study Y.M.C.A. work.

Great credit is due the staff of the Y.M.C.A. for the excellent work they have accomplished this summer in repairing the building, and all can rest assured that such a staff will give the members a program next season discounting all previous efforts.

Miss Yvonne de Haitre and Louise Gonzales, Ottawa, were drowned when their canoe upset in the Rideau river, near Portland.

Rev. Ronald McLeod delivered his farewell sermon to St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Ingersoll, as he has accepted a call to Toronto.

The employes of the Davies Shipbuilding Co., who have been on strike submitted to the company's terms, and returned to work.

SHARKEY DEFEATS WORLD CHAMPION

BANTAM PETE HERMAN IS OUTCLASSED IN BOUT AT MILWAUKEE.

The main go in last night's boxing carnival at Milwaukee between Pete Herman, bantamweight champion of the world, and Jack Sharkey, a New York bantamweight last night, was nothing but Sharkey's fight all the way through. The writer unhesitatingly declares that Pete Herman, champion of bantams, put up one of the worst fights of his ring career. Sharkey outpointed, outfought and outclassed him in every way.

In the first round Sharkey jumped to [illegible] and a left to the body and a right to the chin were the first things for Herman to catch. Sharkey fought very aggressively, swinging from all angles and sending jabs to Herman's face and drives to his chin. Most of the time the fighting was at close quarters.

When the gong rang for the second round, Herman got up and fought a little more cleverly than in the first, but Sharkey didn't give the champion a chance to do anything but catch the lefts and rights he was sending at him.

The third round caused considerable excitement among the crowd, who thought that Sharkey would good Peter to sleep, but Sharkey, who is considerably smaller than the New Orleans boy, would have to do some stiff hitting to accomplish this result. However, Sharkey administered much punishment to Herman in this round.

The fourth round also belonged to Sharkey who fought like a lion, with the crowd giving him tremendous applause for the punches he was slipping over the champion's face.

The fifth round both men fought about even, both stinging each other the same number of times. In the sixth round both seemed to be trying to kill time, Sharkey getting stung occasionally.

Sharkey came out fresher than ever in the seventh, leading the fight to Herman and landing left and right hooks to chin and body, and fighting like a lion.

The eighth round was Herman's, not by fighting, but by his cleverness. It seemed as though Sharkey couldn't get Herman in this round, he swinging and trying every way to hit the champion's chin. This round was an excellent exhibition of fistic science. The ninth and tenth rounds were Sharkey's by a long margin. He outfought Herman in these two rounds and also outboxed him.

The crowd so far as applause was concerned gave it all to Sharkey. At the end of the tenth round the fans started hissing Herman when he left the ring. Sharkey tipped the scales at 118, Herman at 121.

DECADENCE IN SPORT

The Lindsay Post Has the Following Timely Editorial on Sport:

Advocates of clean, legitimate athletics in all its branches take delight in referring to the halcyon days when our young men participated in sports for the pleasure and recreation they afforded. These were the days before athletics were prostituted by the unsportsmanlike, who refuses to participate in athletics unless there is a monetary consideration awaiting him as a result of his efforts. Every town, city and hamlet has its quota of cheap sports—cheap in the sense that they are not big and manly enough to indulge in athletics until they are satisfied there is "something in it" for them.

Lindsay is not immune from this type of sport—in fact, we have too many of them, and their number is being augmented simply because the heads of certain of our sporting organizations do not hesitate to pay the price and even import outsiders to whom are paid fancy sums for services rendered. It is rank hypocrisy to talk of encouraging clean athletics amongst the youth of our town so long as this practice prevails. The system is a vicious one and certain to alienate the support and sympathy of those who champion clean sport.

Take baseball, for instance. Rumor has it that Lindsay, along with one or two other towns identified in the C.O.B.A. face a deficit as a result of the season's operations. This announcement has been received with surprise locally. Those of our citizens who were asked to assist—and did assist—the club financially, are within their rights in asking how the money was expended. High prices were charged at the different games and the gate receipts were large. If [illegible] as to spoon-feed certain players, the situation does not give much encouragement to those who try to promote amateur sport, or ever hope that we are getting away from commercialized sport. It is more creditable, yea, more honorable, to be at the bottom in a league or district schedule with a team of simon-pure, home brew amateurs than win victory with men on the line-up who play for and receive a consideration. This does not refer to any club in particular, but to those organizations which have been guilty of encouraging professionalism.

TRENT VALLEY TROUBLE

Marmora, Aug. 19.—The Trent Valley Baseball League is not running as smoothly as could be wished. A protest was made by Deloro and Tweed, it appears, voted at the meeting called to take the matter up to have Marmora ruled out of the league for the season. The motion being lost Deloro decided to withdraw. A reason given was that the strife and ill-felling growing out of the games between Marmora and Deloro was affecting the efficiency of the men working in the plant of the Deloro S. and R. Co.

Tweed is now said to have signified its intention of withdrawing also.

OPPORTUNITY TO HEAR GUARDS DUE TO STRIKE

LABOR TROUBLES COMPELLED THEM TO LEAVE EARLIER THAN ARRANGED.

As a result of the strike at Liverpool, Peterborough music lovers will have an opportunity of listening to the British Grenadier Guards band on Friday, August 22. The Guards, who by consent of His Majesty King George, were engaged to play at the Canadian National Exhibition this year, arranged to sail from England about August 12. The labor difficulties intervened however, and they were compelled to leave much earlier and as a result will have to give the concert in Peterborough before being heard in Toronto. The Guards Band is the most famous of all British Military musical organizations and their services have been in great demand for the victory celebrations all over England, and the allied countries. They have a splendid war record, having spent over a solid year in France in the thickest of the fray, frequently leading the brigade of Guards into the battle area; at other times giving their best to lighten the burden of the men doing actual fighting. The Guards will be led by Dr. Williams, who was also the conductor when they made the last visit to Canada in 1910.

Efficient Paris.

Visitors to France are much struck just now with the remarkable resilience of the French people. Notwithstanding that the German armies were encamped for nearly four and a half years within 50 miles of Paris, the city is in a wonderful state of repair and efficiency, thus justifying its coat-of-arms and motto—a ship, with a Latin inscription underneath which reads: "It often rolls, but never sinks."

HAS MANY VALUES

Yuca One of the Most Prized of Earth's Productions.

Important Article of Diet Among South American Indians Should Find Ready Appreciation Here.

If the war had lasted much longer no doubt we would have been using real Indian flour by now—flour made from the yuca, or manioc or cassava plant—a tropical shrub which grows to a height of six feet. Herbert J. Spinden of the staff of the American Museum of Natural History, who has spent much time in Central and South America, recently described the yuca and its value as a food.

Manioc flour, he said, is made from the root of the manioc. It is probably the principal food of the Indians of the wet lowlands of South America, and is also much used in the West Indies. Two species of manioc are known, of which one contains hydrocyanic acid, a poisonous juice which has to be extracted by a special process, while the other is non-poisonous. This latter variety is, however, generally considered to furnish an inferior meal, and is used chiefly as a fresh vegetable.

In making manioc flour, the very juicy roots of the plant, which somewhat resemble sweet potatoes in shape, are grated according to Italian fashion on a board set with rock crystals. The grated meal must then be subjected to high pressure in order to drive off the poisonous juice. The Indians accomplish this by stuffing the meal into a basket tube, which is then stretched out so that its volume is decreased. Really tremendous pressure is exerted by this simple machine. The poisonous fluid is drained through the basket-work into pottery vessels. The meal is then taken out of the tube and used chiefly for making thin wafers, often of large size, which are slightly browned on either side by baking on griddles. These cakes will last for a long time and are considered excellent food.

But it is the general utility of this plant that would truly delight Mr. Hoover's heart. For besides the flour, the plant yields an excellent starch, a condiment, and tapioca—the last-named being the principal article of commerce derived from the yuca.

The starch is contained in the poisonous juice which is extracted from the meal. The starch is allowed to settle in the fluid, which is then poured off. In certain places, the manioc meal is not subjected to pressure, but is thoroughly stirred in water in order to extract the largest possible amount of starch. Manioc starch, which commands a higher price in the tropics than corn starch, is generally regarded as of the highest quality. After the extraction of the starch, the juice of the yuca is subjected to heat sufficient to destroy the poison in it. It is then used as a condiment (cassareep). This extract, which has a sharp, peppery quality, has considerable commercial value, and serves as a base for certain table sauces and for the soup known as Philadelphia pepper pot. Tapioca is obtained by heating the starch while it is moist.

Threw Out Seven

The quartermaster's department in Hoboken is anything but a place of joy. It is where the effects of many thousands of doughboys who "went West" are sent for distribution. Each pitiful package or bundle or box is checked up and sent to the nearest relative. Occasionally, however, the solemnity of the situation is relieved by the laughter of some returned hero who comes to the depot to announce that he is not dead and to claim his precious belongings. The other day a burly negro appeared, wearing three gold chevrons and a wound stripe, laughing heartily at the thought of him being reported dead. As if any old Hun could kill him! He told a tale of terrible fighting and suffering, all the time smiling cheerfully, and allowing as how he hoped his personal effects would be located. A small package, with his name on it, was at last found and opened for final checking. It contained a wad of money and the tools which had helped to enrich the dark man—a pair of dice. There was much laughter, hearty handshakes and back slapping, when the soldier was handed the money and the African golf outfit, which only threw seven.—New York Sun.

G.W.V. WILL HELP ENTERTAIN BAND

VETS WILL MEET BAND OF THE BRITISH GRENADIERS AT C.P.R. DEPOT.

The Great War Veterans' Association will co-operate with the city council and the Board of Trade in welcoming His Majesty's Band of the Grenadier Guards on Friday.

The band will meet them at the station and the visiting band will be given the freedom of the G.W.V.A rooms from 5 to 6 in the evening when the Vets will entertain them to the best of their means.

This was decided last night at the regular meeting of the G. W. V. A., when Comrade Fraser said the Grenadier Guards Band is one of great reputation in the Old Country, and although coming to Peterborough as a private enterprise, still he thought the Vets should acknowledge their visit in some way. Peterborough, he added, is the only place in Ontario outside of Toronto where this band will give a concert, and they are stopping over here on the way from Montreal to the Queen City as a break in the journey from Montreal.

Comrade Williams pointed out that the principle underlying action by the G.W.V.A. in this regard is that Peterborough Veterans should contribute to the welcome of British Veterans who had seen service in France.

One comrade contended that it was quite enough to have to pay 50c to hear the Grenadier Guards' band.

Comrade Fraser: "Fifty cents admission will not pay expenses. It is asked that the G.W.V.A. band meet the visiting band at the C.P.R. station at 3.21 p.m., Friday, and play them up street."

Comrade Cooper here wondered if it would not be a good idea to get a band from Hamilton to do this job. (Laughter).

Comrade Fraser, continuing, said the Board of Trade has arranged to take care of the Guards' band between three-thirty and five—drive them around the city, etc.—and it would be fitting were the G.W.V.A. to entertain them in the club rooms between 5 and 6, when they will go to the Empress Hotel for dinner.

This program, as outlined by Comrade Fraser, was adopted.

Then He Wilted.

There is a distinct frigidity to the atmosphere in the home of Isaac Wilt, retired farmer, in Valparaiso, whenever the subject of groceries and delivery boys is mentioned in the hearing of the master of the household. There's a reason: Mrs. Wilt telephoned a C. O. D. order. There was the customary delay in delivery and Mrs. Wilt stepped across the street to a neighbor's, leaving Mr. Wilt to receive and pay for the groceries.

The boy with an armful arrived and laid his load on the table. Mr. Wilt scanned the bill and paid it from a pocketbook in which reposed five $20 bills. He laid the purse on the table and proceeded to confirm the bill by an inspection of the goods, depositing the wrappings on that part of the table where the pocketbook lay. Everything being found satisfactory, he swept the wrappings and purse into a bundle and threw it into the stove.—Indianapolis News.

Pleasures of Brussels.

A friend who has been in Brussels for some time writes most tantalizing accounts of the delicious cakes and pastries which may be consumed with cups of chocolate and cream in the popular rendezvous there, says a writer in London Evening News. None of the custard or crumb-filled confections we have become accustomed to here, but cakes coated with icing accompanied by almond paste, etc. He tells me that many of the improvements made in the city by the Germans during their occupation are of the costly and permanent type, which illustrates the German view that they would keep Brussels. Drainage systems were altered, electric lighting was installed in parts which had hitherto been devoid of it, and dancing halls were provided.

Americans Rear New Town.

A number of views of the up-to-date village, built by the American Red Cross near Pisa, Italy, are shown in Popular Mechanics Magazine. The village has been built to provide homes for artisans and their families who fled from Venice during the war and since have not been in a position to return. The village will accommodate 2,000 persons.

Take No Chances.

"Not every one understands how inflammable and explosive chlorate of potash is. One man learned in a peculiar manner. He was carrying chlorate of potash tablets in a small bottle in his coat pocket; the cork presumably became loosened and fell out. Entering a street car, he knocked the ashes from his pipe, as he supposed, and put it in his pocket. In a few moments there were spurts of blue flame, and the tablets 'went off.' For a time the man was in danger of being mistaken for an enemy alien, carrying bombs. The mystery of the explosion was solved by finding small particles of glass wedged in the clothing around where the bottle had been. Other than the shock to his own nerves and those of the passengers, the only damage was to his clothes, which were burned badly."

PERMANENT FIRE STATION IN VIEW

Temporary Arrangements For East City at Once---Seeking Land For Building.

MAY BUILD REAR OLD MARKET

Will Mean, Next Year, Six More Firemen, Uniforms, Telephones and Other Equipment.

The City's Fire, Water and Light Committee have abandoned the idea of purchasing any existing building in East city for a permanent sub-fire station, and have fallen back on the project for very temporary premises for the time being.

Last evening after going thoughtfully into the situation it was decided to enquire of the City Trust Commissioners what available land they have in the rear of the old market building suitable for a permanent fire station. It is thought there may be sufficient municipal property on which to erect a suitable building. Enough vacant land is there, but the old wooden drill shed stood at this point and the committee is not certain whether it's land is now controlled by the City Trust or still retained by the Government. However, as the matter now stands the committee has concluded that this spot is the only available site suitable for fire station purposes, and they will enquire, through Ald. Morrison and Ald. Gainey, throughly into the question. They will also report on the desirability of and terms for renting the barn in the rear of the Collins' Estate Store, corner of Hunter St. and Driscoll Terrace, and other properties available, for temporary substation premises. This was the motion of the Mayor and Ald. Taylor.

Permanent Station

The committee will also recommend that Council build a permanent sub-station in East city and that plans for same be prepared as soon as a site is secured.

Stiff Prices

Mayor Duncan reported that the prices of properties under the committee's consideration for conversion into a sub-station had jumped up remarkably by the time the committee got around and asked prices. He did not see the need of definitely jumping at a permanent station until spring; temporary arangements for the present would answer. Permanent arrangements would include the employment of six additional men, their uniforms, telephones, alarms etc. A first aid outfit would do just now, but that must be forthcoming pretty soon.

Properties Reported

The Mayor, Ald. Morrison and Fire Chief Grange were a committee to secure options on available property for a substation and they reported as follows:

Properties investigated ranged in price from $4,000 to $8,000 and extensive alterations would be needed.

The following four properties were specified in particular:

Old market building—two stores here, however, would have to be converted into one, similar changes made in storey above and barn accommodation provided in the rear.

The building north side of Hunter St., owned by Roland Wilson and now occupied as a wollen factory. Price $4,000. This was out of the question.

Building north side Hunter street owned by McMurray and occupied by Spencer for barbering and pool room business. Owner asks $6,000 and Spencer whose lease expires in December, 1920, wants $1,500 to vacate. Committee could not consider this. They had been informed that this property was listed at $5,000.

The most desirable property of the quartette was that belonging to Conoroy, at the south east corner of Hunter and Burnham streets. There is a dwelling on the corner and large barn in the rear facing Burnham street. Three building lots are in this parcel, two of 22 feet frontage facing on Hunter street east of the dwelling and a lot facing on Burnham atret with a frontage of 55 feet. The whole must be taken in a sale for $8,000. This proposition was regarded as too costly for the city's needs.

MAKE PUNISHMENT FIT CRIME OF GERMAN BRUTES IN LILLE

French Military Court Now Sitting—Heinrich Double-Faced Monster—Boys Murdered, Girls Deported, Priest Stabbed is Evidence Now Pouring in—Murder is Charge

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Lille, France, Aug. 20.—Evidence adduced before the French Military court inquiring into crimes committed by Germans during their occupation, indicates that a charge of murder may be brought against Von Heinrich, former military governor of Lille.

Two-Faced Monster

It was testified that after sentence of death had been passed on two men, Von Heinrich authorized an appeal to the German Emperor. While this appeal was being made Von Heinrich ordered that the men be executed and they were shot 24 hours later.

Deported Girls

The military court also has heard evidence against Von Zoelne, former former Quartermaster-General at Charlevolle, who was responsible for the deportation of French girls in 1916.

Bayonetted Boys

Dr Von Heinverhny, resident of Fives, near Lille, told the court that Capt. Simmen Le Belafre was responsible for the murder of a doctor's nineteen year old son. The boy was bayoneted by a German soldier on the order of the captain.

Stabbed a Priest

Lieut. Boycel von Gymitz, of the Eighth Chasseurs of Treves, is charged with attempted murder. It is declared this officer, while drunk, twice stabbed a priest in whose house he was living.

NO NEWS YET FROM FRENCH AIRPLANE

HOPE NOT ABANDONED ALTHOUGH NEWSPAPERS ARE PESSIMISIC.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Aug. 20.—Nothing has been heard from the French airplane, 'Goliath;' which left Mogador, Morocco, for Dakar on Saturday morning, with seven passengers.

Hope has not been abandoned and searching parties are continuing their work inland among the jungles. This morning's newspapers adopt pessimistic tone in dealing with the probable fate of the airplane.

BALTIC WITH TROOPS

Expected to Dock at Halifax Eight O'clock Tomorrow Morning.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Halifax, Aug. 14.—A radiogram received this morning from the "Baltic," with returning Canadian soldiers states that she will dock at eight o'clock tomorrow morning.

NO HOME FOR THIS WOMAN

Mrs. Valois Left Without Support—Can Not Go to Jail.

A very peculiar and complex case appeared in Police Court this morning. It appears that there is no abode in the city for Mrs. Jos. Valois, aged 76. She is reported to be noisy and abusive, so that no one will undertake to look after her. A letter was received from the Protestant Home refusing to admit her. The law will not allow her to be sent to jail and as no judgment could be decided upon the case was left over for a consultation with the Protestant Home Board.

Prussian Cabinet Would Make Good Emperor's Financial Loss by His Forced Abdication.

HERR VON BRAUN OPPOSES BILL

170,000,000 Marks Compensation Named---No Decision Yet Reached by Cabinet.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Berlin, Aug. 20.—A bill has been submitted to the Prussian Cabinet, which provides that 170,000,000 marks shall be handed over to former Emperor William in total settlement for the civil list he lost through his forced abdication, according to a Weimar dispatch to the Die Fraiheit.

The Cabinet has not yet reached a decision, it is said, because the scheme is opposed by Herr Von Braun Minister of Agriculture.

PAIR CUFF-LINKS FOR CHAUFFEUR

PRINCE OF WALES APPRECIATES DRIVING OF G.W. PARLEE IN WILLYS-KNIGHT CAR.

The car in which the Prince of Wales was driven during his whole stay in St. John, N.B., and the first car in which he was driven in Canada, was a Willys-Knight, driven by George W. Parlee, manager of the Veteran Taxi Service Co.

On the return from the reception at Rothesay, His Royal Highness showed the keen interest that he has in automobiles, for he inquired regarding the make of the car, as well as other important matters in connection with it. Coming to a good clear stretch of road, he requested the returned-soldier chauffeur to put on a little speed, and in accordance with the request Mr. Parlee sent the car along at the rate of about fifty miles an hour. His Royal Highness enjoyed every second of that fast drive. As the Prince stepped from the car on the wharf, preparatory to re-embarking, he shook hands with Mr. Parlee and complimented him on his careful driving. He then presented him with a handsome pair of cuff links with the Prince of Wales' feathers inscribed on one link and a large "E" surmounted by a crown on the other.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE DROPS

British Sterling Currency Drops Almost Seven Cents.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Aug. 20.—British Exchange fell to a new low record today, the demand for Sterling dropping almost to $4.12. French and Italian exchange were similarly affected.

AUTOMOBILE HIT CHILD

Willie Flint, Aged 3, Struck by Car Injuries Not Serious.

What might have been a serious accident occurred Monday near the corner of Antrim and George streets. Children were playing in the street and one child, Willie Flint, aged 3, was unable to get out of the way to an auto driven by Mrs. H. J. Fredericks. The car struck the child just as it was coming to a stand still. Dr. McNulty reported the child had suffered no serious injuries.

WARNING TO TRESPASSERS

Anyone Found on C. P. R. Tracks to be Fined.

About twenty persons were caught trespassing on the C.P.R. tracks west of the station last night. The C.P.R. detective issues a final warning that anyone found trespassing on C. P. R. property, especially the tracks, will be fined heavily.

PRINCE FREDERICK LEOPOLD IS CHARGED WITH ILLICIT TRADING

Cousin of Former Emperor William Hoarded Food and Illegally Traded on Large Scale—Teltow Authorities Search Castle and Find Evidence of Offence.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Berlin, Aug. 20.—At a meeting of citizens of Teltow, a suburb of Berlin, there was discussion of the conduct of Prince Friederich Leopold, cousin of Former Emperor William, who unlike Count Hohenzollern, remined there instead of leaving the country.

Illicit Trading

It was alleged the Prince had engaged in illicit trading on a large scale and had boarded large quantities of food.

Local authorities recently searched Leopold's Castle, confiscating great supples of food, which were subsequently distributed among the hospitals. But when they attempted to bring action against the Prince, they were told from authoritative quarters that he was immue, being a member of the Royal Family. The castle has 140 rooms and 16 bathrooms.

Decision Not Reached

No decision as to what will be done with the Prince was reached at today's meeting.

AMERICAN CONGRESS VOTES FOR THE REPEAL OF DAYLIGHT SAVING ACT

House and Senate Overrule Veto of President Wilson—No More Fast Time For Canada.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Aug. 20.—The repeal of the Daylight savings Act was accomplished today. Senate voting to sustain the House in passing the repeal measure over President Wilson's veto. The Senate vote was 51 to [illegible].

As Canadian railways adopted the new time solely on account of the United States action along that line, it follows that daylight saving will not be effective in Canada next summer.

Vote in the House.

The House of Representatives yesterday, by a vote of 223 to 101, passed the repeal. The opposition to sustaining the President over the protests of farmers was along non-partisan lines, and represented largely members from the agricultural sections. The supporters for the repeal of the law obtained eight more than the two-thirds vote necessary to pass the bill over the President's objections, while 116 Republicans and 107 Democrats voted to override the President's veto.

RELIEF FOR CROP FAILURES IN WEST

This Matter To Come Before Commons When It Assembles On Sept. First

PRINCE WILL OPEN THE HOUSE

Supplementary Estimates Light, as is Live Actual Legislation of Any Kind

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Aug. 20.—While orders-in-Council to be continued in force after formal proclamation of peace is made promise to be fairly long, live actual legislation before the House, which will be opened Sept. 1st, by the Prince, may not be very heavy. The majority of the bills will simply make provision for a continuance in force of orders for a specified period. Supplementary estimates will be light.

Relief For Farmers.

The matter of relief for certain western districts badly hit by successive crop failures is now engaging the attention of Hon. Arthur Meighen and Hon. J. A. Calder, who are in the west and may call for legislative and financial assistance from Parliament.

HOW TO LIVE UP TO PEACE TERMS

Bill Providing Ways and Means For Meeting Obligations Before German National Assembly.

IS A FAR-REACHING MEASURE

Purposes Control of All Activities in Commercial, Financial and Industrial Operations.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Berlin, Aug. 20.—A bill providing ways and means for carrying out the peace terms was presented before the National Assembly at Weimar yesterday, with the approval of the Imperial Council.

This bill is a far-reaching measure, its purpose being to define limits and establish control of all sorts of activities in commerce, finance and industries bearing on a means of meeting the responsibilities laid upon Germany by conditions of peace.

$3.60 DAY FOR ENGINEERS, $2.64 FOR FIREMEN IN GREAT BRITAIN

Agreement Reached Between Sir Auckland Geddes and British Railwaymen Which Averts Serious Tie-Up of Country's Transportation Lines.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 20. An agreement has been reached between Sir Auckland Geddes, British Minister of Reconstruction, and the locomotive engineers and firemen in settling the men's demands, it was announced today. The insistence o fthe railroad men on August 14th that a long-pending wage dispute be settled immediately, threatened for a time to result in a strike that would have disorganized the entire railway system of the country.

Goodly Wage Increase

The Government offered locomotive engineers and motor men of the electric lines fifteen shillings, ($3.60) daily, and firemen eleven shillings ($2.64.) These wages being substituted for the present system of wages and war bonuses.

NOT ONLY BREAK BUT STEAL LIGHTS

Seems Impossible to Keep Lamps Burning on Smith Street and C. P. R. Bridges.

WATER WANTED ON TOWNSEND

Ald. Taylor Says Citizens Should Have Service Irrespective of Revenue to Utilities.

The city's Fire, Water and Light Committee evidently are facing a problem as to just how to keep lights burning on Smith street and the C. P. R. bridge. It was reported last evening that those on the former bridge had not been burning for some time and that it seems a favorite pastime with boys to make targets of the lamps for stone-throwing.

The suggestion that the Smith street bridge lamps be furnished with guards as at the C.P.R. bridge met with the reply from his Worship that not infrequently these gaurds are broken and the lamps stolen—and by grown-up boys at that.

The committee will take steps to prevent these depredations and the destruction of city property.

Monaghan Road.

A decision was reached to light Monaghan road with incandescents from the southern end of the C.G.E. property to Byersville. Six incandescent lamps are equal in expense to one arc light.

Why No Water?

Ald. Taylor wanted to know how it is there is no water laid on Lansdowne street. Residents had petitioned for it.

Mayor Duncan replied that the Utilities Commission find there would not be enough property served to bring in sufficient revenue for the financial outlay, and they want the city to make good the deficit by installing a hydrant.

Ald. Taylor—"Those residents on the city side of the street are entitled to water in any event."

This was admitted, and arrangements will probably be made for installing a water service and hydrant.

An incandescent light will be placed at each corner on Haggard street where it crosses the track leading to Little Lake.

Light for G.W.V.A.

The G. W. V. A. asked for a light on the street in front of their club rooms.

On motion of Ald. Taylor and Garside, this matter was left with Chairman Ald. Morrison to take up with the Utilities Commission.

Who Were Present.

There wree present Chairman Alderman Morrison and Aldermen Taylor, Hamilton, Garside and Gainey, and Mayor Duncan.

RUMANIAN OFFENSIVE

Attack East of Dniester River to Join Forces With Gen. Denikine.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Aug. 20.—Rumanian military authorities are preparing for an offensive east of Dniester River, for the purpose of joining forces with Gen. Denikine's army in southern Russia, according to the "Echo De Paris."

AUTO TRUCK AND BICYCLE COLLIDE ON PARK STREET

Park Street Church Stopped Bicycle on Flight After Collision.

Albert Hutchinson was knocked off his bicycle this morning by the truck driven by Peter De Carlonis on Parks street, near the Park Street Baptist Church. The truck hit the bicycle from behind, driving it ahead of it for 15 or 20 feet. The bicycle was hurled over the church lawn finally coming to a sudden stop against the building's wall. Mr. De Carlonis stated he was willing to pay all damages. Mr. Hutchinson was not injured seriously.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 20, 1919

THE FAIRNESS OF THE VETERANS.

THE MEMBERS of the G. W. V. A. in their campaign against the holding of two positions by one man, especially when one of the positions is a public office, the services being paid for by the people at large, are eminently fair in their methods. They are not making war on any particular class or individual. They are inspired by a sense of justice, not by any personal motives. One of their own members is in the same situation with regard to dual occupations as is Sergt. Blade of the police force, and the ex-veteran has to run the gauntlet of the criticism of his comrades.

For the good of any branch of the public service, for the benefit of the individual interested, and for the general welfare, it is desirable that there shall be singleness of effort on the part of all workers. Mr. G. N. Gordon, the legal champion of the system upon which the veterans are now waging war, hyperbolically speaks of an attempt "to inflame the public" against a member of the police force who stands to him in the double relation of chauffeur and client. Even the most extreme element in the community is not likely to become "inflamed" or to work up any superheated indignation against a man engaged in washing automobiles or even acting as chauffeur for more distinguished members of society. It is not a question of inflamability. It is simply a practical issue, a plain matter-of-fact affair that has to do with the present day employment problem and which is governed by well-defined printed regulations.

MR. DEWART'S LATEST CHARGES.

"I CHARGE the Government with deliberately putting on the statute books a law enabling them to place on the voters' list by means of partisan officials those whom they want on the lists and leaving off those whom they do not happen to want."

This from Mr. Hartley Dewart, leader of the Ontario Opposition, at a meeting of the faithful in Toronto the other night. It is apparent that Mr. Dewart hopes to win in the coming campaign by the indiscriminate promulgation of unfounded charges, a line of strategy in which he has already distinguished himself.

Mr. Dewart, skilled lawyer as he is, knows that it is impossible to frame an enactment that is perfect or to draw up any kind of a law that cannot be evaded or openly violated. The statute against the taking of human life still stands, although people not infrequently commit murder. The law under which the recent enumeration was taken was adopted almost unanimously by the Legislature. If there were any objections to it, these objections should have been voiced at the time of its passing instead of being reserved for campaign thunder by stump orators. Mr. Dewart never heard of a law governing the preparation of a voters' list that could prevent the omission of names of qualified electors. The virtue of any such enactment should be judged by the facility which it affords for the correction of wilful manipulation or accidental oversight.

Take the operation of the law in West Peterborough, for example. No fair person can charge that the work was entrusted to partisans. Here, at least, the very reverse appears to have been the case. No enumerator could hope, even if so disposed, to deprive a qualified voter of the franchise. The machinery of the law is as complete as human ingenuity could make it. Its scope is ample.

The list as prepared by the enumerators is to be finally passed upon by a non-partisan board with the county judge as chairman. Every member of that board is perfectly familiar with the local situation. If there is no politics in evidence the spirit of justice is preeminent in such a body. If a qualified voter's name is omitted from the list, then he, or she, is alone to blame. Every voter should prize the franchise sufficiently to see to it that the right to exercise it is assured him. Even under a system that provides that each elector shall call personally at a certain place to register his or her name, there are invariably omissions. It is hard for any government to provide against a lack of interest on the part of the voters themselves.

Mr. Dewart's latest charge, or insinuation—for it is little else—is not likely to be taken seriously. At the last session of the Legislation his master play was the accusation that graft existed among the officials charged with the enforcement of the Ontario Temperance Act. A commissioner, such as he demanded, was appointed to investigate, the official chosen for that duty being a chief justice of the Ontario courts. The result was a complete vindication of the License Board officials and a severe judicial criticism of Mr. Dewart in making unwarranted charges.

In his keynote speech at the West Kent convention last Saturday Mr. Dewart betrayed his utter lack of a case against the Hearst Government. He consumed several columns of newspaper space in making general statements. Not one specific charge was brought against the Administration. Even his favorite topic, the nickel question, was not paraded. Going far afield, he dragged Federal issues into his address to supplement the provincial material at his command.

A SANE CALL TO LABOR.

UNDER THE HEADING, "Labor's Obligation in the Present Crisis," the Canadian Labor Press for August reviews the present industrial situation and makes a strong plea for the purchase of made-in-Canada products. It urges the necessity for increased production and for efficient workmanship and contends that Labor must repudiate the leadership of extreme elements.

"The reception of the report of the Industrial Relations Commission," the Labor Press says, "seems to prove that the sentiment of the country is with Labor in its demands for an eight-hour day, collective bargaining, and the right to organize in trade unions. These conditions are admitted in the majority report of the Mathers Commission, but if there are to be legitimate concessions to Labor, both industry and the general public have a right to demand sound economic teaching from Labor leaders. The crying need of Canada today is increased production. Only by the creation of new wealth can the Dominion recover from the strain of five years of war and correct the present economic situation. The democracy which preaches the rights of the individual should also insist upon individual responsibility to the community. It is right that Labor should have a reasonable working day at more than a living wage, that it should have assurance against unemployment, time for recreation, and decent housing conditions. But in return, Labor is under obligation to the State to render efficient service, to give its best workmanship, to produce to the maximum, and to employ constitutional methods in the conduct of its particular activities.

"Labor must be divorced from I. W. W. and Bolshevist influences. The leadership of thoughtful workers must be restored. The Trades and Labor Congress to be held in September will be a critical event. In Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Calgary, Red influences attempt to dominate the local councils. If such influences control the Trades and Labor Congress, the Government's efforts to create a better understanding and more thorough co-operation between employers and employes through the medium of the Industrial Conference, which is promised within the next few weeks, can hardly succeed. Its success depends upon the reasonable attitude of Canadian workers, and if their leaders refuse to participate in such a conference, as local councils refused to appear before the Royal Commission on Industrial Relations, harmony cannot be restored in the industrial field, and Labor will merit the condemnation of the general public."

Congress, it is said, will repeal the Act providing for reciprocity with Canada. A Canadian journal which opposed reciprocity says that this is an unfriendly act. But if reciprocity was an American plot to annex Canada, surely the repeal of the reciprocity legislation is a friendly act.

How To Build Up Your Home Town

(By E. M. Trowern, Secretary, Dominion Board, the Retail Merchants' Association.)

The place where most people congregate in a village is the country store. It is usually a Post Office, the place where the farmers exchange their eggs and butter, the committee room for the politician, the headquarters for countryside gossip, a meeting place for friends, and the place where the merchant is supposed to keep everything from a needle to an anchor. It is from these centres that the villages develop into towns, and the towns into cities. The more the merchant prospers the better the village prospers, and so it is with towns and cities.

Goods in the retail stores in New York are of little value to the people of Canada. They want to be able to [illegible] into the shops in the place in which they live and examine the goods, price them, order them, and either take them home or have them delivered. They want to know also that the goods they select personally are the goods they get, and this is where the local merchant will always have the advantage over the mail order house system, which means that when you buy goods you must rely almost entirely upon the selection by other people, and not upon your own judgment. Perhaps the best illustration that can be given of the advantages of buying in the home town will be understood by those who are familiar with the question of selling boots and shoes at retail, and the correct fitting of the same.

Not long ago, the writer's attention was called to a rather singular circumstances. Visiting in a small town in the cool of the evening, when the ladies of the town were visiting the Post Office for the evening mail, a merchant, well posted in the boot and shoe business, called attention to the fact and ten ladies out of twelve who passed were wearing mail order shoes. He discerned them by the way in which they fitted the feet. Some were too high in the heel, others too low; some too broad and others too narrow. They were not only uncomfortable but they interfered with the poise and carriage of the wearer. Had these shoes been purchased in the home town, these faults could have been avoided much to the comfort and well-being of the wearer, and at perhaps less cost in the end. This illustration might also apply to a large number of other articles.

The retail merchants themselves are not entirely blameless for this condition of affairs. Every merchant in business knows that the best way to shop is, the legitimate way of shopping, and that is for the purchaser to see the goods, examine the quality, ascertain the price, and find out if they suit before the money is paid. The reason why these facts are not pointed out more prominently by the retail merchant is that they know so well that ~~the~~ above is the proper plan of buying that they believe the public generally should have the same information, whereas perhaps there is more ignorance existing among the general public with regard to the quality of merchandise than there is in connection with almost any other subject. Every merchant will bear testimony to the fact that there are many customers who have an idea that they know all about the quality of goods, whereas as a matter of fact they know very little, and it would pay them far better to explain their requirements to an honest merchant who knows his business, and secure his assistance in selecting the goods, and in this way they would secure better value, as well as the styles that would best suit them.

The citizens of every city, town or village should take a pride in their retail stores in their community. The better the selection the citizens have, and the greater the number of people who purchase in the home town the better the opportunity the merchants have for increasing their stocks and carrying the latest. All citizens who send their money out of the town are injuring the business of the town to that extent, and they are doing an injury to those citizens who patronize the local retail merchants.

Retail merchants select goods for the convenience of their customers. They study their requirements; they understand the extent of their purse, and the goods are always on hand, ready to be delivered at a moment's notice. Merchandise in Europe is of very little use to the citizens of any city, town or village in Canada. The goods must be here, ready and waiting, and our system of distribution is so arranged that if trade is developed along natural lines, and those who receive their money from the town patronize the town, they are not only making it convenient for themselves but also for every other resident in that town. If the retail stores were taken out of the cities, towns and villages of Canada, it would be equivalent to destroying the commercial life of Canada.

Although not generally mentioned, when the development of a city is questioned, the first thing that strikes a stranger when he enters any city or town is the character of the shops in that city or town. If they are poorly kept and poorly stocked with unpainted fronts, the town can be considered to be on the decline. If the store fronts are well painted, and the stocks well kept and the retail merchants alert to their business, the town is always prosperous, and it becomes an attractive place for the farmers and mechanics to congregate. It generally develops into a community, city, town or village; the more valuable the farm becomes, and the more valuable that farms become, the better will be the business done in the city, town or village. In this way the whole community thrives.

Buying in the home town, therefore, means very much more than appears on the surface. It benefits both the buyer and the merchant. It helps to improve the streets, to reduce taxation, to add to the enjoyment of life, to bring the goods that are made at a distance to a common centre where they are needed. It circulates money, giving all an equal chance to secure some of it, and in this way buying in the home town helps the merchants, lowers the price of goods to the consumer, aids the financial institutions, gives more money in taxes for better [illegible] better police and fire protection, helps the newspapers, enables the municipality to pay better wages to school teachers, assists in the erection of better churches and public institutions, and, finally, establishes better residential districts, and in this way prosperous cities and towns are built up. The object, therefore, of all loyal citizens should be to buy the things they require in the place in which they live.

WIT AND WISDOM

His Fate.

The young man brought some verses to his father.

"Father, I have written poems."

"What! Let me see them instantly."

The father read them over carefully, the tears slowly welling to his eyes as he did so. Finishing the last one, he threw down the manuscript, folded the boy to his breast and sobbed:

"Oh, my poor, poor son!"

"Are they so bad as that, father?"

"Bad! They are excellent. They are real poetry. My boy, my boy, you will starve to death!"

When Mike Was Pat.

Pat and Mike were twins and in great financial difficulty. The problem of paying a year's rent was under discussion and Pat trudged over to the landlord for a month's grace. The landlord bellowed that he would give him that time to guess this riddle. If they got the correct answer they could have the house. The riddle was: How many pounds does the moon weigh? How many stars are there in the sky? What was he thinking of? Sad of heart Pat returned home to tell his twin brother Mike and Mike said "leave it to me."

When the appointed day came Mike went on over to the landlord with these answers "The moon is 1,000,000,000, etc., and if you don't believe that go and weigh it. There are 1,000,000,000, etc., stars in the skies and if you don't believe that go and count them. And you are thinking that I'm Pat and I'm Mike. They won.

PRESENT CHEQUE TO MISS LILA PARSONS

OMEMEE CHURCH BOARD APPRECIATE FAITHFUL SERVICES OF THE ORGANIST.

(Special to The Review.)

Omemee, Aug. 20.—Following the usual Friday night choir practise at the Methodist Church last week, the pastor, Mr. Stillman, who was present, made a little address, in which he thanked the choir for their help in the service of song, and then called on members of the Official Board to speak. To the great surprise of the choir the following address was read by Mr. W. H. Kennedy, recording steward:

Omemee, Aug. 15, 1919.

Miss Lila Parsons,—

At the August meeting of the Quarterly Official Board of the Methodist Church, it was unanimously resolved that a letter of appreciation be tendered to you for your faithful and efficient services rendered during many years as a member of the choir.

The Board, on behalf of the congregation, ask you to accept this cheque as a slight token of our esteem and confidence.

It was duly moved, seconded and resolved that you be asked to accept the leadership of the choir, a vacancy caused by the death of the late Mr. Mulligan.

Wishing you and the members of the choir God's richest blessing in conducting the service of song in the house of God.

Signed on behalf of the Board—R. F. Stillman, pastor; W. H. Kennedy, recording steward.

Miss Parsons, although completely taken by surprise, thanked the members of the Board for their gift and also for the honor they sought to bestow upon her at the same time declaring her incompetency to act as leader, but promising to continue as a member and help in any way possible until an efficient leader could be found.

THAT CHANGE IN WOMAN'S LIFE

Mrs. Godden Tells How It May be Passed in Safety and Comfort.

Fremont, O.—"I was passing through the critical period of life, being forty-six years of age and had all the symptoms incident to that change—heat flashes, nervousness, and was in a general run down condition, so it was hard for me to do my work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me as the best remedy for my troubles, which it surely proved to be. I feel better and stronger in every way since taking it, and the annoying symptoms have disappeared."—Mrs. M. GODDEN, 925 Napoleon St., Fremont, Ohio.

Such annoying symptoms as heat flashes, nervousness, backache, headache, irritability and "the blues," may be speedily overcome and the system restored to normal conditions by this famous root and herb remedy Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If any complications present themselves write the Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for suggestions how to overcome them. The result of forty years experience is at your service and your letter held in strict confidence.

THE MERCHANTS' COLUMN

Edited by
MANSFIELD F. HOUSE
(Copyright.)

(In this column, which appears every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, will appear news and short articles of special interest to merchants, their salespeople and business men and women in general. All phases of store management—buying, accounting, advertising and retail salesmanship—will be dealt with, not theoretically, but by descriptions of methods actually in use by successful merchants.)

GROCERY SLOGAN SOLD HATS AND SHOES AS WELL

William C. Harned has demonstrated that an advertising slogan which refers only to "eats" can be made to sell hats, shoes, clothing, furniture, carpets, glass and chinaware and, in short the entire line of a department store.

With the words "the best of everything to eat" he rejuvenated the entire business of the Zollinger-Harned Company, of Allentown, Pa.

This was the situation when Harned took charge:

The store had a spacious frontage on Allentown's main thoroughfare. In an "L," fronting on an intersecting street, was the grocery department. The rest of the departments were in the main section of the building.

Business was poor in the big end of the building on the main street. It was good in the grocery department, with its most modest frontage on a smaller though a busy street.

Harned analyzed the reasons in this manner:

There were two theatres right near the grocery entrance. It caught the after-theatre crowds of women in the afternoon. That, together with the fact that its goods were right, explained why it had some of the best patronage in the city—a patronage with money to spend.

The main front, however, was comparatively deserted because, for reasons which reached into past circumstances and conditions, people weren't interested in the general departments of the store. The front failed to pull because the people weren't there because the front did not attract them.

One Slogan Helped Entire Store.

So Harned decided that if he was going to fill the store with customers he would have to take them where he could get them, which was in the grocery department, and drag them into the store through the back door, so to speak.

So this was what he did:

He put extra pressure on a policy of handling nothing but the very best to be had in the grocery department, and he concentrated every bit of advertising power he could into a single slogan—"The best of everything to eat."

Every paper bag, every piece of wrapping paper, every newspaper advertisement, every envelope, letter and bill head of the store bore that slogan most prominently, almost defiantly. A great sign was erected over the entrance, too, to catch the eyes of the matinee crowds.

These were the results:

At first there was no other effect noticeable than a heavy spurt in the business of the grocery department. It was obvious, of course, that such would be the result of heavy advertising when the goods, the service and the prices were right.

But that wasn't all. Gradually a good-will began to develop. "If the groceries this store sells are so exceptionally good, why shouldn't its other merchandise?" people began to ask themselves. Then there grew a curiosity, gradually, among the patrons of the grocery department to at least have a look at the rest of the store.

The way was smoothed for them. As they approached the rear of the grocery department they were on the threshold of the china and glassware section, and particular care had been taken to make these sections and their offerings attractive.

"It worked like a charm," says Harned, "and now our department store overshadows anything we ever dreamed of in volume of business."

QUICK-SELLERS HELP CASHIERS BOOST SALES

Stores in many lines have found that the cashier can be a successful sales person, thus switching from pure expense to a productive class.

In the stores of a chain of drug stores the cash registers are surrounded by a wall of merchandise such as can be picked up without wrapping. As this is merchandise of an afterthought nature the patrons, who of necessity must step before the girl at the cash register find it easy to pick up a package and leave some of their change. As the purchase per visit of the average drug store customer is small this help is needed.

In another store the fountain attendant throws the change down on the slab beside a display of small confections. This also helps. The patrons are in a hurry, and, inorder to save time, walk down to a spot in front of the register. They cannot miss seeing the confectionery. Another has a plate of loose sticks of chewing gum beside its cash register—and this goes out in the place of penny change many times.

The cashier's booth of a hardware store has a shelving all around. On this are displayed the small packages and household articles such as every household needs every week in the year. In summer fly-swatters are there, with polishing oils, whetstones, lubricating oil, ant paste, cleaning powders, picture hooks—anything small and goods shown in display cartoons or on cards. Every customer must go to the cage; and in this way they face the merchandise which reminds them of a need. This gives the store a maximum of traffic for these goods.

Once a month, usually on paydays the patrons of installment furniture houses visit the cashiers of these stores. One store that sells phonographs has at either side of the cashier's counter a card listing the new records. The patrons have money in hand. Many of them have talking machines; so while waiting for their receipts to be made out they naturally look over the lists. In this way they sell themselves while the cashier is busy.

When the Robidoux Pharmacy, St. Joseph, Mo., puts on its Saturday Candy Special the candy is stacked up alongside of the cashier's register. Those who come in to buy because of having seen the Friday evening advertisement go right to get it—and others who come to the register to pay for other purchases have read the advertisement, and when the stack of candy reminds them of the advertisement, they buy candy many times when they never would have thought of it otherwise.

IT PAYS TO SEND BILLS 3 DAYS APART

The office manager for Robert L. Loud, a Buffalo music dealer, sends bills in a series to persons who buy on the installment plan. One bill is sent three days before a payment is due, as a reminder; a second on the day it is due, if it has not been paid and if necessary, a third is sent three days later. In only rare cases is more positive action necessary.

This system is followed on the theory that many persons who buy on the installment plan are not careful as to date; they wonder if the payment is due on a Thursday or a Friday or the next Monday. When they decide what day the payment is due they wonder if next week will do as well. This at least is the office manager's explanation as to why he does what he does, and he says most of the store's customers are glad of the reminder.

FLOWERS HELPED TO SELL THEIR FRAGRANCE

A Cincinnati drug store recently held a very successful perfume sale and in a vase by the side of the various perfumes the flower that the perfume was made from was placed. For instance, beside the violet perfumes they had a vase of fresh violets and would invite comparisons in the odors, thus stressing the idea that the perfume even surpassed the original.

Beside being a selling point, it was a colorful dressing of the counters and attracted great attention.

France Building Long Canal.

Notwithstanding the war, the largest tunnel in the world is well under course of construction in France, its object being to give Marseilles connection with Paris and the interior of the country in general by rail and water. The canal will provide ample waterway for barkes. The entire project involves the building of a new harbor and the cutting of a ship canal, actually tunneled through solid rock for five long miles, joining the old harbor and the Mediterranean to the River Rhone. The Rhone's upper stretches are placid, and already are used extensively for large navigation, but near Marseilles the stream is far too turbulent for commerce. A range of hills had prevented the construction of a canal in days gone by. Now, with France energized by the war and with the necessity for the canal emphasized thereby, the tunnel is being cut and the canal will soon be opened. The work was begun in 1911-12, and has been continued through the war. By this canal and links already available, barges can be sent from the Mediterranean to the English channel.

What Bradstreets Says :---

"Bradstreets" has been looking into the interesting subject of the relation existing between business failures and the advertising world. It has gathered statistics indicating the proportion of failures among business men who advertise, and it has discovered the highly significant fact that 84 per cent of all failures are among "non-advertisers."

If any proof were needed of the truth of the old axiom that "it pays to advertise," here it is upon the very best authority. It is needless to draw a moral from the tale, because the moral is self-evident. It is worthy of remark, however, that "Bradstreets" speaks with an authority with no selfish motive, not being interested itself in the advertising business. It neither advertises itself in the ordinary sense nor does it deal in advertising in a general sense. It is simply an expert on finance and trade, interested only in discovering the truth relative to the value of advertising.

With only 16 ~~per cent.~~ of our business failures among advertisers and 84 per cent. among those who do not advertise, the average Peterborough business man should not be long in determining his policy.

DOGS HELPED TO WIN WAR

Part Played by Pets of the American Soldiers Should by No Means Be Overlooked.

A bewildering mass of printed matter is accumulating which bears upon the relative and intrinsic usefulness of various agencies which contributed to the welfare and comfort of the American army in France. There is also much discussion of the part which French women and children played in mitigating the loneliness and hardships of service far from home. But little has been said of the service rendered by French dogs.

Some authorities claim that on the average there was a pet dog to every company of soldiers averaging 250 men, at the outset. This would make 4,000 dogs for 1,000,000 men, or 8,000 dogs for the entire American army in France when the armistice was signed.

It is quite possible that these thousands of pets contributed more to the winning of the war than all of the dogs used for scouting and watching, and even those that served in the Red Cross to find wounded and exhausted soldiers and carry first-aid comfort to them where they lay, in obscure places not easily discovered by human sense. For the pets helped mightily in keeping up the morale of men tired and battered by the hard work of the campaign. They were "on the job" all the time. They were a moral tonic and they taught, as fine dogs always do, the kind of devotion and loyalty which is the very soul of a good army.

If 8,000 dogs, or only 5,000, were kept as pets by American soldiers in France it is certain that they provided millions of hours of pleasure for weary men and soothed a multitude of homesick hearts. They typified the affection which does not grow cold, the faith which never wavers, and such steadfastness was good for fighting men to think about, in an alien land, close to battle and the chance of death.

Get New Legs.

A young soldier walked with military stride into the office of the disability reviewing board at Camp Dix yesterday and presented himself to the officer at the desk. "What's your trouble?" asked the lieutenant as the soldier handed over his certificate of disability rating by the camp examining board. "No legs, sir," answered the soldier. "What's that?" asked the officer, who had seen the man walk into the room, his soldierly bearing attracting the admiration of the officer's eye. "Both legs gone, but they've fixed me up almost as good as new with artificial ones," answered the soldier, who is Sergt. Samuel F. Hall of near Somerville, Mass., and the first soldier minus both legs who had been brought up to Camp Dix for discharge. He demonstrated he had learned to walk with the use of his new legs with perfect ease and was therefore given an immediate discharge. Except for the loss of his legs, which were below the knee, Hall was in perfect physical condition. Under the terms of his war risk insurance Hall's injury constitutes a total disability and he will draw $100 a month for the rest of his life.—New York Sun.

Cabling Fifty Years Ago.

The enormous mass of matter which is being cabled from Paris may recall to some old newspaper men the difficulties with which the work was accomplished fifty years ago. For one thing the rate was then a sovereign—$5—a word, and the gentleman presiding over the London end of the Anglo-American Telegraph company was an autocrat who did not much believe in special facilities for the press, and among other things exacted that the word "London"—representing a sovereign—should be added to the signature in each case. "You approached his office," it was written, "as you would approach a shrine, a temple of some far-off deity," and when press messages were allowed to go at a reduced rate he imposed a code under which he dealt with them as he chose, which meant that there was no knowing how or when they would be dispatched.

Ex-King Manuel Well Housed.

Fulwell park, where ex-King Manuel of Portugal has lived since he took his bride to England five years ago, is a historic mansion built mainly in the Georgian style. A part of it dates back to James II, but it has been considerably enlarged from time to time, and now contains a magnificent suite of six entertaining rooms. Besides the nine-hole golf course there are several tennis courts in the grounds, for this is a game at which the ex-king excels. There is good fishing in the River Crane, on which also boating is possible. Fulwell park has been the home of many famous people, and Twickenham itself abounds in historic memories. In 1800 Orleans house was the residence of Louis Philippe, then duke of Orleans.

Clocks for France.

A jewelry house in Bordeaux, France, has closed a deal with a large manufacturing firm in New England for an order of alarm clocks, the total purchase amounting to one-quarter million francs or $48,250 at normal exchange. There is said to be a dearth of alarm clocks in France and in French colonial possessions. This is due to the inability of French dealers to obtain importations from their former sources of supply in enemy countries. The Bordeaux firm said it placed this initial order as a means of ascertaining the quality of United States clocks and their suitability as to price and wear for the French market.

THEIR LAST DANCE TOGETHER

Mrs. Castle Tells a Pretty Story of Her Final Performance With Her Husband.

Irene Castle's memories of her late husband, Capt. Vernon Castle, conclude in Everybody's with the following account of their last public appearance:

"Our last dance together was while he was instructing up at Camp Mohawk, Canada. He had been given permission to come to New York especially to dance with me at a British recruiting benefit which was held at the New York hippodrome. Because of the nature of the occasion, he had been given permission to dance in uniform. It had been long since we had danced our old dances together, and it had been necessary the day before to work quite hard in brushing up. I had expected that Vernon would have forgotten altogether a lot of the steps or that he would be a little stiff from lack of practice, but on the night of the benefit he danced divinely. At the close of the performance many beautiful flowers were handed to us over the footlights. We bowed and bowed again our thanks. In the wings Vernon nervously kissed my hand and there were tears in his eyes. I wonder if he guessed we had danced our last dance, and the last ring of applause for us was still.

"The world had been very good to us. We had lived well and lavishly because of that same applause. Together we tasted success, fame and money. Thank God that at no time during that night did I dream it was the end."

SIMILAR TO SHELL SHOCK

Malady Affecting Those Unfortunate Enough to Be on Ships That Were Torpedoed.

Cases have lately come to the attention of the military surgeons where the fright and fear due to ships being torpedoed have given rise to symptoms suggestive of shell shock. Doctor Clunet, in a communication to the Neurological society of Paris, has described the mental effect observed when on board a ship which was torpedoed.

After the first stupefaction following the attack it was observed that several passengers discharged guns into the air or into the sea. In other words, the pent-up nervous energy found release in letting loose the immense energy concentrated in explosives. Similarly, it was well known at the front that a long day of waiting in the trenches was productive of more cases of shell shock than a day of active engagement with the enemy. Next there were a few cases of suicide among the passengers. These passengers were on the whole calm enough, even on the life rafts. It was only when they were on the rescuing ship that psychoneurote phenomena began to develop, including mutism, spasmodic weeping, laughter, tremors, spasmodic movements of the limbs, etc.

The Versatile Carrot.

There is nothing like a war to change the status of things. Look, for example, at the humble carrot. Before the war it was one of the lowliest of all the vegetables, seldom used except for stews or New England boiled dinners, but it certainly has been doing its bit in the culinary line recently. It has become a past master in the art of camouflage. Grated raw, it is said to be a very good substitute for eggs in certain things. Little slices dried become raisins and currants, and other bits, treated a little differently, masquerade as candied orange and lemon peel. Orange marmalade and certain kinds of jam are made of them, and large chunks of them boiled and sugared make wonderful candied fruits of every kind—pineapples, pears, apricots, cherries—and are used by many caterers to give their war cakes and puddings a prosperous and festive look.

Work for East Indian Women.

The thought of Mohammedans fighting for Christian ideals, of dark age heathenism taking up arms for the cause of civilization and humanity, opens a vista that would be staggering were it not that the idea has long been dreamed of.

As one result of the war, the women of India have for the first time worked in the government departments in Delhi, and the question is being debated as to giving women equal representation with men in the plans of the India National society. In all the battle for larger things India has met the problems common to all lands with the most modern, efficient and self-sacrificing methods.

Exports Increase.

American dairy products are more favorably received in Europe than ever. Exports of condensed milk to Europe rose from 16,000,000 pounds in 1914, to 530,000,000 in 1918, and there were notable increases in the export of other dairy products. Most of this was due to war demands, but there seems an opportunity to expand in dairy exports. A normal increase in dairying in this country is justified providing there is the necessary increase in field crops.

Keeping the Home Fires Burning

THERE ARE MANY MEN YET LIVING who can tell about going to the neighbor's, miles away perhaps, to "Borrow" a chunk of fire. Until it arrived, no warmth, no light could be kindled. Whole families have shivered for hours until the messenger could return with the precious spark from a neighbor's fireplace.

Today, with a box of

on the shelf, you need not worry least the fire die down in the night, and you can leave your house for weeks without making elaborate plans for getting a fire started when you return.

A match is a little thing, perhaps, but it has made a big difference in the world. And it makes a difference whether you get good matches or poor ones.

The best assurance of match satisfaction you can have is to see that Eddy's name is on the box.

MINERAL OIL
For Chronic Constipation

By buying this product from us you can get the highest in quality that can be procured at an ESPECIALLY LOW PRICE. There are many thin oils on the market that are not suitable for internal use; other oils have irritating qualities which render them also unsuitable. The one we are selling is guaranteed thick and entirely pure.

It is recognized that a good grade of Mineral Oil is one of the best remedies for CHRONIC CONSTIPATION that is being used. It acts mechanically and does not irritate the intestinal tract, nor does the dose have to be continually increased, as is the case with ordinary purgatives.

It is much better and cheaper than Castor Oil as a laxative for children, since Castor Oil has two effects, the first of which is purgative, and the second or after effect, which is Constipating.

THE LIBERTY LEAGUE

Editor Review: I wish to congratulate the member of the Liberty League upon the splendid name which they have chosen. I loved liberty when I was in my cradle, and that love has been growing in my heart ever since. And when I think of the brave boys who recently died for liberty it certainly appears to me that a more beautiful name could not possibly have been chosen.

My first impulse was to apply for a life membership but the Scotch blood in my veins suggested caution, and I recalled Askwith's words, "Wait and see," and I remembered that "all is not gold that glitters" and "things are not what they seem." Then I have heard people say that even Union Government is not altogether perfect, and some people think that even our own Newton Wesley is a bad man and carries a razor.

So I read a little more, and was rewarded by ascertaining that the real work of the society with the beautiful name is to help the liquor traffic! Did you ever hear of Satan appearing as an angel of light? Recalling the long, dark record of misery and suffering resulting from the traffic, and thinking of one very pathetic fact, namely, that under license the sale of children's shoes decreased enormously and under prohibition it went up with a bound, one is surprised that anyone would have the slightest desire to help such a business.

In this connection, I cannot refrain from quoting the familiar words with all of their terrible significance, "Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in Me it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea."

I notice that "all those who are opposed to legislative interference with our personal liberty" are invited to join. This bars me, for I am in favor of legislative interference with our personal liberty whenever the exercise of that personal liberty clashes with the right or interests of our neighbors.

It is the necessary price that we should all be willing to pay for the privilege of living in a civilized country.

Those who are unwilling to pay this price should live in some country where a lower type of civilization prevails I am told that in some of the South Sea islands a great deal of a certain kind of personal liberty prevails, as evidenced by the fact that the tailor bills are quite moderate. How would this suit our liberty friends?

If a painted savage desired to visit King George he would find that the nearer he got to the centre of civilization the more his personal liberty would be curtailed. If he didn't this he could return to his home where he is not required to wear a dress suit.

The Liberty League will have a big job to abolish all of our laws that interfere with our personal liberty.

One cannot repress a smile to notice that some lawyers who earn their living by helping to force people to obey laws that interfere with our personal liberty are joining the society with the beautiful name in what Caleb Jenkins would call "the glorious caws of liberty."

Isn't this nice? The millenium is approaching? Sorry I cannot agree with you. It is here now. We, in one way. I hope that all of the lawyers will join so if I desire to build a slaughter house on George street none of them can issue a writ against me, because they would be precluded from doing so by their Liberty League principles. Then I will build a few frame houses within the fire limits. Give me liberty, or give me death!

But, Sir, apart from any statutory enactments, consider how our personal liberty is curtailed by the rules and regulations of various business corporations, societies, etc.

How long, for instance, would the manager of a business corporation retain his position were he to disregard the prohibitions issued by his board?

These prohibitions are issued because it is in the interests of the corporations that he should abstain from certain courses of action And these interests are greater and more important than his personal interests.

Apart from the implicit suggestion that they are the only citizens who love liberty, which is scarcely polite it is clear that the society with the beautiful name is carrying the personal liberty idea to a ridiculous extreme. "The greatest good to the greatest number" should be our motto.

BRANTFORD YOUTH DROWNED

Attempting to change places in a canoe brought death to David Jolly Jr., son of David Jolly, well known merchant of Brantford, while holidaying at Bracebridge. He had gone out with a friend canoeing on Muskoka Lake, and when the canoe upset Jolly, being a poor swimmer and weakened by a recent operation had no chance to save himself.

BIGAMY IS COMMON.

Marriage Vow Carries Very Little Weight.

Bigamy cases have become so common at the Old Bailey and Kent Assizes that Justice Darling, at the close of a day in which he had sentenced twelve men for that offence, said:

"People are taking a very lax view of the marriage relation. It has become the easiest thing in the world to get a divorce. There is a movement to enable people to get divorces on cheap and easy terms in the County Courts, and I daresay it will be successful.

"At present people do not even take the trouble to apply to the courts. I have had eighteen bigamy cases before me at the assizes. The marriage contract is the most sacred engagement into which any one can enter, yet many treat it as though it were no more binding than a dinner engagement."

One of the cases before the Justice was of John Smithers, a gamekeeper, charged with having gone through a form of marriage with Beatrice Waters, in Tunbridge Wells, in 1917, his wife, Mabel Dorothy, whom he had married in Canterbury in 1914, being still active. When asked what he had to say, Smithers replied:

"I plead guilty, but on the other hand, I am innocent." He explained that he had suffered from shell shock, and had completely forgotten the woman who had faced him as his first wife. Even in court he looked at her and declared he had never seen her before. Both the first wife and Miss Waters had a child by him. When the evidence showed positively that he had married both women, and the judge asked him with which one he expected to live, he answered:

"I suppose I will have to live with my legal wife, but I will leave it all to you, sir."

A detective testified that when the real wife went to Tunbridge Wells Smithers visited her several times and knew her well enough. He was sentenced to imprisonment for six months, and to such hard labor as he might be able to do.

Refused Dickens' Copy.

Among the many distinguished traits of Charles Dickens was his inability to prepare manuscripts which could be read with accuracy or pleasure by the unfortunate compositors assigned to "set" them. James Howard, a former compositor in the printing house which published Dickens' "Edwin Drood," found occasion recently to make some remarks on the subject.

"His writing was just impossible," says Mr. Howard. "Our firm recognized the difficulties of our task and allowed us 50 per cent extra payment for the work. But this inducement did not attract us. There were about eighteen of us working on "Edwin Drood," and we were all anxious to get other work to print. Our attitude toward Dickens was, I believe, reflected in his attitude toward us. We said very unkind things about him and he reciprocated.

"We did the best we could with the manuscript that came along. We used to hold long discussions as to the meaning of some mark on his copy, and often we could not decipher it and had to make a guess. The proofs were sent to him, and he used to tear them to shreds. When the corrected proofs came back they were in a worse state than his original copy. Dickens had corrected them beyond recognition. It was obvious that he could not read his own writing, for the changes he made were nothing like the original.

"Dickens used to write some very sarcastic comments on our work, but fortunately we were not always able to decipher even those."

Odd Baptisms.

The child of a well-known M.P. was recently christened in the crypt of the House of Commons.

This is, in a sense, a survival of a custom of by-gone days, when christenings in crypts were by no means uncommon.

Some years ago a baby was baptized in a London tramcar. It had been born there prematurely, and its life was despaired of. Hence the hurried ceremony.

In similar circumstances, too, a new-born babe was christened at the bottom of a coal mine in South Wales. This was in the bad old times when women worked underground until almost the eve of their confinement.

In the United States, where christenings other than in church are the rule rather than the exception amongst well-to-do people, babies have been baptized in all sorts of odd places. In one recent case in California, for instance, the ceremony was performed in a diving bell at the bottom of the sea. In another case the proud parents of the new arrival persuaded a clergyman to baptise the child while up in a balloon.—Tit-Bits.

Britain's Bravest Village.

On the recommendation of Sir Douglas Haig and the Lord Lieutenant of Dorset (the Earl of Shaftesbury), a German field gun, with carriage, has been awarded to the village of Shillingstones, Dorset, which holds the record for the number of men in proportion to population who enlisted voluntarily for service in the war.

The village which has attained to so great distinction is about five miles from Blandford and at the last census contained a population of 565.—London Chronicle.

Manchester Nonsense.

The Manchester Guardian commenting on labor troubles in Canada says profiteering on a scale unknown in Great Britain has been rife here. That is a sweeping statement indeed. According to the Sankey Commission inquiry the profits of the British collieries alone in 1916 were $219,000,000, or three times their profits of pre-war days. This single item is more than half the entire annual war expenditure of Canada And there are numerous other instances of the same kind.—Victoria Times.

RECENT RAINS HELP CONDITIONS OF THE ROOT CROPS IN ONTARIO

Pasture Too, Has Been Given Fresh Start and an Increase of Dairy Supplies Will be Result

The following is a summary of reports made by agricultural representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

The week end has experienced a series of much-needed rains, some thunderstorms and some quiet, steady showers, which have been more or less general over the province.

This will mean a new start for turnips, mangels and sugar beets, which have been almost at a standstill for weeks owing to the prolonged drouth. Late potatoes and corn will also be greatly helped.

Fields that were being pastured had about reached their limit, and dairy herds had been falling off heavily in milk, but a good refreshing of both grass and cows is now looked for.

Fall plowing, which has been delayed by the dry and hard condition of the ground, will at once be entered upon with energy, and farmers will have a good chance to get in their intended crop of fall wheat.

The harvesting of spring grains is almost completed. Some fields of oats had to be cut on the green side to escape grasshoppers. As a rule there is much short straw with all these grains.

Favorable reports come from Essex as to the condition of the tobacco fields.

While the second crop of clover is standing both light and low, it is heading out well for seed.

The Lincoln representative states that grapes are likely to be a good crop, with prospects of better prices than were paid last season.

Shipments of beef cattle are light. Hogs are moving more lightly at from $22 to $23.50 per cwt. Elgin reports some sows and "lights" on the market.

Hay ranges in price from $20 to $25 a ton, and is in fair quantity

Everyone Should Drink Hot Water in the Morning

Wash away all the stomach, liver, and bowel poisons before breakfast.

To feel your best day in and day out, to feel clean inside; no sour bile to coat your tongue and sicken your breath or dull your head; no constipation, billious attacks, sick headache, colds, rheumatism or gassy, acid stomach, you must bathe on the inside like you bathe outside. This is vastly more important, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do, says a well-known physician.

To keep these poisons and toxins well flushed from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, drink before breakfast each day, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from your pharmacist. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except for a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant. Drink phosphated hot water every morning to rid your system of these vile poisons and toxins; also to prevent their formation.

To feel like young folks feel; like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became saturated with an accumulation of body poisons, begin this treatment and above all, keep it up! As soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and purifying, so limestone phosphate and hot water before breakfast act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

Her Offering.

The elder sister had married a grocer and was well pleased with her choice. But not so her eighteen-year-old sister. She was taking great pains to impress the family with her ambitions for a husband. "He'll have to be a college graduate, a successful man in some big business and very handsome," she ended.

The elder sister smiled placidly. "And what charms," she asked blandly, "have you to offer for all these demands?"—Indianapolis News.

Castro Made Sure of Salary.

President Ebert will draw his salary every month, like President Wilson. President Poincare is paid every three months. Castro, who was president of Venezuela from 1899 to 1908, used to make the treasury pay him daily. When elected his salary was fixed at $144,000 a year, payable monthly. On drawing his first month's pay Castro told the minister of finance that henceforth he must send him $400 in gold every morning, "that being the best way to make sure of my salary in this revolution-ridden land." During the nine years of his presidency exchequer funds often ran low, but the autocrat's daily wage was always forthcoming, as he warned each successive minister of finance that failure to provide it would mean summary dismissal.

Spare the Garter Snake.

It is said that in Klamath Falls, Ore., it is an offense to kill a garter snake, and that an easterner who killed one of these snakes was fined $5 by a Klamath Falls magistrate. The garter snake is harmless and may be useful, but persons unaccustomed to having snakes around become nervous when they run across so harmless a reptile as the garter snake, and the first thought in their minds is to put the snake out of business.—Utica Press.

BANKRUPTS IN GREEN CAPS.

How France Discouraged Habit of "Liquidation."

A curious custom was prevalent in France during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, says Tit-Bits. Anyone who found it necessary to liquidate his affairs was obliged to wear a green cap—a humility to himself and a warning to others.

Those who make a hobby of getting rid of their indebtedness by way of the Bankruptcy Court should at all costs steer clear of China. Bankruptcies are almost unknown in that country, as they entail immediate execution.

A similar drastic punishment used to be meted out to delinquents in Japan.

To come nearer home, one need only go back to a little before the Act of Union to find that debtors in Scotland were obliged to wear garments of diverse colors, a suit of grey and yellow being the most common.

In Siam, a man unable to meet his liabilities was put in chains and compelled to work as a slave for his creditor. Should he escape, his wife, children, father, or other relative were seized in his stead.

At one time bankrupts were considered criminal offenders even in England. As a matter of fact, certain cases of fraudulent bankruptcy have incurred the death penalty in that country. Any concealment of books or the secreting of property by a debtor was so punished. Under this law a man called John Perrot was hanged in 1761.

It is said that no bank failure has occurred in China for over nine hundred years. When such an event last happened an edict was promptly issued stating that in future any such failure on the part of a bank would entail the severest punishment on all responsible officials. The heads of the cashier, president, and directors became forfeit.

Wild Albanians.

Albania is a land of rugged mountains inhabited by a race as wild as its crags. The Albanians are the most ancient living race of the Balkan Peninsula, and have dwelt among their bleak hills from time immemorial, says Lothrop Stoddard in the World's Work for July. They are strikingly similar in character to the Scotch Highlanders of a couple of centuries ago, being divided into many clans, and exhausting their savage energy in relentless blood-feuds. Their main interest in life is fighting, and it is considered rather poor taste for an Albanian to die anything else than a violent death. Despite their excessive bloodthirstiness, they are chivalrous, hospitable, and possessed of a keen sense of honor. The Albanians are, in fact, a band of Homeric heroes fallen upon a more prosaic age. They cannot be justly rated by modern standards.

The present state of Albania is a small country a little larger than Massachusetts, and with a population of some 800,000 souls—a trifle less than the inhabitants of the Boroughs of Queens and the Bronx. This state was set up by the European Great Powers after the Balkan Wars of 1912-13. An admitted compromise, it satisfied none of the interested Balkan parties. The Albanians bitterly objected that nearly one-half of their race was left outside the national frontiers, many predominantly Albanian districts having been assigned to Serbia and Montenegro, while still others were handed over to Greece. On the other hand, Serbia, Montenegro, and Greece objected to the existence of any Albania at all, declaring the Albanians unfit for independence, and expressing a frank desire to divide the whole country between them. Serbia was especially keen to obtain northern Albania in order to give her new Macedonian possessions an outlet to the Adriatic Sea.

Fear Radium Shortage.

A shortage of radium was recently forecast by Dr. Blanchard B. Moore of the United States bureau of mines. "It is difficult to estimate the amount of radium in existence at present," said Doctor Moore. "Six years ago the engineers of the bureau of mines estimated that at the current rate of production the deposits might last, commercially, 10 or 12 years."

Architecture and Life Are One.

There is another result of good teaching of art history that is important. A good teacher of art history cannot fail to impress upon his students how intimately the history of art and the history of the race are connected; how every great change in style is only a symptom of some great change in ways of thinking and living. The history of architecture ought to teach that life and art are one and that falseness of ideal is mirrored inevitably by a fake architecture. It ought to go far toward removing that destructive viewpoint of the present day that sees architecture as something far off and esoteric and unimportant instead of the very stuff of our contemporary civilization. It ought, in a word, to open the craftsman's eyes to the social implications and the social responsibilities of his art.—Talbot F. Franklin in Architecture.

Cannot Demand Gold in Britain.

Mr. Knowall was heard to assert the other day that a person could legally demand gold for bank-notes from the Bank of England. He was wrong. You could do so before the war, because the gold standard was based on a rule which provided that the Bank of England note issue must be backed up by a certain amount of gold held by the bank. The gold standard, however, could not be observed when war broke out.

The bank is now under no obligation to redeem its notes in gold as was formerly the case, and the Treasury have issued Treasury Notes to the value of 346 millions, which are legal tender for the payment of debts. Neither can the holders of these demand that they should be redeemed in gold.

The gold standard received its final blow on April 1, 1919, when the export of gold was prohibited. Nations carry on their trade by barter. We send so much goods to the Argentine, for instance, and they send us so much goods. If there is a balance between the two, it is satisfied by the export of gold. Now that our gold reserves have fallen very low—it is estimated that at the moment they only amount to some twenty million pounds—the Government have prohibited the export. Consequently, we must do our foreign business by the export of goods or on credit.—Tit-Bits.

A Carpet-bagger.

Carpet-bagger is a term applied to a Parliamentary candidate who seeks to represent a constituency with which he has had no previous connection, and in which he possesses no property except the "carpet bag" with which he arrives. The foregoing definition is taken from Montgomery and Cambray's "Dictionary of Political Phrases and Allusions." The term was first used in the United States during the reconstruction period following the Civil War. The Standard Dictionary defines the term as "a Northern man who settled in the Southern States at the close of the Civil War (1865); commonly used invidiously; so called from reckless speculating bankers of the west who decamped with funds entrusted to them; hence, an adventurer."

Names of Well-known Flowers.

Fuchsias were so called after Leonard Fuchs. Dahlias were named from Andre Dahl, who brought them from Peru. The camellia was so called from a missionary named Kamel, who brought some magnificent specimens of the flower to France from Japan. He called it the Rose of Japan, but his friends changed it to camellia. Magnolias were named in honor of Prof. Magnol de Monpellier, who first brought the beautiful trees to France from America and Asia. The Latin word for to wash is "lavare," and lavender received its name because the Romans put the flowers into the water used for washing to perfume their hands.

Obsolete Trade Customs.

The past few years have done much to put an end to many old customs that had outlived earlier efforts to banish them.

There is, for instance, the oddments given on the principle of the baker's dozen.

It has long been the custom in selling wool to allow a quarter of a pound to the stone. The Lincolnshire farmers now want to abolish the plan and effect their sales on net weight for all commodities they purchase, and therefore are justified in insisting upon similar terms in the case of their sales.—Tit-Bits.

The Hun Propagandist.

Dr. Dryander, once chief court preacher in Berlin, describes in the Lokal-Anzeiger an interview of Allan Baker, M.P., an English Quaker, with Kaiser Wilhelm before the war, says the New York World. There had been talk of a league of nations. Dr. Dryander continues:

"For that we should need a new saviour," replied the Kaiser. Here the Quaker Baker had a heavenly inspiration by God. "You are the man"! he cried ecstatically, and, in Quaker fashion, he three times touched the Kaiser's chest and arms. The Kaiser's eyes became moist. "What this man wants is also my desire," he said, "but if one wished to compel peace one must be powerful."

Wilhelm's arms were not powerful enough to "compel peace." English Quakers must now think a new "Ecce Homo!" sacrilegious. But a Moravian preacher at Amerongen also choruses praise of William: "How lovingly he talks of his brave staff and his court clergy!" (indorsing Dr. Dryander). He "defends his people: 'War, misery and hunger make them what they are to-day.'" He is "in God's hands." And "Where the Kaiser is, there is sunshine."

We had supposed that where the Kaiser is dwells the memory of a wasted world and eight million dead. However, these publications have a purpose. When important German elements begin backing der Kaiser again, they are probably wondering whether they may start something.

Temperature of Leaves.

Some recent investigation of the temperature of leaves made in the deserts and mountains of Arizona and in the Santa Lucia mountains of California have resulted in the discovery that leaves show a very rapid change of temperature at times. These fluctuations are almost constantly going on. Changes of from one to three degrees C. were observed in from 20 to 60 seconds, and if a moderately strong wind is blowing, the change may amount to five degrees in 30 seconds.

First-class singers rarely die of consumption or any lung disease.

New York food and clothing prices increased 151 per cent. from December, 1914, to June, 1919.

HASTINGS

(Special Correspondence.)

Hastings, Aug. 20.—The W. M. S. and Mission Band in connection with the Methodist Church held their annual picnic on Thursday afternoon in Mr. Harold Beavis' grove. The children spent the afternoon in games, races, etc., after which a bountiful lunch was served and much enjoyed. Everyone present was well pleased with the success of the outing.

Copious showers have been falling which will be untold benefit to the country.

A great number of our people went to Warkworth on Wednesday to enjoy the sports. A large crowd was present and the event was generally considered successful.

PETERBOROUGH FIRM WINNERS AT COBOURG

SHAW BROTHERS TAKE FIRST AND SECOND FOR HEAVY HORSES.

Cobourg, Aug. 20.—The eleventh Cobourg Horse Show which is to Cobourg what the Canadian National Exhibition is to Toronto, opened here under unfavorable weather conditions, but with an enthusiasm and vim on the part of the directors, exhibitors and people that augurs well for a record success. Notwithstanding the war depleting the stables of many former exhibitors, there are now here a record number of horses, and a program of events has been arranged better than for any previous show. This is especially true of hunters and jumpers, racing horses and pacers.

Sterno Brothers of Peterborough County won first prize for pair of heavy draught horses and second for a light draught team of Clydesdales.

UNCLE SAM TO MOVE AGAINST MEXICANS

TROOPS ALREADY SENT TO THAT COUNTRY AND MORE TO FOLLOW.

Washington, Aug. 20.—No official announcements are being made or how the United States Government intends to handle the bandit nuisance in Northern Mexico, from this point on, but there is every evidence that all preparations have been made to meet future depredations with a swift movement of troops, such as now is being conducted against the desperadoes who held the two army aviators for ransom.

Swift-moving cavalry, fully equipped with machine guns and guided by airplanes it is understood will be relied upon, and will be prepared to move quickly from strategic points along the border of the bandit country on the Rio Grande.

Organization of the border guard to ensure the greatest speed in these movements has been completed, the cavalry regiments being so distributed as to place the nucleus of a flying column at carefully selected points along the Rio Grande.

Movement of the troops of the Eighth Cavalry into Mexico inaugurated the new plan, according to officials, and from this time on similar incidents "will be handled without gloves."

'VAGRANT" WANTS MONEY BACK

Chatham Authorities Threatened With Suit for False Arrest.

Chatham, Aug. 20.—An echo of the Police Court case in which James Smith was fined for being a vagrant in spit of the fact that he was able to show a bank balance of some $2.00 is heard in a letter received by High Constable George Peters from the law firm of Cowan, Towers & Cowan, of Waterford. This firm contends that Smith was not a vagrant and that the police of Chatham had no right to arrest him. They ask the return of the $9.50 fine imposed upon their client and they also threaten to bring action against the Chatham authorities for false arrest. Smith was arrested here on suspicion of being Winfield Dugan, who was wanted on a serious charge. After his arrest the authorities laid the charge of vagrancy against him and secured a conviction. Smith when released from custody was warned to leave Chatham in a hurry.

Wake Up, Ontario!

Let the Referendum Battle Cry be "No" - "No" - "No" - "No"!

SINCE the announcement in the Legislature last spring that a Referendum on the Ontario Temperance Act would be taken in the fall, the different temperance organizations of the Province of Ontario have formed the Ontario Referendum Committee, which comprises representatives from the organized temperance forces of the Province and the temperance sentiment of the Province outside of these organizations. The new Committee will conduct the Campaign. We are asking the voters of Ontario to decide against the repeal of the Ontario Temperance Act, and, in fact, to vote "No" to all questions submitted on the ballot.

No Repeal—No Surrender

THE Ontario Temperance Act, upon which the approaching Referendum is to be taken, became law on April 27th, 1916, and came into full effect on September 16th, 1916. By the Ontario Temperance Act, sale and distribution of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes within the Province were prohibited. For practically three years the Province has experienced the good effects of this law. The legislation which brought about these good results, however, was enacted as a war measure.

By explicit promise of Premier Hearst on behalf of the Government of Ontario, made at the time it was introduced in the House, the question of repealing the Ontario Temperance Act or maintaining it as the permanent law of the Province, was to be referred directly to a vote of the people in the year 1919, on the first Monday in June. The exact date was subsequently extended and is now set for the fall of this year.

For the Temperance forces to win they must secure four "No" majorities. That is, a majority for "No" on every question. The Temperance forces will be defeated if there is a majority for "Yes" on any one of the questions. You must mark an X after each of the four questions, or your ballot is counted as spoiled.

A century of Temperance progress in this Province is at stake in the coming Referendum. It is, therefore, most important that the Ontario Temperance Act be solidified as permanent legislation.

The Ontario Referendum Committee earnestly and respectfully ask you to mark your ballot with X in the "No" column after each and every question, as indicated in the sample ballot reproduced herewith.

"NO!"—Four Times—"NO!"

Question No. 1

By reference to the sample ballot you will see Question No. 1 asks if you are in favor of repealing the Ontario Temperance Act. You should understand that if this Act is repealed, the Province will go back to the system in operation before the war under the Ontario License Act. Every temperance vote in the Province must be recorded against this abject surrender. We believe the majority of people of all shades of opinion will vote a solid "No" to this question.

Question No. 2

Question No. 2 relates to the sale of beer by Government vendors. If the Act itself is repealed, of course, there can be no amendment of it, for there would be no Act left to amend. "The Greater (No. 1) includes the less (Nos. 2, 3 and 4)," said Premier Hearst. Temperance people must vote "No" to this question also. Beer of the proposed strength, 2.51% alcohol by weight, is intoxicating. It is just as much intoxicating when sold in Government shops as when sold in licensed liquor stores or saloons.

The Referendum Ballot

AND HOW TO VOTE

	Yes.	No.
1. Are you in favor of the repeal of the Ontario Temperance Act?		X
2. Are you in favor of the sale of light beer containing not more than 2 51-100 per cent. alcohol, weight measure, through Government agencies, and amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?		X
3. Are you in favor of the sale of light beer containing not more than 2 51-100 per cent. alcohol, weight measure, in standard hotels in local municipalities, that by majority vote, favor such sale, and amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?		X
4. Are you in favor of the sale of spirituous and malt liquors through Government agencies, and amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to permit such sale?		X

Question No. 3

Since September, 1916, the beer permitted to be served in Standard Hotels was limited to 2.50% proof spirits. The proposal in question No. 3 means increasing the intoxicating strength of beer allowed to be sold in bars to 2.51% alcohol by weight, equal to 5.46% proof spirits. That is more than double the strength now permitted by the Ontario Temperance Act, and more than five times the alcoholic strength defined as "intoxicating" in England and the United States. Vote "No" to question No. 3.

Question No. 4

Are you in favor of "taking the lid off alcohol," so long as the drinking is done elsewhere than in open bars? The proposal in question No. 4 is to legalize the strongest intoxicating liquors of all kinds—whiskey, brandy, gin, rum, strong beer, ale, stout, and all the rest. It merely restricts the place of sale to Government shops instead of licensed hotels and liquor stores. Can there be any two answers to that question in the minds of the thinking people of Ontario? The answer to that question is: "No."

THE Ontario Referendum Committee publish this advertisement with the purpose of letting the people of the Province know exactly where the issue stands. The Committee desire to have the meaning of the Referendum questions thoroughly understood before the time comes for voting, and to feel that the people of Ontario when they express their will by the ballot have a full knowledge of the facts before them. Remember that every person with a vote in Provincial elections has the right to vote in this Referendum. Remember that in this Referendum women have equal voting rights with men. Remember that Victory means the Ontario Temperance Act—as it stands.

SIR ARTHUR CURRIE INSPECTOR-GENERAL

CANADIAN HERO HOLDS HIGHEST MILITARY RANK IN THIS COUNTRY.

Ottawa, Ont., Aug. 19.—At a dinner given in Sir Arthur Currie's honor at the Country Club, Major-General S. C. Mewburn, Minister of Militia, announced that the Corps Commander had been elevated to the rank of full General, appointed Inspector-General for the whole of Canada, and made Military Councillor a position that means he will be chief military advisor to the Minister of Militia. These promotions have been approved by the Cabinet Council, and merely have to be finally ratified by the Governor-General-in-Council, announced General Mewburn, who said that they were a slight expression of the appreciation of the services rendered by General Currie to Canada and the British Empire. This means that the Commander of the Canadian Corps has the distinction of being the first military officer in Canada, and the only one at the present time to hold the full rank of General.

Welcomed to Ottawa.

In the name of the Government and people of Canada and of the citizens of Ottawa, Sir Arthur W. Currie, G.C.M., K.C., commander of the Canadian Corps, was welcomed to Ottawa and to Canada by Sir George Foster, acting Prime Minister, and by Major Harold Fisher of Ottawa. Gen. Currie's train arrived promptly on time at the Central Station, and an immense crowd waited there or lined the streets from the station to Parliament Hill, where on the steps the official addresses of welcome were delivered and where later General Currie inspected the Guard of Honor of Great War Veterans and military police.

CANON DIXON TO REMAIN

Noted Deacon Withdraws Resignation as Rector Toronto Church.

Toronto, Aug. 20.—It is understood that the Bishop of Toronto has refused to accept Canon H. C. Dixon's resignation, and that the popular pastor will continue in charge of Trinity Church. On receiving notice of the Canon's intention to resign, the Bishop wired him to report to him at Niagara, and it is said that as a result of the conference, Canon Dixon has been induced to reconsider his decision and finally to withdraw his resignation. Steps have been taken by the Synod to enquire into and adjust the troubles which prompted Canon Dixon to take such a drastic step.

EMMY WEHLEN IS ACTRESS OF INTERNATIONAL FAME

Metro Star of "Fools and Their Money," is Admired for Her Rare Talent.

Emmy Wehlen, the dainty Metro star of "Fools and Their Money," to be shown at the Grand Theatre on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, was born in Vienna. Her parents, however, moved to England soon after her birth, and she was brought up and educated in London, graduating from a finishing school there.

Her first work on the stage was in heavy drama, but possessing a splendid soprano voice she was induced to take up musical comedy, in which she eventually attained her greatest success.

Miss Wehlen took America by storm in the starring role of her noted Gaiety Theatre production "Tonight's the Night," and her triumph on this side of the water was as great as it had been abroad. Other of her Gaiety successes were "The Merry Widow" and "The Dollar Princess." Before giving up the dramatic for the musical stage she appeared in many Shakespearian roles and also in plays written by Ibsen, Barrie, Wilde and others. With these productions she toured all Europe.

Her motion picture debut was with Metro, where she has appeared in "The Amateur Adventuress," "Sylvia on a Spree," "His Bonded Wife," "The House of Gold," "The Shell Game" and many others. In "Fools and Their Money" Miss Wehlen is seen in the most winsome role of her career.

Brave Cardiff Colonel Went Back to Humble Job As a Police Constable

EVERYBODY has heard of the Englishman who went into the war a private soldier and came out a brigadier-general. A case even more remarkable, however, is reported from Cardiff, Wales, and has created something more than local stir—though Cardiff itself appears to have taken the matter with entire calmness.

Before the war Arthur Ritchings was a police constable in the town. He enlisted in the army in 1914 and served in the ranks in that first critical year and the two years following. In November, 1917, he was promoted second lieutenant on the field. By February, 1918, he was a captain, a little later he was a major, and the end of the war found him a lieutenant-colonel. In that time he had been six times wounded, he had won the decoration of Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, the Croix de Guerre with palms, and the Military Cross, having been mentioned three times in despatches and having proved himself a gallant soldier and able officer.

Not long ago Lt.-Col. Ritchings left the army—the war being fought and won—and quietly resumed his place as a common policeman pounding a beat in Cardiff. The chairman of the municipal bench made a point of saying he was glad to see him back, and even went so far as to congratulate Constable Ritchings publicly upon his military record. In fact, it seems there was a sort of ceremony of welcome.

So the lieutenant-colonel with four years of active military service to his credit and field rank, won at the front, displaying the ability to command 3,000 and odd men, modestly undertook to take charge once more of casual drunks and disorderlies in that busy Welsh mining town.

Somebody wrote an indignant letter to a London paper about it, otherwise apparently the incident would have passed if not unnoticed, at least as not more than ordinarily noticeable. As a consequence the watch committee of Cardiff, equivalent to our police commissioner, took the ex-lieutenant-colonel off his beat, and gave him the job of training the police awkward squad of recruits in the proper bearing and behavior of a constable. The lord mayor when pressed for information whether there was any intention of appointing the distinguished officer to a higher and more responsible position on the force went to the length of admitting that he thought he might say all the members of the watch committee were sympathetic with this idea, and that he had not doubt that when the opportunity occurred Col. or Constable Ritchings would be given a chance such as he deserved.

It was also said in authoritative quarters (to quote the British press account) that Lt.-Col. Ritchings himself "recognised as every right-thinking man would that he had a moral obligation to return to the Cardiff police force for the reason that the ratepayers had been contributing during his absence to the support of his dependents at home."

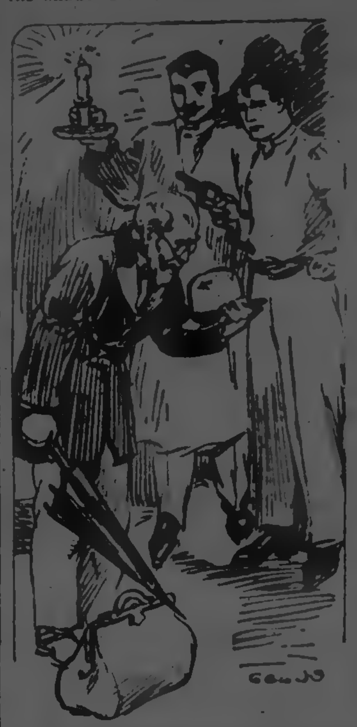
The first 100,000 recruits for the U. S. regular army have been secured. Of these 68,000 are re-enlistments.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

BY EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

With Mr. Magee descended the yellow candlelight, and, brushing as the shadows of the hotel office, it revealed a mattress lying on the floor close to the clerk's desk, behind which stood the safe. On the mattress was the bedding Magee had presented to the haberdasher, hastily thrown back by the lovelorn one on rising.



He Ruefully Recorded a Hole Through the Crown.

"You prefer to sleep down here," Mr. Magee commented.

"Near the letters of Arabella—yes," replied Bland. His keen eyes met Magee's. There was a challenge in them.

Mr. Magee turned, and the yellow light of the candle flickered wanly over the great front door. Even as he looked at it, the door was pushed open, and a queer figure of a man stood framed against a background of glittering snow. Mr. Bland's arm flew up.

"Don't shoot!" cried Magee.

"No, please don't," urged the man in the doorway. A beard, a pair of round, owlish spectacles, and two ridiculous earmuffs, left only a suggestion of face here and there. "I have every right here, I assure you, even though my arrival is somewhat unconventional. See—I have the key." He held up a large brass key that was the counterpart of the one Hal Bentley had bestowed upon Mr. Magee in that club on far-off Forty-fourth street.

"Keys to burn," muttered Mr. Bland sourly.

"I bear no ill will with regard to the shooting," went on the newcomer. He took off his derby hat and ruefully regarded a hole through the crown. His bald head seemed singularly frank and naked above a face of so many disguises. "It is only natural that men alone on a mountain should defend themselves from invaders at 2 in the morning. My escape was narrow, but there is no ill will."

He blinked about him, his breath a white cloud in the cold room.

"Life, young gentlemen," he remarked, setting down his bag and leaning a green umbrella against it, "has its surprises even at sixty-two. Last night I was ensconced by my own library fire, preparing a paper on the Pagan renaissance. Tonight I am on Baldpate mountain, with a perforation in my hat."

Mr. Bland shivered. "I'm going back to bed," he said in disgust.

"First," went on the gentleman with the perforated derby, "permit me to introduce myself. I am Professor Thaddeus Bolton, and I hold the chair of comparative literature in a big eastern university."

Mr. Magee took the mittened hand of the professor.

"Glad to see you, I'm sure," he said. "My name is Magee. This is Mr. Bland—he is impetuous, but estimable. I trust you will forgive his first salute. What's a bullet among gentlemen? It seems to me that us explanations may be lengthy, and this room is very cold, we would do well to go up to my room, where there is a fire."

"Delighted," cried the old man. "A fire. I long to see one. Let us go to your room by all means."

Mr. Bland sulkily stalked to his mattress and secured a gayly colored bedquilt, which he wound about his thin form.

"This is positively the last experience meeting I attend tonight," he growled.

They ascended to No. 7. The professor removed, along with other impediments, his ear tabs, which were connected by a rubber cord. He waved them like frisky detached ears before him.

"An old man's weakness," he remarked. "Foolish they may seem to you. But I assure you I found them useful companions in climbing Baldpate mountain at this hour.

"But I am not here to apologize for my apparel, am I? Hardly. You are saying to yourselves 'Why is he here?' Yes, that is the question that disturbs you. What has brought this domesticated college professor scampering from the Pagan renaissance to Baldpate Inn? For answer, I must ask you to go back with me a week's time and gaze at a picture from the rather dreary academic kaleidoscope that is my life.

"I am seated back of a desk on a platform in a bare yellow room. In front of me, tier on tier, sit a hundred young men in various attitudes of inattention. I am trying to tell them something of the ideal poetry that marked the rebirth of the Saxon genius. They are bored. I—well, gentlemen, in confidence, even the mind of a college professor has been known to wander at times from the subject in hand. And then—I begin to read a poem—a poem descriptive of a woman dead 600 years and more. Ah, gentlemen"—

He sat erect on the edge of his great chair. Back of the thick lenses of his spectacles he had eyes that still could flash.

"This is not an era of romance," he said. "Our people grub in the dirt for the dollar. Their visions perish. Their souls grow stale. Yet now and then, at most inopportune times, comes the flash that reveals to us the glories that might be."

Mr. Bland wrapped his gay quilt more securely about him. Mr. Magee smiled encouragement on the newest raconteur.

"I shall be brief," continued Professor Bolton. "Heaven knows that pedagogic room was no place for visions, nor were those athletic young men fit companions for a soul gone giddy. Yet—I lost my head. As I read on there returned to my heart a glow I had not known in forty years. The bard spoke of her hair:

Her yellow locks, crisped like golden wyre,
About her shoulders were lousely shed.

And I saw, as in a dream—ahem, I can trust you, gentlemen—a girl I supposed I had forever forgotten in the mold and dust of my later years. I will not go further into the matter. My wife's hair is black.

"And reading on, but losing the thread of the poet's eulogy in the golden fabric of my resurrected dream, it came to me to compare that maid I knew in the long ago with the women I know today. Ah, gentlemen! Lips made but for smiling fling weighty arguments on the unoffending atmosphere. Eyes made to light with that light that never was by land or sea, blaze instead with what they call the injustice of woman's servitude. White hands made to find their way to the hands of some young man in the moonlight carry banners in the dusty streets. It seemed I saw the blue eyes of that girl of long ago turned, sad, rebuking, on her sisters of today. As I finished reading my heart was awhirl. I said to the young men before me:

" 'There was a woman, gentlemen—a woman worth a million suffragettes.'

"They applauded. The fire in me died down. Soon I was my old meek, academic self. The vision had left no trace. I dismissed my class and went home. I found that my wife—she of the black hair—had left my slippers by the library fire. I put them on and plunged into a pamphlet lately published by a distinguished member of a German university faculty. I thought the incident closed forever."

He gazed sorrowfully at the two young men.

"But, gentlemen, I had not counted on that viper that we nourish in our bosom—the American newspaper. At present I will not take time to denounce the press. I am preparing an article on the subject for a respectable weekly of select circulation. Suffice it to record what happened. The next day an evening paper appeared with a huge picture of me on its front page and the hideous statement that this was the Professor Bolton who had said that 'One peroxide blond is worth a million suffragettes.'

"Yes, that was the dreadful version of my remark that was spread broadcast. Up to the time that story appeared I had no idea as to what sort of creature the peroxide blond might be. I protested, of course. I might as well have tried to dam a tidal wave with a table fork. The wrath of the world swept down upon me. I was deluged with telegrams, editorials, letters, denouncing me. Firm faced females lay in wait for me and waved umbrellas in my eyes. Even my wife turned from me, saying that while she did not ask me to hold her views on the question of suffrage, she thought I might at least refrain from publicly commending a type of woman found chiefly in musical comedy choruses. I received a note from the president of the university asking me to be more circumspect in my remarks. Me—Thaddeus Bolton—the most conservative man on earth by instinct!

"And still the denunciations of me poured in; still women's clubs held meetings resolving against me; still a steady stream of reporters flowed through my life, urging me to state my views further, to name the ten greatest blonds in history, to—heaven knows what. Yesterday I resolved I could stand it no longer. I determined to go away until the whole thing was forgotten. 'But,' they said to me, 'there is no place on land or sea where the reporters will not find you.' I talked the matter over with my old friend, John Bentley, owner of Baldpate inn, and he in his kindness gave me the key to this hostelry."

Wisely Professor Bolton blinked about him. Mr. Bland was half asleep in his chair, but Mr. Magee was quick with sympathy.

"Professor," he said, "you are a much suffering man. I feel for you. Here, I am sure, you are safe from reporters, and the yellow journals will soon forget you in their discovery of the next distorted wonder. Briefly, Mr. Bland and myself will outline the tangle of events that brought us to the inn"—

"Briefly is right," broke in Bland. "And then it's me for that mountainous mattress of mine. I can rattle my story off in short order and give you the fine points tomorrow. Up to a short time ago"—

But Billy Magee interrupted. An idea, magnificent, delicious, mirthful, had come to him. Why not? He chuckled inwardly, but his face was most serious.

"I should like to tell my story first, if you please," he said.

The haberdasher grunted. The professor nodded. Mr. Magee looked Bland squarely in the eye, strangled the laugh inside and began:

"Up to a short time ago I was a haberdasher in the city of Reuton. My name, let me state, is Magee—William Magee. I fitted the gay shoulder blades of Reuton with clothing from the back of pages of the magazines, and as for neckties"—

Mr. Bland's sly eyes had opened wide. He rose to a majestic height—majestic considering the bedquilt.

"See here"— he began.

"Please don't interrupt," requested Mr. Magee sweetly. "I was, as I have said, a happy, carefree haberdasher. And then—she entered my life. Arabella was her name. Ah, professor, your lady of the yellow locks, crisped like golden wire—even she must never in my presence be compared with Arabella. She—she had—a—face—Noah Webster couldn't have found words to describe it. And her heart was true to yours truly—at least I thought that it was."

Mr. Magee rattled on. The haberdasher, his calling and his tragedy snatched from him by the humorous Magee, retired with sullen face into his bedquilt. Carefully Mr. Magee led up to the coming of the man from Jersey City; in detail he laid bare the duel of haberdashery fought in the name of the fair Arabella. As he proceeded his enthusiasm grew. He added fine bits that had escaped Mr. Bland. He painted with free hand the picture of tragedy's dark hour; the note hinting at suicide he gave in full. Then he told of how his courage grew again, of how he put the cowardice of death behind him, resolved to dare all—and live. He finished at last, his voice husky with emotion. Out of the corner of his eye he glanced triumphantly at Bland. That gentleman was gazing thoughtfully at the blazing logs.

"You did quite right," commented Professor Bolton, "in making up your mind to live. And now, the gentleman in the—er—the bedquilt. Has he, too, a story?"

"Yes," laughed Mr. Magee, "let's hear now from the gentleman in the bedquilt. Has he, too, a story? And if so, what is it?"

He smiled delightedly into the eyes of Bland. What would the ex-haberdasher do, shorn of his fictional explanation? Would he rise in his wrath and denounce the man who had stolen his Arabella? Mr. Bland smiled back. He stood up, and a contingency that had not entered Mr. Magee's mind came to be.

CHAPTER V.

A Professional Hermit Appears.

MR. BLAND walked calmly to the table and picked up a popular novel that lay thereon. On its cover was the picture of a very beautiful maiden.

"See that dame?" he inquired of the professor. "Sort of makes a man sit up and take notice, doesn't she? Even the frostbitten haberdasher here has got to admit that in some ways she has this Arabella person looking like a faded chromo in your grandmother's parlor on a rainy afternoon. Ever get any notion, professor, the way a picture like that boosts a novel in the busy marts of trade? No? Well"—

Mr. Bland continued. Mr. Magee leaned back, overjoyed, in his chair. Here was a man not to be annoyed by the mere filching of his story. Here was a man with a sense of humor, an opponent worthy his foe's best efforts.

MATTHEWS-B. TEAM DEFAULTED GAME

PITCHER FROST ABSENT, WOULD NOT PLAY LINDSAY NINE WITHOUT HIM.

Fans who had a hurried or no supper in order to see a ball game last night between Lindsay I. O. F. and Matthews-Blackwell in the important O. A. B. A. contest were sorely disappointed. After waiting for one whole hour, Umpire Kay made the startling announcement that on account of the non-appearance of the Matthews-Blackwell aggregation the game was forfeited to Lindsay by a 9-0 score.

The condition of the grounds was not good for baseball, but it would have been possible to play, and the whole Lindsay team was out ready for the struggle. Most of the local aggregation were out, but were minus Pitcher Frost, and two of the other players were not in uniform. As they have barely enough men to fill their line-up, the absence of even one man was sufficient to prevent them from playing. Manager Dan McCabe stubbornly refused to send for his player or allow his team to play on the wet diamond, in spite of the fact that this was not his home game and consequently he could not make a decision on the diamond.

This puts the Matthews-Blackwell team out of the running, and after their final exhibition in the city league and last night's forfeit few there are indeed who will extend their sympathy to the defeated champions.

Arrangements are being made by Jake Solomon for exhibition games here, and this will warm the hearts of the sorrowful fans, for everyone knows that the team which truly represents the city fights till the last man is out every time. There is no default by such a team and their interest in the game is always shared by the fans.

BALL SATURDAY WITH HILLCRESTS

TORONTO TEAM HERE FOR EXHIBITION GAME WITH PETERBORO C. O. NINE.

Manager Jake Solomon received a message this afternoon that the Hillcrest baseball team had accepted his terms, and will be here next Saturday to play the Central Ontario League team. The Hillcrests are amateur champions of Ontario and are the team that put Peterborough out of the O.A.B.A. series last year.

When a train struck an auto near Jonesville, Vt., three persons, including the engineer of the train, were killed.

AUSTRALIANS TO AMERICAN CHAMPS

VISITORS QUALIFY FOR FINALS IN BIG N.S.A. TENNIS TOURNEY.

Newton, Mass, Aug. 19.—Norman E. Brookes and Gerald Patterson, Australia's premier lawn tennis team won the right to play for the American doubles championship by defeating William M. Johnston and Clarence J. Griffin in the final round of the titular tournament by scores of 10—8, 9—7, 7—5.

As a result of this victory the Australians will meet William T. Tilden II. and Vincent Richards, the present title holders, on the courts of the Longwood Cricket Club today in the analysis round.

An analysis of the match shows that the Australians won by 26 games to 26 and by 158 points to 138. The steadiness of the winners at critical moments, and their ability in the second and third sets to force their opponents out of position or break up the team play, were the deciding factors from a combination standpoint.

Individually, Patterson made the best showing so far as placements and service aces were concerned, but he made more outs and nets than his partner.

At Cedarhurst the Australian pair, Randolph Lycett and R. V. Thomas were defeated by Beals C. Wright and Ichiya Kumagae in the final of the tennis doubles. The scores were 6—4, 3—6, 6—2, 6—3.

PREPARATIONS BEING MADE FOR A BIG RUGBY SEASON

City Rugby League to be Formed — Drs. Wood and McPherson Behind This Movement.

A movement has already been set on foot for making this fall a big Rugby season. Dr. Wood and Dr. McPherson are interested in this movement, and there is no reason why a first-class City Rugby League can not be organized, with a local team to play outsiders in the same way as the baseball has worked out.

Two teams can already be counted on, the P. C. I. and Jack Dainard's Lakeviews. Surely a couple more teams can be formed to make a big city Rugby aggregation.

ST. ZOLIQUE TEAM IS NOW OUTLAWED

N.L.N. WARNS CORNWALL CLUB AGAINST EXHIBITION GAME.

Cornwall, August 20.—Secretary Dalton Phelan of the Cornwall lacrosse team received a letter from Desse Brown, secretary of the N. L. U., stating that he had been instructed by B. Demouchel, president of the N. L. U., to notify Cornwall that the league would not sanction an exhibition match between Newsy Lalonde's St. Zotique team and Cornwall here on Saturday, August 23. Mr. Brown quite plainly informed the local club that if they took part in such a contest the entire team would be suspended by Demouchel. The St. Zotique team was characterized as an outlaw club, run by Lalonde, and as Lalonde was working against the interests of the N.L.U., Mr Dumouchel would not countenance any connection between that club and any N. L. U. team. Cornwall will obey Mr. Dumouchel's ruling, but will go ahead and arrange an exhibition match with some other team for next Saturday.

COUNTRY NOT RIGHTLY NAMED

Iceland by No Means the Barren Waste Which Appellation Would Seem to Imply.

Iceland suggests to many people a land of glacial coldness populated by fur-clad shivering natives, probably Eskimos. The real Icelander wears clothes no warmer than those needed in Canada. His winters are usually no more severe than those of Canada. The Icelander is not an Eskimo. He is a descendant of the fair-haired Vikings. Nothing excites an Icelander more than to have some one pleasantly ask him if it is ever warm in Iceland and if any flowers grow there.

That Iceland is so misunderstood is entirely the fault of the Norse explorers who landed on the island and felt obliged to name it. As it was a cold day and the land was frozen beneath a blanket of snow, they thoughtlessly called it Iceland and departed hastily. Had they first visited the island on a spring day, when the wind blew across the broad plains, they might have felt the vastness of the place and with equal carelessness called it Greatland. The name Iceland was officially adopted and instantly became the island's hoodoo.

Summer in Iceland is warm, sometimes hot. In June the sun pours down upon the plains continuously save for a few minutes at midnight. Another unicelandic phase of Iceland are the hot springs which spout up steaming water. To this hot water supply the women carry their washing as a matter of convenience.

Iceland is not a land of luxuriant vegetation or perfect climate. It is a fairly prosperous little country that struggles bravely against its handicaps, not the least of which is the world's attitude of persistent misunderstanding.

NUTS MILLION YEARS OLD

Interesting Fossils Recently Found by the United States Geological Survey.

Among the fossils recently discovered by the United States geological survey are remarkably well-preserved impressions or casts of leaves of several extinct varieties of ash, oak, beech and hickory, which were found, with three present-day species, in states bordering the Gulf of Mexico, according to the Youth's Companion. Although the leaves themselves have rotted and gone, here and there some were buried in soft clay by sediment in such a manner as to leave perfectly preserved impressions.

The nuts, on the other hand, neither decayed nor petrified, but fell into pools of water, which is one of the best preservatives in nature, and sooner or later were also buried under silt and clay. Owing to their hard shells, those that fell into places favorable to their preservation are today in excellent condition, although slightly flattened by the long soaking and the gentle pressure of the clay. The deposit in which the leaves and nuts were found is not less than a million years old.

Put It in the Bill.

The habitual customer, Mr. Feedwell, would often condescend to chat with the head waiter. One day he said very seriously:

"Look here, I don't often complain, but this pepper of yours is half peas!"

"Oh, no!" said the head waiter indignantly. "I see to that myself: We grind our own pepper."

"But I tell you it's half peas," said the customer, "and I'll prove it! P-e-p-p-e-r—half 'p's.' You see!"

And he laughed until the tears came.

The head waiter smiled weakly, and went to get the customer's change. He returned still smiling. The customer glanced through his change.

"Threepence short," he said.

"I think not, sir," said the waiter. "Sixpence for peas, sir. Now—half peas—"—London Tit-Bits.

Helgoland.

Helgoland lies in the North sea, 40 miles northwest from the mouth of the Elbe. It consists of a steep, rocky plateau, 184 feet high, with a strip of firm sand at its southeasterly foot. Its area is about 123 acres. Kaiser William is said to have expended $50,000,000 on the practical reconstruction of the island; it is fortified against sea and cannon alike with great granite buttresses 16 feet thick and 240 feet high on all sides. Even the fissures in its cliffs have been filled up and bound together with ferro-concrete — thousands of tons of it. The little island is wholly incased with a cemented belt of armor, fortified with modern ordnance.

NO COUNTERFEITING.

It Has Become a Lost Art In Britain.

Counterfeiting is almost a lost art in Britain. So far as the coinage of silver money is concerned little has been the work of the police since about ten years ago they unearthed a plant that was busily engaged in coining a better grade of silver than the standard, and the gang went down for a few years. Since then silver has risen considerably in price, and it no longer pays to coin the metal.

There were quite a number of cases of counterfeiting the 10-shilling note printed on thin paper during the first few months of the war, and quite a few of these were drawn with pen and ink, but the Bradbury issue stopped this practice.

Only the other day a man was charged with having in his possession copies of these early 10-shilling notes, and his defence was that he had made them for a joke, which he explained as having on his pals by peeling them from a roll and solemnly lighting his pipe with one. The judge believed his story and fined him simply a nominal amount.

Lately there have been several complaints from the banks of counterfeit money being in circulation, the notes in question being an imitation of the new-design 10-shilling note. Except for a slight difference in the tint and a rather poor production of the back design, they were difficult to detect and quite a number were passed.

The sequel was the seizure of 500 notes and the apparatus for printing them the other morning at Paddington by the police, and the appearance before the justices of a dock laborer named Henry Chamberlain charged with uttering notes and having materials for counterfeiting in his possession. He was remanded for enquiries.

One-eyed Men.

What actual disability is involved in the loss of one eye? Accident insurance companies usually estimate it at 50 per cent., but Sir Arthur Pearson told the British Committee on the Administration of Soldiers' and Sailors' Pensions that this as absolutely absurd, and suggested 25 per cent. as a more reasonable estimate.

It depends largely upon the time of life at which the eye is lost. By binocular vision, says the Lancet, we fuse two slightly dissimilar images of an object, which are focussed upon the two retinas, and this enables us to estimate correctly the relative positions or distance of objects. This power, however, is not confined to those of us who possess two good eyes. The man who has been blind in one eye from infancy possesses it in almost equal perfection with the possessor of two eyes. For many other factors unite to compensate for the absence of stereoscopic vision. These are atmospheric and shadow effects, parallax and, above all, memory of what the shape of objects really is, according to knowledge which has been acquired in early years, largely by the sense of touch.

On the other hand, if one who possesses this faculty is suddenly deprived of it he will be considerably handicapped, especially at first. A woman may find she cannot pour from a teapot into a cup without spilling the tea. A hammerman may take some time before he can hit the nail on the head with his former accuracy; indeed, whether or not he can ever attain it again is doubtful.

The Human Hyena.

"How easy it is to fling a coin to a beggar!" philosophically said Professor Pate. "Thus you purchase relief from the sympathetic feeling aroused by his misery, but love is withheld. If you really love the beggar you would do more for him."

"Possibly," returned J. Fuller Gloom. "At any rate I have taken your little lecture so much to heart that hereafter I expect to carry with me small cakes of soap instead of coins, and to each measly mendicant who importunes me fling one cake, with the admonition that he wash his face therewith, so that on the morrow when I come by that way I can see how he looks and thus determine whether or not I can ever love him."—Kansas City Star.

Paris Craze for English Nurses.

The Bois de Boulogne (writes a special correspondent of Manchester Guardian) is a lovely scene. Besides United States soldiers riding and French soldiers walking, and members of the Polish legion with their square, floppy caps, one sees there numbers of children—French children, of course, but more than half of them had English nurses, and were speaking English to them. It is very noticeable, this fashion for English-trained nurses. The children's clothes are modeled much more on the lines of English children's clothes—bright-colored cloth coats and little beaver hats.

CHARLEY HAD BRIGHT IDEA

Probably the First Time He Had Ever Really Believed in Food Conservation.

Little Charley was bashful. He didn't like to meet all of his mother's aid colleagues, and he didn't care much for girl cousins at family reunions. In school he didn't even have the most common impulse to twist the hair of little Mary Jones in front of him, or even stick the brown braid in the inkwell. He was distinctly modest.

The family was out on a motor trip. They were nearing a city in eastern Indiana, and it was about noon, so naturally they thought a little about eating. This was the topic of discussion.

"Um," said the father, "there is a nice hotel in Main street."

Little Charley writhed. Eat in a hotel with people in it? It was bad enough to go in a hotel with people in it, but eat in a hotel with people in it—never.

The rest of the family didn't see it that way. They were for getting a semi-country meal in this little city. Finally, they decided to make for the hotel for sure.

Charley was in despair. He didn't know what to do. They were determined to go to the hotel and then——He had the idea!

"Papa," he said, weakly, "let's don't eat this noon."

"Well, why are you suggesting such a thing, anyway?"

"You see, um—ah, well, daddy, Mr. Wilson says to win the war, and Mr. Hoover says food will do it. Let's conserve!"—Indianapolis News.

WORLD HAS MUCH COCHINEAL

Little Probability That the Supply Will Fall Much Below the Demand.

In the first half of the last century the culture and growth of the cochineal insect was introduced, and so successfully carried out in various parts of the old world that the quantity yearly produced now rivals the whole amount obtained from Central America, the source from which all foreign supplies were first obtained. In 1831 the culture of the cochineal was commenced on the Canary islands, and the first crop consisted of only 8 pounds; in 1832, it was 120 pounds; in 1833, it had risen to 1,319; and in 1849, the enormous quantity of 800,000 pounds was exported from these islands, the greater part of which was sent to England and France. In 1845 the quantity of cochineal produced in Java, under the patronage of the Dutch government, mounted to 45,000 pounds. Under the auspices of the French government, plantations were commenced in Algeria, which promise to succeed admirably. Some specimens already exported are pronounced to be superior to the finest qualities from Mexico. Soils unfit for the cultivation of the vine, or potato, readily support the cactus, on which the cochineal insect feeds, while the insect can be more readily raised than the silkworm, and with less chances of loss.

Who'd 'a' Thought It?

That favorite of all "chowder" lovers—the clam—has now, we understand, a rival in the culinary field, and that no other than the humble barnacle, so long regarded merely in the light of a pest. A writer in Popular Mechanics Magazine says:

"The barnacle is being converted into soup and other forms of food, having taken its place beside clam chowder in various cafes and hotels in Southern California. The piling of the Pine Avenue pier at Long Beach is incrusted with more than 100 tons of these and other sea creatures, which are being stripped off and will be utilized for food. Here and at San Pedro canning plants are arranging to put up barnacles in large quantities. As the demand for barnacle soup increases, canning plants purpose to contract for the creatures removed from the bottoms of ships."

A Submarine Tunnel.

A submarine tunnel under the Shimonoseki Strait in Japan is to be started this year, and it is planned to complete it in 1928. The authority for the announcement is the chief of the construction bureau of the Japanese Government railways. It is estimated that the tunnel will cost $10,000,000. Two years will be devoted to studying the geological formation of the strait bed and drafting the general plan of work in preparation for the tunneling. Japan will send engineers to the United States and Europe to study the tunnelling achievement of the West. The length of the tunnel will be seven miles, of which one mile will be completely under sea.

SHE HAD NO PATIENCE LEFT

Wife's Stock of That Commodity Pretty Well Exhausted in Effort to Reform William.

A Chicago lawyer said at a banquet:

"Let me tell you a temperance story.

"A long, rangy woman said one day to a parson:

"'Parson, Bill was drunk again Saturday night.'

"But the parson answered in a soothing tone:

"'Dear sister, if you would try being patient with William! Patience and forbearance work miracles, and I have faith to believe that in dear William's case it would be even so.'

"But the long, rangy woman shook her head.

"'Looks to me,' she said, 'as if I'd tried patience and forbearance about long enough. Talkin' of forbearance, don't I go weeks at a time without speakin' to the cuss, no matter what he asks me? Yes, hull weeks, but it don't seem no good. Then, when it comes to patience, why, parson, I've locked him out of the house all night more oftener than I got fingers and toes, and time and again I've sewed him up in a sheet when he was full and walloped him with a rope till I jest fair dropped with tiredness; and I've bolted him in the henhouse three days runnin' in the patient hope he'd sign the pledge, but he wouldn't; and I've doused him all over with cold water on many a freezin' winter's night, and I've had him run in twice, and I've mixed vinegar with his booze so as to make him sick, and then waited with the patience of Job to see if he'd repent when he came round, but, parson, nothin' done no good. No siree, it'll take more than patience and forbearance to straighten that man out."

ADD "HORRORS OF WARFARE"

When the Army Captain and the Hospital Nurse Consult the Dictionary Together.

I dropped into a French hospital the other day to see if my men were all right. There is the daintiest little girl in the office. She buzzes around among the books and files and indices and things. She is very accommodating, too, and when the lieutenant doctor, who has a little English, is not in, she pilots you around the different wards. Did you ever notice an American when he talks to a foreigner and realizes that it does not take? First he tries shouting at the top of his lungs, and then he tries talking very slowly and distinctly. Not so when a French girl sees that she is missing. She seems to feel that if she keeps on getting closer, and coos it, you somehow just must understand. Now, isn't that too absurd? You stand very still so as not to frighten her away and look at her out of the corner of your eye, but you don't put your mind on your business. Of all the 'mologies that might interest you just then, ety has the poorest chance.

Of course, when I go to the hospital to see my men, I have to find out in the office where they all are, and of course I know the lieutenant doctor's dinner hour. I go in and she looks up and smiles. I say: "Smith." She says, "Smeeth?" I say, "Oui," and we both smile. I say, "John Smith." She says, "John Smeeth?" I say, "Oui," and we smile again. Then she plunges into a drawer of well-thumbed cards and in a moment comes up triumphant with a bit of pasteboard. "Mumps?" says she, which in French sounds like mumps in English. "Oui, mumps," say I, and we fairly beam.

Sometimes we get a hard one like measles, and then we resort to a dictionary. When you try to talk through a dictionary you never get anywhere if you take it turn about. You must both look together. One day we pursued a most elusive word through a very small dictionary. She got an arm around my shoulder before we had captured the third syllable. You see, don't you, where going to a hospital might become a habit?—Capt. Hill P. Wilson in K. U. Graduate Magazine.

"Hospitalized" a New Word.

A new war word has appeared which, unhappily, we are likely to hear very often in the future. The word is "hospitalized," says the Manchester Guardian. It is applied to soldiers who have been a long time in hospital, whose minds have lain fallow and have lost mental fiber. So far little has been done in an organized way to rectify this deterioration.

It is chiefly among officers where "hospitalization" is evident. In many cases young officers who have been seriously wounded and had a long convalescence have found, when they went back to the army or were invalided out and returned to their profession or business, that they were far from what they were before, their mental energy having weakened, and they were unable to grasp affairs.

Shop at Home, Buy Downtown.

"The war made a new kind of Christmas buyer," the clerk at one of the uptown stores said the other day. "They are not at all like the undecided, unpleasant hangers-on of former years, the women who come to annoy and annoy before they finally buy. Now they are brisk and alert. They know what they wish and buy it when they see it, without the usual quibbling and indecision of other years. I think a woman described it best when she said the other day:

"Last year I came downtown and shopped half a dozen days before I did any buying. This year I shop at home and then when I get downtown I buy."

SUCCESSFUL PICNIC AT MOUNT JULIAN

OVER $240 RAISED BY MEMBERS OF EDEN METHODIST CHURCH.

(Special Correspondence.)

Mount Julian, Aug. 20. A picnic held under the auspices of Eden Methodist Church on Wednesday, August 6, in Bruce Reid's grove was a gratifying success in every way. The weather was ideal for the occasion and a very large crowd gathered on the grounds in good time. Visitors were present from Peterborough, Lakefield, Warsaw, Dummer, Apsley and various Stoney Lake points. The Burleigh ladies sustained their usual reputation for quality and excellence of cooking for after a large crowd had partaken of dinner and supper of the choicest viands, consisting of potatoes, roast beef, salads, pies, cake, bread, butter, pickles, etc. Several lovely cakes were sold by auction. Messrs. Chas. Lauder and V. Shewen collected the money at the table while the energetic ladies of the church supervised the tables in general.

Messrs. Howard Reid, Wm. Lone and Bruce Reid were in charge of the refreshment booth and are deserving of special mention for their energetic efforts throughout the day to make a complete success.

Mrs. Wm. Mathews was in charge of the sale of work and Mr. William Crarey was in charge of the grab bag, which attracted young and old and caused considerable mirth. A quilt donated by Mrs. Geo. Mathews and a story fruit cake donated by Mrs. Lauder were sold and realized a nice sum. The full amount raised was about $240.

While supper was in progress a short program was rendered, consisting of two beautiful duets by Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Beck, a song, "Tim Blake," sang by Rev. Mr. Beck by special request, a chorus, "I Am Coming Home," by Rev. Mr. Beck and ladies of the church, and several musical selections on the Victrolia by Mr. J. Stuart, of Peterborough. In the evening the crowd dispersed feeling satisfied that a very enjoyable day had been spent by all present.

CONDOLENCE IN DEATH OF LATE JNO. WATKINS

PETERBORO CHEESE BOARD REMEMBER WITH RESPECT PIONEER BUYER.

At the Cheese Board meeting this morning Messrs. J. Coughlin and Jno Williams moved a resolution of condolence with the relatives of Mr John Watkins of Belleville, who passed away August 12th.

The resolution was adopted unanimously by a standing vote.

The late John Watkins was a pioneer cheese buyer in Ontario and for years the only buyer between Kingston and Toronto. He was at one time a familiar figure at the Peterborough Cheese Board, some of the older members remember him with a full measure of respect and esteem. Unfortunately deceased's business enterprises did not meet with success in his later days, and he lost all he had in cheese.

He was never married.

NOTICE

As there have been several cases of small pox in the township I would recommend that all children and adults who have not been vaccinated be vaccinated at once. This would apply particularly to school children. If the disease spreads we may have to ask for a certificate of vaccination before children attend school.

CLUBHOUSE FOR THE TORONTO VETERANS

AGREEMENT BETWEEN G.W.V.A. AND CITIZENS' LEAGUE WAS SIGNED TODAY.

Toronto, August 20. The agreement between the Citizens' Repatriation League and the G. W. V. A. respecting the allotting of $200,000 to the G. W. V. A. for the purpose of building a club house was signed today. It is understood the members of the G. W. V. A. are not satisfied with the appointment of the trustees. There are only five representatives of the G. W. V. A. on the board of trustees and nine representatives from different associations. The G. W. V. A. mebmers claim that in this way they can be outvoted at all times and therefore their representatives on the board will practically have their hands tied.

CIVIC RECEPTION FOR VISITING GRENADIER BAND IS CALLED OFF

Visitors Cannot Arrive Before 5.30 in Evening—Too Late for Formal Welcome to City—Programme For Concert Friday Night

Capt. A. Williams, conductor of the famous Grenadier Guards' Band which will give a concert in the Grand Opera House Friday night, has written Manager Dahn stating that owing to a change in the arrangements, it will be impossible for the band to reach here before 5.40 p.m., by Grand Trunk train Friday. The hour of arrival previously announced was 3.21 p.m., the band at that time expecting to come by the C.P.R.

Owing to this change it has been deemed advisable to abandon the idea of extending a civic reception to the band as there would not be sufficient time for such a function before the concert. The band of the G.W.V.A. will probably meet the visitors and play them to the Empress Hotel.

The Montreal Gazette thus describes the concert given by the band in that city:

In spite of cold and threatened rain, there was a crowd of about 2,500 people at the M.A.A.A. grounds at Westmount last evening to greet the Grenadier Guards' Band. In spite of the difficulties of playing in competition with the explosive effects of a series of passing trains, the band succeeded in giving a concert that excited the audience to unwonted enthusiasm, to such an extent that Captain Williams, the bandmaster, had to practically double his programme, almost every number being encored, while, if the audience had had its way, there would have been much more.

It was evident that the audience was in exactly the mood that Sousa, during his recent visit here, described —hungry for military and patriotic music. Every time the Grenadier Guards played anything of that nature they were applauded to the echo, especially Capt. Williams' own Naval Patrol music, "Britain's First Line," a medley of patriotic airs, combining several Canadian national tunes, cleverly combined, which greatly caught the fancy of the audience. Captain Williams was quick to feel the pulse of his audience, and in the numerous encores included a good deal of military and patriotic music.

The mere sight of the band, in its gorgeous trappings of scarlet and gold, with the traditional charm of the Grenadier Guards' uniforms, and the splendid display they presented on the improvised bandstand, was a treat to a gathering, surfeited by many years of war and drab khaki, while the music they gave was of a character to stir the pulse of the most lethargic—especially when they introduced their own historic march, "The British Grenadier," which was given with a vim peculiarly their own.

The rest of the regular programme was of a very eclectic nature, admirably calculated to please an outdoor audience, as well as to display the crisp British band style, and the perfect instrumentation of the organization.

Winterbottom's arrangement of Weber melodies was beautifully played, the Oberon music charming the audience with its rhythmic lilt. The 2nd Peer Gynt Suite was excellently rendered, the work of the oboe and flute in the final Solveg's song movement being beautifully done. The most ambitious effort of the evening was Liszt's First Rhapsodie, which is not often heard as band music, and proved splendidly effective.

The familiar "Carmen" and "William Tell" numbers awoke their customary enthusiasm, while the cornet solos by Sergt. A. Mayes evoked unanimous encores.

The Program

The following is the program for the concert Friday night:

CHEESE SOLD AT 25 5-8C THIS MORN

COMPETITION NOT VERY KEEN AND WHOLE BOARD WENT TO H. R. FREE, TORONTO.

PRICE IS AT SHIPPING POINT

THIRTEEN HUNDRED AND SIXTY-FIVE CHEESE BOARDED — BOARD ADJOURNS 3 WEEKS.

Thirteen hundred and sixty-five cheese were boarded at the local Cheese Board in the Bank of Montreal chambers this morning.

The whole board went to H. R. Fee for Toronto at 25 5-8c.

Not much keenness was shown by buyers, except in the case of Mr. Free, who remarked that he had to get cheese somehow.

The bidding started at 25c at shipping point, and the bid by Free of 25 5-8c for selections at shipping point was accepted by sellers. He selected the whole boarding.

The others buyers present were G. A. Gillespie for Peterborough Milk Products, Limited, W. Weir, of the Ingersoll Packing Co.; J. Coak for Belleville; Johnston, for Flavelles, Lindsay, and Kerr, for Montreal.

The Board adjourned for three weeks.

BUSINESS CHANGES HANDS

Peterborough Shoe Store Taken Over by J. Schwarty—G. Erster Retires.

Mr. L. Erster has disposed of his interest in the Peterborough Shoe Store, 291 George street, New Lundy Block, opposite the Grand Opera House. Mr. J. Schwartz, who has purchased this desirable business, has had a successful experience in the boot and shoe and other lines in Toronto extending over many years. He comes to Peterborough with a reputation for shrewd buying which enables him to serve customers with quality footwear at pocket-saving prices. His motto is "dependability and efficient service for all—men, women and children. And he intends applying to this business the same business integrity and methods which made Mr. Erster, his predecessor, and his store popular with a large clientele of customers.

Mr. Erster does not intend leaving Peterborough, but plans engaging in the jobbing line. He takes this opportunity of thanking many friends and patrons whose custom made possible his success with the Peterborough Shoe Store, and he recommends his successor, Mr. Schwartz, as one who will maintain the store at the same high standard of reliability and live-and-let-live prices for which this shoe house has enjoyed a reputation in the past.

TEMPLE BAND TO PLAY IN PARK THURSDAY

CHANGE OF DATE DUE THE COMING OF THE GRENADIERS.

Owing to the visit of the Grenadier Guards' Band to this city and by kind permission of the Chairman of the Parks Committee, the Temple Band will give a band concert in Victoria Park tomorrow evening, instead of Friday.

As this is the last of the series of concerts to be rendered this season by the Temple band, a special programme has been arranged, which promises to be the best of the season.

BETTER THAN EVER

Local Merchants Well Satisfied With Dollar Day This Summer.

Attendance from the country north, south, east and west as well as by citizens of this city indicate a record dollar day today. Last night the streets were crowded with eager bargain seekers, carefully inspecting store windows for bargains on the morrow. Again today the large number on the streets and in the stores indicated that a great number are taking advantage of the bargains presented by the local merchants.

THE CARE AND UPKEEP OF YOUR CAR

There are several things carbon will do to an engine. First, it may cause a knock, if it is very heavy. Second, it causes your engine to overheat, which means loss of power. Third, it causes premature explosion. That is your engine explodes at the wrong time, one cylinder works against the other, causing loss of power. Fourth, your valves, normally, rise only one-fourth inch above the surface, so if there is one-eighth inch of carbon, your exhaust escape is practically cut off. Sometimes all of the symptoms mentioned show up; at other times probably just loss of power and overheating.

There are several ways of cleaning out the carbon. One way is by scraping, another, by burning, and there are so called "carbon removers." The latter are not to be recommended at all, as they act like coal oil, softening the carbon to the consistency of honey, which gets down around the rings and solidifies, causing the rings to "freeze" solid, scoring the cylinders. Scraping is good if done thoroughly but takes too much time. Now, as to carbon burning it makes no difference how bad the engine is carboned up, as soon as the oxygen hits it it immediately turns to carbon dioxide gas and passes away, leaving the interior as clean as when new.

We burn Carbon by the Oxygen process also weld cast iron, steel, brass and aluminum parts, welding fenders frames, cylinder blocks, etc. Millard's Bicycle Shop, 225 Hunter St., Phone 2841.

TRADES COUNCIL VOTES TO BACK UP VETERANS IN THEIR DEMANDS

Case of Sergt. Blade Discussed at Meeting of Labor Men Last Night—Recent Whipping Case to be Reported to the Attorney-General.

The Trades and Labor Council will look up the demands of the G.W.V.A. that no member of the Police Force shall be allowed to engage in other lines of work. A motion to that effect was adopted at the regular meeting last night. This passed, after an amendment had been voted down, a motion providing for the appointment of a committee to interview the Police Commission as to whether such double service was against the rules of the department. The majority of the delegates appeared of the opinion that this fact had been already established.

The Whipping Case

It was also decided to lay before the Attorney General a report of the recent Police Court case when a boy of six and other of nine years was sentenced by Magistrate Dumble to receive, the first five and the other, ten lashes, to be administered by a policeman. The special committee appointed to look into this matter reported that the mother of the elder boy had told them that she had consented to having her boy lashed only when Magistrate Dumble said that is she refused to do so he would send the little fellow to the reform school for one year.

The Case of the Post Office

The case of one of the letter carriers acting as motor man on the street cars during off hours was taken up. This matter is also before the G.W.V.A., who have filed a complaint with Postmaster Edgar.

One of the delegates from the Letter Carriers' Union stated last night that the member complained of is himself a returned soldier. He is only a temporary member of the post office staff and his compensation is $2.50 a day. He has a wife and children to support and has had sickness in the family. He does not take the place of a regular man when he acts as motor man but simply fills in for some employe who is ill or absent for any other reason. On the open air cars operated during the summer he is generally the motor man. Supt McCann favors returned soldiers in filling positions on the road. The letter carrier acted as substitute in the days of the war when men were scarce and has been retained in that capacity. Often he does not work on the cars more than four or five hours a week and his own union has no objection.

Is Outside Labor Employed

One delegate complained that although he is a ratepayer he is unable to get work on the new bridge. He charged that non-union men and outsiders were being employed, contrary to agreement. This matter will be dealt with at a meeting of the Laborer's Union Monday night, and Business Agent Tooms will see the Russell-Townsend people with regard to the complaint.

MAIL MAY BE SENT FROM PETERBORO TO STATES, VIA NEW YORK, BY AIRPLANE

Must Be Posted in Post Office by Midnight Sunday, August 24th.

Concurrent with the visit to Toronto of His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, the Postmaster General has authorized the Aero Club of Canada to convey a letter mail, containing ordinary matter only, by aeroplane, from Toronto to New York, which will be placed at the General Post Office, Toronto, on Monday, August 25th.

All letters enclosed in this mail are to be fully prepaid, both as to postage and war tax must comply with the postal regulations of Canada, and will be forwarded only at the risk of the senders, who are also required to endorse on the address side of letters, the words "via aeroplane," as an indication of their willingness to accept those conditions.

The Aero Club of Canada are issuing special adhesive stickers, commemorative of the Frst International Mail Service, between Canada and the United States, price $1,00 each, the use of which has been approved of by the Department, on condition that these stickers are positively affixed in accordance with the Postal Regulations, to the back of the envelopes.

A supply of Aero Club commemorative stickers will be on hand at the local post office Friday morning, and will be on sale at the postage stamp wicket.

Letters intended for this airplane despatch must be posted in time to be forwarded to the Toronto Post Office not later than 12.00 midnight Sunday, August 24th.

Ordinary letters fully prepaid and bearing Aero Club commorative stickers on their back, addressed for delivery in any part of the United States, may be forwarded, but if addressed other than to New York city, letters should be superscribed on the upper left hand corner of the fore or address side of the envelopes with the words "Via New York."

Letters to be sent by aeroplane service must be handed in at a designated wicket and should not under any circumstances be posted in letter drops or street letter boxes.

The only previous long-distance aeroplane service for Peterborough was the transportation of Mr. Reg. Turner from Peterborough to Toronto this summer.

Our Empire's Losses

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, August 21—(Reuter's.) — Revised figures of the losses of the forces of the British Empire in the recent war indicate as follows: Killed, 656,853; wounded, 2,040,520; missing, 354,578.

POSITION OF RUSS. GOVT. ALARMING

MANY SIBERIAN TROOPS DESERT AND ADVANCE OF BOLSHEVIKI UNCHECKED.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Tokio, Japan, Aug. 21.—The Russian Government at Omsk has transferred its gold reserve and rchives eastward to Irkutsk, according to apparently reliable reports received here.

Other information from Siberia indicates that the Omsk Government's position is growing weaker instead of stronger, because of the advance of Bolsheviki and desertion of Siberian troops.

FRENCH AIRPLANE CONSIDERED LOST

CARRIED EIGHT PASSENGERS AND NOW SOME TIME UNREPORTED.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, August 21.—The French airplane Goliath, which has not been seen since it left Mogador, Morocco, for Bakar last Saturday morning, generally was given up as lost in aviation circles today.

The Farman company, builders of the airplane, which carried eight passengers, was still without news of the machine.

Vaughan township will give an official welcome to returned soldiers in September.

FIFTY THOUSAND CANADIAN RAILWAY WORKMEN AFFECTED BY CONFERENCE

Decisions of American Workers on Award of U. S. Railway Administration Board Apply to Can. Pac. and Grand Trunk Employes—Montreal Anxi usly Awaiting Results.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Montreal, Aug. 21.—The result of conferences in Washington, between Walter D. Hines, director Gen. of the United States Railway Administration, and heads of various railway brotherhoods, and federated shop trades, is being awaited here with much interest.

Fifty Thousand Affected

As soon as the decisions are make known in Washington, negotiations will be opened here between Canadian Railway War Boards, and the Executive committee of the Canadian Division of Federated shop trades, which negotiations will affect fifty thousand workmen on all Railways of Canada.

These negotiations will be to a great extent based on terms offered by the United States Railroad Administration, to workers on the United States Railways.

George Hodge of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and James Coleman of the Grand Trunk Railway are in Washington, attending conference

CHICAGO RACE TROUBLE SAID TO BE MERELY SMOULDERING

May Flame Forth Again Under Slightest Stimulus—Public Officials Go Before Grand Jury in Recent Race Riots Sheriff Peters Quite Pessimistic.

Chicago, August 21.—Public officials and social workers were summoned to appear before the grand jury to explain causes of the recent race riots. The jury is understood to be anxious to get at the causes of the trouble with a view to making recommendations that will assist in preventing their recurrence.

Sheriff Peters was the first witness called. He remained in the jury room for half an hour.

"This is a gigantic problem," he declared, after the jury had excused him. "The race trouble is now merely smoldering, I believe, and unless care and precautions are employed to preserve order it may flame forth under the slightest stimulus. It is my belief that the real cause of the outbreaks in Chicago was the series of disturbances in other cities, particularly Washington, which brought the possibilities of race strife sharply to the minds of those who were willing to stir up trouble."

Aldermen Are Subpoenaed.

Half a dozen alderman were subpoenaed as witnesses. These included R. R. Jackson and L. B. Anderson, colored representatives from the second ward. Joseph B. McDonough, alderman from the fifth ward, was also called. Ald. McDonough was among those most insistent in the early stages of the rioting that the militia should be called out to restore order. Ald. T. F. Byrne, J. F. Kovarik and Robt. Mulcahy have also been subpoenaed.

Judge Stewart of the Municipal Court was served with a subpoena. Judge Stewart handled the cases of a number of the rioters, and heard their accounts of the how the trouble started.

Among the prominent colored persons who will be brought before the jury are Jesse Binga, real estate operator and banker, and Ida Wells Barnett, a social worker. Arthur Burrage Farwell also expects to tell the investigating body what he thinks of the situation.

Will Make Full Inquiry.

There is no prospect that other indictments will be returned immediately against participants in the riots. tI is thought the examination of witnesses subpoenaed will occupy a day or two, as the jury is believed to have in mind a thorough inquiry into al lthe causes and phases of the disturbance. It is expected that other public officials will be called as witnesses.

BIG OVATION FOR GEN. CURRIE TODAY

MONTREAL STREETS LINED WITH CHEERING THOUSANDS.

TWELVE GENERALS IN PARADE

SIR ARTHUR PRESENTED WITH ADDRESS BY THE CITY.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Montreal Aug 21—No less than twelve Generals, probably the greatest array of Generals ever together in Canada, took part in the parade and demonstration today, here, in honor of General Sir Arthur Currie, who commanded Canada's forces in France.

Gaily Decorated Streets

Gen. Currie was given a great ovation at all points on the route. The streets were crowded and cheering was enthusiastic.

The whole city was gay with bunting and there was a general half holiday. This afternoon Sir Arthur was presented with an address by the city.

Lady Currie and their young son were spectators of the proceedings. The weather was ideal.

SURE TO REDUCE COST OF LIVING

SUCH WOULD BE EFFECT OF LEAGUE OF NATIONS, SAYS PRESIDENT WILSON.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Aug. 21.—That acceptance of the covenants of the League of Nations, as written, would certainly within the near future reduce the cost of living, both in the United States and abroad, through restoration of Commerce and production to normal, was the opinion of President Wilson, as expressed in a letter to a Member of the House Representatives today.

H N AND AMERICANS CLASH

Sailors Engage in Fight and German Seaman Wounded.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Copenhagen, August 21.—Collisions occurred between German and American sailors on Tuesday at Deut Ahrwasser, near Danzig, and resulted in the wounding of several civilians and one German seaman, according to Danzig despatches received here today.

Shelburne station was entered and a couple of shipments of liquor stolen.

HOT ON TRAIL OF MEXICAN BANDITS

ONE KILLED AND TWO CAPTURED SINCE AMERICAN TRROPS CROSSED RIO GRANDE.

BANDIT SHOT BY U.S. AVIATORS

IN ACTIVE CO-OPERATION WITH TROOPS OF MEXICAN GOVERNMENT.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Marfa, Texas, Aug. 21.—One bandit was believed to have been killed and two others made prisoners since the American troops crossed the Rio Grande River into Mexico Tuesday morning. Neither man was Renteria, the bandit leader.

Killed by Aviators.

One Mexican was killed Tuesday when American aviators returned their fire on seeing the three bandits near the border. One of them was seen to fall with his horse.

Still on the Trail.

The American troops slept last night on the trails of the bandits after losing them Tuesday in torrential rains and picking up their trails again yesterday. They are co-operating with General Pruneda, with approximately 250 Carrand troops.

WILL NOT CONTEST FARMERS' NOMINEE

LEADER KING SAYS HE WILL NOT RUN IN GLENGARRY.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Aug. 21. Liberal Leader McKenzie King said this morning that the question of his constituency would be brought up at a Liberal convention on August 26. He had no statement to make following the nomination of another candidate in Glengarry by the United Farmers, but intimated that he thought a contest by him against the Farmers' Candidate was inadvisable. D. D. McKenzie will continue a Liberal Leader in the House of Commons, during the coming session.

REMOVE CIVILIANS FROM NORTH PRUSSIA

MINISTRY OF SHIPPING ASSIGNS TASK TO SEVERAL VESSELS.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 21—Several vessels have been assigned by the Ministry of Shipping to the task of removing from Northern Russia all civilians who wish to leave before the British troops are withdrawn from that region.

Several thousand children and aged and infirm persons will be taken first to points on the Murmansk coast, and later will be transported to southern Russia.

EMPLOYES NIAGARA, ST. KITS AND TORONTO RAILWAY STRUCK TODAY

Went Out at Four O'clock This Morning in Protest Against Dismissal of Conductors—Cobalt Miners Increase Demands and Will Hold Out Till End.

St. Catharines, Aug. 21.—As threatened, all employes of the Niagara-St. Catharines and Toronto Railway, in every department, went on a strike at four o'clock this morning, in protest against the refusal of W. Oliver, general superintendent of the company, to produce to the Union Committee his evidence for dismissal of several conductors, including to Union officials.

Much inconvenience and disruption of business has resulted from this strike.

COBALT TROUBLEs CONTINUES

Strikers Will Increase Demands and Hold Out Until Granted.

Cobalt, Aug. 21.—Following the failure of all negotiations with managers for a settlement of the miner's strike, officials of the Union now declare that the men will increase their demands and will stand out, every man, until they are granted by the employers.

NATIONAL SAVING OF DAYLIGHT ENDS

NOV. 1 CANADIAN CLOCKS WILL BE SET BACK ONE HOUR.

THIS ACTION MADE NECESSARY

BY REPEAL OF DAYLIGHT SAVING ACT IN THE UNITED STATES.

Ottawa, Aug. 21.—Legislation by the United States Congress repealing the daylight saving law in force in that country will have no effect in Canada. Canadian railways, because of the traffic relations between this country and the republic to the south adopted Summer time last spring in order to make their time schedules conform to those of American lines. A number of Canadian municipalities also adopted Summer time. Had the United States Congress called for immediate abandonment of Summer time some confusion might have resulted in this country. The Canadian railways and Canadian Municipalities will now simply follow the programme they have laid down and reset their clocks in the autumn.

Repeal of the United States legislation over the President's veto, viewed in conjunction fith the attitude of the Canadian House of Commons last session, would indicate that daylight saving on a national or international basis is at an end on the North American continent for some time to come. In the Canadian House of Commons representatives of rural constituencies were strongly opposed to daylight saving, and their view prevailed in this country. Of course large municipalities have passed daylight saving bylaws effective within their own borders. They could do so again, but their course would likely be in some measure influenced by the action of the railways.

MASKED BANDITS HOLD UP TRAIN

NO. 7 PASSENGER FROM CINCINATTI TO MONTGOMERY ROBBED.

GENERAL MEETING BOARD OF TRADE

PUBLIC ACTIVITIES AS A CIVIC AND COMMERCIAL BODY TO BE INAUGURATED.

SUPPER SERVED AT SIX O'CLOCK

SPECIAL PROGRAM TO PROMOTE ACQUAINTANCE, ALSO ENTERTAINING FEATURES.

Public activities by the Peterborough Board of Trade as a civic and commercial body will be inaugurated at a general meeting to be held on Thursday evening, Sept. 4.

The council and officers will report upon the progress of executive and associated work and several important committees will submit reports bearing upon the advancement of the city.

The house committee are arranging a special program to promote acquaintances and thus stimulate a growing desire for more sympathetic and practical co-operation.

The board room will be open at 8 o'clock and supper is to be served each half hour to members by prior request. An interesting program of entertainment is also being prepared.

The general meeting will convene at 8 o'clock sharp, and by the invitation and courtesy of Principal McKone will be held in the class room of the business college on the upper floor of the Dominion Bank building, corner of George and Simcoe streets.

This is the first general meeting since the formal organization, and President J. J. Turner asks every member to be present.

HAROLD MACDONALD CHARGED WITH DEFAULTING FROM 93RD

Received Suspended Sentence in Police Court This Morning.

Harold Macdonald was brought from Toronto and appeared in Police Court this morning charged with deserting from the 93rd Battalion. He pleaded guilty, but threw himself on the mercy of the court on account of the circumstances which caused his desertion and which he told clearly in a straight-forward manner.

He enlisted in the 93rd Battalion here and trained with that unit for some time. At the time his battalion was due to sail for overseas his wife fell very sick suffering from the result of an operation. She did not wish him to go overseas then so he deserted and remained at home until she recovered her health. Then thinking it his duty to re-inlist, he joined up with the navy under the name of H. J. McMillan. He changed his name so as to avoid detection as a deserter. He served in the British navy 19 months in a mine-sweeping squadron, after which he received his honorable discharge and was invalided home. He has a wife and two children.

Macdonald was dismissed on suspended sentence on agreement to pay $16.35 costs.

Durham G. W. V. A. voted $50 to a memorial hall.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

NO CANDIDATE YET.

IT IS ANNOUNCED today that the provincial election will probably be held early in October and that date is only a few weeks away. As yet the Conservatives have not put a candidate in the field, and no move has apparently been made to call a nominating convention. We are convinced that the members of the executive committee are acting advisedly in this matter, and that collectively and individually they have good and sufficient reasons for their attitude. Still, the rank and file are becoming uneasy, and if the party is caught unprepared for the contest there will be no hesitation in the matter of placing the blame.

RACE RIOTS AT HOME AND ABROAD.

ONLY A FEW DAYS AGO the city of Chicago was disgraced by riots between the whites and blacks in which men were killed and wounded in open warfare on the public streets. There are in the prison cells of Chicago today a number of men awaiting trial trial on the charge of murder. Some of these men took so active part in the riots, but it is held that they were the real instigators of the trouble. The man who inspires another to commit crime is rather worse than his instrument who actually perpetrates it. That fact is recognized in the law of Illinois. Some years ago five anarchists were hanged in Chicago for murders that were the results of their pernicious teachings, not the actual work of their hands.

The Chicago riots were the result of the manipulation of the politician who was anxious to secure the votes of the negroes. The latter were inflamed with the idea that they were denied common justice. Bloodshed was the outcome.

Race riots are not entirely unknown in Canada. One of serious proportions occurred recently in Montreal, and it can be traced to the agitator whose only gospel is the setting of race against race and creed against creed. Chicago in the eighties throttled anarchy in its cradle by the execution referred to, and the followers of that dangerous cult were silent for years after. Canada's only hope for internal harmony can be realized in no other way. The man who stirs up strife is a dangerous element in a community, whether he be an illiterate alien or a silk-hatted member of Parliament. If the former is to be deported because of the mischief he creates, some equally drastic measures must be adopted to save the nation from the menace of the other.

A QUESTION OF FIGURING.

FIVE FARMERS in Washington went to a moderate priced hotel and ate a meal consisting of steak, potatoes, corn, bread and butter, and coffee, which cost them eleven dollars. They figured up the cost of the materials on the farm and found them to be eighty-two cents. Once upon a time an insurance company tried to settle for the loss of a painting on the value of the canvas and the pigments, which amounted to but a few cents, although as a work of art it was valued at some thousands of dollars. A lawyer may write a letter to a newspaper on behalf of a client and charge the latter as much as $10. It would not be fair to estimate the price of the work on the value of the material employed in its composition, which would amount on the most liberal computation to only a trifle. The expert service of the lawyer must be taken into account and the years of training required to fit him for the performance of such a task.

The five farmers appeared to have figured on the bare cost of the articles on which they refreshed themselves. Right at the start we are disposed to challenge their figures. Five hearty farmers served with portions of beef steak is no light matter of expense. Reckoning the cost of this portion of the meal at the price which the farmer receives for his live steers today, the eighty-two cents would not be sufficient to meet that item alone. Then here is the expert service of the butcher, and all the other middlemen to be taken into consideration, all an essential part of the economic plan before the meat attains its final objective by being assimilated by a human body.

The farmers in question went to a modern hotel, where the service was costly, rather more so under present day conditions than the viands actualy served. The proprietor has to figure on his expenses, the rent or the interest on the money which he has tied up in his business. This is something the farmer seldom takes into account even when making computations with regard to his own financial standing.

For the present high cost of provisions in hotels and restaurants the consuming public are largely to blame. They insist on the best and the best costs money. In the good old days when shirtsleeve etiquette was not regarded as a social offence, when the service was simple, the courses and dishes few, the price of everything was not so excessive. And still people lived and prospered. They were fairly happy, too. At least, they were democratic, not the slaves of social codes.

Probably in the Washington hotel in question the dining-room was banked with expensive flowers and an orchestra of many pieces discoursed jazz music for the delectation of the patrons. Flowers and music cost money at present rates. This the farmers, it would appear, did not take into their calculations. The modern mortal insists upon a certain amount of style in his daily life. Then let him pay for what he demands, which is furnished him in so generous measure, and cease his diatribes on the high cost of living.

Served under lowlier conditions, with less of fanciful trimmings, this meal could have been provided for less than one-third of what it actually cost, and still the hotelkeeper's profits would have been at least as great. In the modern hotel in Washington, Peterborough or elsewhere, as a rule the actual cost of the viands provided is less than that of the service upon which the patrons insist or they will go elsewhere. One waiter cannot serve satisfactorily more than four or five diners. In the old days one sufficed for an entire roomful. In that age of free and easy social democracy every man was his own attendant, and if he did not see what he wanted, helped himself without murmur to something else.

ELGIN COUNTY'S SOLOMON.

MR FRANK HUNT, county magistrate in Elgin, with his home in St. Thomas, has helped to make that district famous. His decisions on the bench have been quoted the country over. No magistrate in Ontario has received more frequent honorable mention in the newspapers, metropolitan and provincial. He seems to combine in his own person the wisdom of Solomon with the insight of a Daniel, and can read human nature even as the astronomer takes his lessons from the stars. Mr. Hunt may not be an expert in legal lore, but he has a head filled with hard sense, and that equipment seems to serve the purpose admirably on all intricate points that in the course of his professional duties confront him.

In his young days Mr. Hunt was a blacksmith, and there were no better in his day and generation. He was persuaded to become editor of the St. Thomas Journal, and his trenchant style of dealing with the events of the day is still recalled with general admiration. Later he accepted public office, which change of pursuit may be indifferently regarded as an advancement or retrogression. Anyway in his new sphere he has made good.

Magistrate Hunt's latest innovation in the dispensing of justice has to do with reckless auto drivers who infest the rural roads under his jurisdiction. He has special traffic policemen on the job who are instructed to be vigilant. The offenders are then fined according to the dimensions of their trangressions. All who travel at the rate of from thirty to forty miles an hour are fined $5; if they attain between forty and fifty miles an hour they contribute $10 to the county treasury, while those who exceed the fifty-mile rate are given the financial limit allowed by law. According to their offences all are judged, a system that appears to lack neither scriptural warrant nor humanity's approval based on a sense of justice.

Elgin county appears to have a cadi big enough to recognize the fact that laws were made for the benefit of mankind and that man was not created for the sole purpose of being made the victim of human enactment, the mere sport of the legislator, the subject of the official who may be clothed in a little brief authority and who, mistaking his functions and with an exaggerated idea of his duties, makes the most of his position. It is this theory, practically applied, that has made Magistrate Hunt of St. Thomas one of the most esteemed of present-day arbiters.

OPINIONS OF OTHER EDITORS.

YOUR OWN CASE.

(Galt Reporter.)

If you are charging too much for what you sell, don't blame the other fellow for the high cost of living.

A PESSIMIST.

(Kingston Standard.)

If the white-washing process goes on much further it will eventually be shown that the real profiteers are the public.

AN INSULT.

(Ottawa Journal.)

It was an envious Hamilton man who remarked that this week Ottawa would be inhabited by people who stuff napkins in their collars and drink, with a loud noise, out of the fingerbowls.

WILY CHINA.

(Portland, Me., Eastern Argus.)

It would prove interesting if China would tell the world why Shantung is considered so valuable now. It did not seem so attractive to China when she gave it into the keeping of Germany.

A LEADER NEEDED.

(Kingston Whig.)

What Canada needs, then, to cope with this situation is a leader who will do as President Wilson has done. It needs a man at the head of affairs who will subordinate everything else to the solution of the problem of the high cost of living. That is a big task, but it should be tackled without any delay.

New Pension Act Effective Sept. 1

The announcement from Ottawa that Bill 158 or the "Pension Act" as it will be known, has finally become law, should be received with satisfaction everywhere.

The special committee, appointed early in the last Parliamentary session to prepare a bill dealing with war pensions, obtained from every quarter, expert evidence dealing with the various aspects of present day pension requirements. The evidence submitted, after careful sifting, was embodied in various recommendations to Parliment, many of which are now reflected in the new Act.

Canadian Pensions have, since early in the war, been considerably higher than those paid in any other country, and the new Act contains convincing proof of Canada's intention to maintain this aspect.

It should be noted that the Act does not become effective until the "first day of the second month following its sanction," and will therefore come into operation on September 1st, 1919.

The clause which probably will be most widely welcomed is that which provides for the granting of a bonus, for one year, to the lower ranks. A twenty per cent. increase—intended to offset the present high cost of living—is allowed for ex-privates, and approximately a thirteen per cent. increase for those who held the rank of sergeant, or a corresponding rank in the naval forces. Thus to the total disability pension of $600.00 per annum for an ex-private there will be added a bonus of $120.00, payable for one year only, making a total of $720.00. The totally disabled ex-sergeant's pension of $637.50 is similarly increased to $720.00 by the addition of the thirteen per cent. bonus previously referred to.

An substantial increase in the pension for the first orphan child of a deceased soldier is also provided for. Under the new schedule such a child will be entitled to an award of $360.00 per annum instead of $288.00 as at present. Where there is more than one orphan child in a family, pension for the second child will be at the rate of $240.00 per annum, and at the rate of $192.00 per annum for the third and each subsequent child. Pensions for orphans are usually paid to a guardian for administration, the Board of Pension Commissioners being responsible that fit and proper persons are appointed to act in this capacity.

It is hoped that this Act, based on actual experience with pension problems both in this and other countries, will be broad enough in its scope to effectively provide for all matters connected with pensions for several years to come.

Two Important Clauses.

There are two important clauses, 20 and 44 in the new Act, which will be of special interest to the veteran. They are as follows:

20.—"Accounts for fees or charges for services rendered with respect of any application for a pension shall be submitted to the commission for approval, and shall not be collectable unless and until the commission shall have approved of them."

44.—"Any person who collects or attempts to collect any fees or charges for services rendered with respect of any application for a pension, the amount of which fees or charges has not been approved by the commission, shall be guilty of an offence, and shall be liable on summary conviction to imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months, or to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or to both imprisonment and fine."

EDITOR'S MAIL

MR. WEARING AND THE LEADER

Editor Review: In perusing your issue of August 14th I noticed a communication from Mr. Joseph Wearing, in which he lauds Mr. Mackenzie King to the skies. We can all easily see that Mr. Wearing is as proud of the new leader as the youth is of his first long trousers. He tells us about Mr. King's first qualities, those qualities which Sir Wilfrid Laurier never possessed. Now, Mr. Editor, comparisons are odious, so I will leave that issue with Mr. Wearing and Mr. King. I will not, by digging up argument, renew the sadness of the friends of that one whose voice is stilled.

But when Mr. Wearing refers to Mr. Burnham, then, sir, my hat goes into the ring. I will tell Mr. Wearing that if every member did his duty as well as Mr. Burnham, there would be no need of two parties, any more than they would be needed in a church. Now, I don't live in Mr Burnham's county. I don't know the man. I never saw him. But I do know this much about him, and would like to call Mr. Wearing's attention to it: Who stood for the interests of the common people when the [illegible] battle was on down there in Ottawa? Mr. Burnham grabbed the battle-ax. He waded right in, and, much to his credit, killed that issue and buried it into the lower depths of darkness.

Again, I would ask Mr. Wearing who stood for the common people when the labor unrest question was before the House? Mr. Burnham jumped right out on the floor of Parliament and he told the Minister of Labor what the cause was, in very short order. He did not need a commission to inquire into the cause. The cause was simply that the laboring man was under paid, that he should not receive less than $5 a day, and even at that, with the cost of living, he could not provide for sickness or old age.

In conclusion, here's that Canada's public men, each and all, will do their best and, like at our country raisings—"all together, boys—lift."

A READER.

THE CITIZENS' LIBERTY LEAGUE

Editor Review: Will you allow me a little space to reply to J. C. Smith's letter in this evening's issue of your valuable journal. It is a fair specimen of the lying unscrupulous methods of the prohibitionists who try to impose on the public by quoting scripture and yet will not be honest.

The Citizens' Liberty League is not a scheme to help the liquor traffic. If your correspondent had taken the trouble to enquire, he would have known that fact. The League will not accept support in any shape or form from the liquor traffic people. It is opposed to the return of the old bar system with its evils of treating and drunkenness. It is opposed to the present illicit system, with its evils of subterfuge, hypocrisy, and unfairness. It is opposed too to the noisy, bigoted, hypocritical "uplifter," who with true puritannical snuffle quotes scripture, turns up the whites of his eyes, and is ready to burn at the stake the man who dares to think differently to him. It is not only the freedom to choose what we shall eat or drink that the League stands for, but it will equally resist any attempt to prohibit the use of tobacco, dancing, card playing and other innocent amusements of the people that these "kill-joys" contemplate forcing upon an unwilling majority of the people.

All the latter part of his letter is a red herring across the track and is no argument against the fight for personal liberty the League is waging. The difference between liberty to do acts that interfere with the liberty of others and liberty to do in your own sphere what you desire to do that does not affect the liberty of others is so clear and definite that everybody not wilfully blind must see the distinction. If I build a slaughter house on George street, I interfere with the liberty of others, so does a man who wants to go in the dress of a South Sea Islander. The man who drinks a glass of pure beer with his dinner interferes with nobody neither does it trouble his neighbor if he smokes a cigar after dinner. His other similies are exactly the same. The distinction needs no further demonstration.

It is the greatest good of the greatest number that we are fighting for and all the Acts of Parliament Mr. Smith can hope to get passed will never get a man to heaven. He evidently knows more than God.

Whilst I am writing I would like to say the League already has a number of ladies in its membership, and they are welcome to join, and we will be having a meeting at the G.W.V.A. rooms on Murray street Thursday night at 8.30, to which they, as well as men, are cordially invited, and if Mr. Smith wants to see the light, he is welcome too.

Thanking you, Sir,

JAS. G. GUISE-BAGLEY.

The Review has taken the liberty of expugning from the above letter a sentence that contains violent expressions and in which Mr. Bagley applies to Mr. Smith a name not commonly used in intercourse between gentlemen. No man can use the columns of this paper as a vehicle for personal abuse, even if he writes over his own signature.—Ed. Review.

POISON GAS CAUSED FLU

Sufficient time has not yet elapsed to determine the indirect effects of the recent eruption of Mount Kloet in Java, which wiped out over a score of villages and killed thousands of the natives, but recollections of Krakatoa's volcanic outburst in 1883, which within six weeks sprinkled its fine lava dust over the whole world, has given an interesting suggestion to certain members of the medical profession. During the closing year of the war, an influenza epidemic raged in many parts of the world. The manner of its outbreak in different countries indicated that the germs of the disease had been conveyed by the currents of the air. The theory therefore has been broached that the poison gases with which many sectors of the fighting area were drenched were carried by the wind, in every direction, causing the influenza outbreak in Spain, Germany, England, France, South America, Australia, Africa, Asia, as well as in the United States and some of the South American countries. That the influenza was a corollary of the war is undoubted. Any similar gigantic conflict, it is argued, would be attended with a similar wide-why every effort should be made to spread pestilence—another reason avert wars in future.

WIT AND WISDOM

Gentle Hint.

"What a beautiful dog, Miss Ethel," exclaimed her bashful admirer. "Is he affectionate?"

"Is he affectionate?" she asked, archly. "Indeed, he is. Here, Bruno! Come, good doggie, and show Charlie how to kiss me."

Temperament.

"They say singing men make great fighters."

"I have known it for several years," murmured the grand opera manager, wearily.

Moderate Circumstances.

"How about the people who have just moved in next door?"

"They seem to be fairly well off. I should call them a 50-record family."

"What do you mean?"

"I was referring to their supply of canned music."

Thwarting Him.

The Star Boarder—See here, I won't stand for this. The new boarder has just brought in a set of bagpipes.

Mrs. Borden-Lodge—That'll be all right. I put him in the hall bedroom where he won't find space enough to inflate the bag.

Inexpert.

Employer (who has given his foreman a ticket for a pianoforte recital)—And how did you enjoy the music last night?

Foreman—I was a bit disappointed, sir. 'E wasn't 'arf as good as my young Florrie. Why, 'e played there for close on two hours, and never once crossed 'is 'ands.

Sign of Affluence.

"They must be very wealthy."

"What makes you think so?"

"They own a phonograph."

"Shucks. Lots of people own phonographs."

"I know, but they keep theirs supplied with the very latest records."

Renouncing the World.

Chatting with one of her neighbors not long since, a woman related her experience when converted many years ago, as follows: "I used to be very gay and fond of the world and all its fashions, till the Lord showed me my folly. I liked silks and ribbons and laces and feathers, but I found they were dragging me down to hell—so I gave them all to my sister!"

RADIAL TO KINMOUNT

Hydro Electric engineers will, during the last week of this month, go over the proposed radial railway route from Peterborough to Kinmount. Mr. G. N. Gordon has placed his car and himself at the engineers' disposal for this survey trip. He will be accompanied by Ald. Edgar, chairman of the City's Railwys Committee, and Ald. Morrison.

TO-DAY'S STORY

The game was very exciting. In fact, few games of the year had proved to be nearly so interesting. I was terribly excited to see whether the man on first was going to risk stealing. Suddenly Kitty pinched my arm. I looked at her.

"Jack, isn't it exciting?" I was happy. At last, she was interested.

"Wonderful," I replied with joy.

"That man on first—"

"Yes—that fellow." I was overjoyed to see how she had grasped the situation.

"See him?" she asked.

"Yes, of course." As if I would miss anything!

"Look to right—no, the left." That was behind the base where who was about to steal was jumping about.

"Well, what about it, Kitty?" I was becoming nervous.

"Look just behind there—see —"

"Yes, yes—what?"

I was now all worked up to the highest pitch of tension.

"Well, right there—a bit to the left. I bought a hat yesterday just like the one that girl has on!"

Not Looking for Trouble.

"Do you consider a saxophone a musical instrument?"

"I'm a peaceable citizen," replied Mr. Dubwaite, thoughtfully, "and for the sake of avoiding an argument I'm willing to concede that a saxophone is a musical instrument as long as it stays in an instrument dealer's window."

UNCONSCIOUS HUMOR.

Much Amusement To Be Found In Every-day Occurrences.

If people were only more observant they might find much to amuse them in ordinary every-day life; as, for instance, in such a simple matter as studying shop windows.

East of Aldgate Pump a hire-purchase establishment held out inducements to those about to marry to furnish out of income. One of the advantages offered was that no sureties were asked for. The stuff looked flimsy enough, and the price was equally unsubstantial. Against the spindle legs of an occasional chair which were already beginning to warp rested a card with the cheering announcement, "No security."

A side street in Westminster yielded perhaps the frankest declaration of trading principles which could be made. A bootmaker exhibited in his window a notice, "We give rock-bottom value."

We are now fairly used to Americanisms, but an announcement in a window at Oxford Circus, "Costumes for the Fall," a few years ago, caused a shock to those who remember the costume worn by Eve on that historical occasion.

It was quite an old wheeze for a shopkeeper to announce, "Established since the Flood." When the sewers in the Holland Park district burst a few years ago, one of the sufferers, a tailor, hung out a notice, "Established before the Flood."

A well-known auctioneer had the frankness to announce a few months ago that he was selling "modern pictures by Vicat Cole, A. Vandyke, and others," while for many weeks there could be seen in the window of another dealer an old Dutch painting—dating back perhaps 200 years—labelled "This second-hand painting £10 10s."

In pre-war days quite a feature of the small fruiterers' shops in poor districts was the sticky mounds of "squashed dates." Passers-by would day by day see the mound diminishing as pennyworths were dug out to supply the customers. Such a heap could be seen—an unsavory, dusty-looking heap on a coster stall in Aldgate bearing the inscription "Morning gathered."—Tit-Bits.

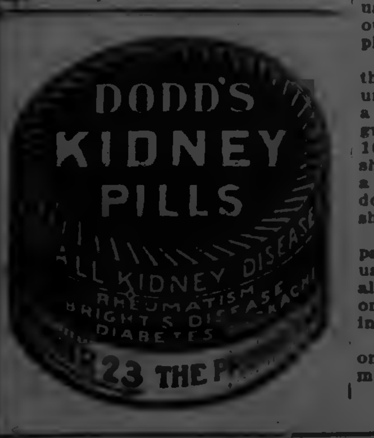
Soft Drink Fables.

Many very interesting ideas are now in circulation for beating prohibition. One of them is a simple recipe for contributing the much-desired "kick" to near-beer. All you have to do (so it is said) is to put a lump of sugar into a bottle of that beverage, and five per cent. or so of alcohol will soon develop in it. As a matter of fact, nothing of the kind would or could happen. It would be necessary to open the bottle, of course; the near-beer would promptly turn flat, and it would not acquire a particle of alcohol. On a train the other day one man was heard to tell another of a marvelous recipe which, as he said, had been communicated to him by an authority. Take a barrel of cider, put into it a half a bushel of malt, with five pounds of raw beefsteak, and after standing for [illegible] months it would be found to be admirable whisky—the beef having meanwhile totally disappeared. Nothing imaginable could be more absurd. True, there would be a "kick," but it might be the last one of the consumer, who would be likely to die of ptomaine poisoning.

To Sell Dickens' Inn.

The Great White Hotel, one of the famous of Dickens' Inns, is to be sold.

This is the inn mentioned in "Pickwick Papers," where Mr. Pickwith, to his horror, found himself in the bedroom of a middle-aged lady in curl papers. Over the front porch, the sign, described by Mr. Pickwick of a "stone statue of some rampageous animal, with flowing mane and tail, distinctly resembling an insane [illegible] horse," is still in existence.



Dancing Girls of Bagdad

THERE are few cities as wonderful as Bagdad at night, as you sit on the veranda of the club sipping the first peg of the day. After a strenuous hour's tennis your senses are lulled by the magic swish of the Tigris as it flows swifty on its 700-mile journey to the sea; lights twinkle on the right bank, appearing among the palms, as the Arab laborers return home from their day's work, compulsorily armed with lanterns.

Your eyes are attracted by a brilliantly lighted house at the far end of the old Turkish bridge of boats, according to the London Times. Apparently the roof is crowded, and white figures seem to dart hither and thither on a tiny stage; occasionally you hear a strange melody come across the water by a vagrant breeze, like the crooning of a child, rising and falling to the notes of some stringed instrument. From afar it is typical of all that is eastern, and strikes a romantic chord. You feel inclined to investigate this strange place, and to see if romance is to be found in an Arab theatre.

On the other bank the inevitable small brown boy appears, comely but importunate, with his eager cry of "dancing girls, sahib—ver' good." You pass through a lighted street, lined with native cafes, and you stumble up a rickety staircase, feeling that romance must be waiting at the top, and buy an officer's ticket for the apparently reasonable sum of one rupee.

Curious eyes are turned on you as you enter the roofless hall, open to the velvet sky; a native, clad in an odorous burnous, shows you to a wooden bench in the front row occupied by a few self conscious British subalterns. The stage is apparently built of old biscuit tins—which has now to be strictly accounted for by army units—and the curtain, a dirty sheet crudely daubed with paint, is down. Attendants are busily selling tiny cups of coffee and clay pots filled with iced water; there is little noise—only a confused murmuring, strangely melodious.

Suddenly the curtain rises jerkily to disclose four dirty Armenian men, wearing soiled ducks and fezes perched at a jaunty angle on their heads, and strumming on instruments like bloated guitars; the audience remains unmoved by this spectacle, and conversation continues as before.

An Arab boy strolls across the stage for no apparent reason, and finally the far-famed dancing girls appear, and sit down heavily next to the men. There are three of them, seemingly ranging in age from 14 to 20; their complexions are almost white, and their noses betray their Semitic extraction; they are dressed in tawdry, high-necked frocks; the skirts reach to their ankles, and their necks are hidden in stiff collars; the minimum of flesh is exposed. What a contrast to the European stage!

The players began to chant in the usual eastern way—there is no apparent tune and little melody. The fattest of the girls rises languidly and glides slowly across the stage, singing to the music; after a while she undulates her body in the manner made familiar by the so-called eastern dancers of the music hall, but with infinitely more skill; she seems to be devoid of bones, and moves her head from side to side without bending her neck. The music quickens, and you hope she is going to do something more daring, but she simply glides around the stage, keeping time with a tap of her feet, and gradually ceases, and she disappears without a single clap. Apparently applause is not expected.

The second girl rises and goes through the same performance. She undulates better than the other, and a fine-looking Arab in the third row grunts his satisfaction, and throws a 10-rupee note on to the stage. She shows no sign of having seen it, and a boy strolls on and picked it up. No doubt the proprietor takes the lion's share before the girl gets it.

This goes on for some time, with pauses between the dances. Gradually you realize that you have seen all that is to be seen, and that the only feeling that the show has roused in you is one of utter boredom.

You thought to buy romance for one roupee; you were grievously mistaken!

WEEPING ECZEMA SOON RELIEVED

A Perfect Treatment For This Distressing Complaint

WASING, ONT.

"I had an attack of Weeping Eczema; so bad that my clothes would be wet through at times.

For four months, I suffered terribly. I could get no relief until I tried 'Fruit-a-tives and 'Sootha Salva' The first treatment gave me relief.

Altogether, I have used three boxes of 'Sootha Salva' and two of 'Fruit-a-tives', and am entirely well"

G. W. HALL.

Both these sterling remedies are sold by dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

"Fruit-a-tives" is also put up in a trial size which sells for 25c.

Sailors' Nerves Affected.

Some interesting stories of the way in which life at sea during wartime affected the nervous systems of a number of our sailors are told by Surgeon-Lieutenant Alan F. Grimbly.

Dr. Grimbly has witnessed in two or three of his patients "a very remarkable state, which I can best describe as the 'fear of going ashore'."

This may seem paradoxical, he adds, but this condition of mind has a real existence. It lies in the dread of traversing a space of sea in a small boat.

"I have known a man to stay on board for six months rather than face a journey of a few minutes' duration in a picket boat."

One A.B., who was near a high explosive shell when it burst, could recollect nothing previous to a date four months before the action.

When, under war conditions, men are situated for a prolonged period far away from civilization, confined to a ship for months at a time without seeing a human face apart from the too familiar ones on board, can it be wondered that nervous systems may be affected?

"I have known of one ship on a foreign station on which seven occupants of the wardroom never spoke to one another for six months except for purposes of convenience or rebuke."—Tit-Bits.

Pigeons of London.

The pigeons of London are one of the sights to which the attention of visitors is always drawn. St. Paul's churchyard is a great place of gathering, and here the birds flock down for the more lavish mid-day meal spread for their benefit, now that rations are less vigorously controlled, says an exchange. They feed out of the hands of their benefactors, perch on their shoulders, and flap and glitter in the sunshine as they fly up and down. Pigeons seem to belong to certain places. Admiralty arch is another favorite resort, but all over the city the birds have small colonies, and crowds of faithful friends. In Venice and in Florence the pigeons are as much a part of the picture as the greatest buildings, a finishing touch as it were, with which nobody can dispense.

No Doubt About It.

Business Man: "Who is at the phone?"

Typist: "Your wife, sir."

Business Man: "What does she want?"

Typist: "The only word I can make out is 'idiot,' sir."

Business Man: "I'll come at once. She probably wants to talk to me."

A Wandering Piper.

At a recent auction there changed hands some mementoes of a very eccentric man known in the early part of the last century as the "Wandering Piper."

This man in private life was the son of Sir Joshua Stewart, and the souvenirs included a portrait and some remarkable documents.

After serving at Waterloo, this curious character entered into a wager of £5,000 with a certain Count Bender, a former schoolfellow, that in order to test the hospitality of various countries, they should proceed in disguise, the "Piper" through Great Britain and the Count fiddling his way through France and Belgium.

The campaign was to have lasted three years, but the Count gave up the contest, having only collected £340, as against the Scotsman's £7,000 in England alone.—Tit-Bits.

What Bradstreets Says :---

"Bradstreets" has been looking into the interesting subject of the relation existing between business failures and the advertising world. It has gathered statistics indicating the proportion of failures among business men who advertise, and it has discovered the highly significant fact that 84 per cent. of all failures are among "non-advertisers."

If any proof were needed of the truth of the old axiom that "it pays to advertise," here it is upon the very best authority. It is needless to draw a moral from the tale, because the moral is self-evident. It is worthy of remark, however, that "Bradstreets" speaks with an authority with no selfish motive, not being interested itself in the advertising business. It neither advertises itself in the ordinary sense nor does it deal in advertising in a general sense. It is simply an expert on finance and trade, interested only in discovering the truth relative to the value of advertising.

With only 16 per cent. of our business failures among advertisers and 84 per cent. among those who do not advertise, the average Peterborough business man should not be long in determining his policy.

IF EVERYTHING BORN LIVED.

Rate of Reproduction Would Stagger Imagination.

During the mouse plague in South Australia and Victoria in 1916-17 a farmer one night put down poisoned wheat, and in the morning 23,000 of the little pests lay dead round his house, says Tit-Bits. There was still greater slaughter in a certain wheat yard, where no fewer than 70,000 mice were killed in a single afternoon. In a short time, indeed, the slain were numbered by billions.

Now, if a slight disarrangement of the usual order of things could produce so stupendous an increase in a species, what would happen if for a brief period any organism multiplied absolutely unchecked?

We know as a historical fact that 12,000,000 black cattle on the Argentine pampas at the end of the eighteenth century—to say nothing of countless additional flocks in other parts of South America—were all descendants of a few pairs which Columbus left at St. Domingo on his second voyage.

But this gives us merely a faint inkling of the potential rate of reproduction of a species.

Suppose that our rat population on January 1 was 40,000,000—a very moderate estimate—that the sexes were equally divided, and that fifty per cent. had no chance of multiplying. This leaves 10,000,000 pairs, and if only five per cent. of these should have had six litters of eight rats in each by the end of December (this is well within the bounds of possibility), we shall then have 41,000,000 pairs, or, in all, 82,000,000 rats.

Suppose, again, that a pair of elephants live for the normal term of their existence—a century—and that they bring forth and rear only six young, their descendants in 750 years might number nearly 19,000,000.

Look now at one of the smallest forms of life—the infusoria. Under the most favorable conditions a single specimen of these—an organism so tiny that it cannot be seen with the naked eye—will at a temperature of fifty degrees become two in twenty-four hours, and if the temperature be increased to eighty degrees the process of multiplication will be repeated five times in twenty-four hours. Now, if the rate continued for seven and a half days there would be a progeny of fifty-eight billions, weighing 230 pounds.

Glance next at the insect world. One fly of a certain species will produce 20,000 larvae, which attain maturity in five days. As each larva remains in a pupal state for five days, every parent fly increases ten thousandfold in two weeks at the outside. So that during a short summer of three months its family may total one hundred millions of millions of millions.

Fish, shell and others, will furnish a further illustration. A healthy, vigorous specimen of our dear—very dear—old friend, the oyster, will produce sixteen million eggs, and its grown-up family may easily number half a million.

Assuming, however, that a female produced sixteen million eggs which developed into oysters, and that these lived the allotted span (whatever that may be in the case of oysters), and then died, each leaving, in turn, a family of sixteen millions, how many would there be in the fifth generation? That is an easy one. The number would be (taking one-half of each generation as females) exactly 66,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000,000.

And what about the shells which the departed would leave behind them as their only memorials? Well, according to Prof. Marshall, they would make a pile eight times as large as the earth.

So, again, of many common varieties of the finny race—cod, herring, etc. Such denizens of the deep will produce at least one million eggs, and a pair will have a progeny of many millions.

If all of these developed, and each had the average family, the sea would in a very short time become a solid mass of fish, and from it every other form of life would be excluded.

Any organism, indeed, if it increased at its natural rate without let or hindrance, would in a short period cover the whole surface of the globe. So that if nature had her fling in a particular direction there would be only one form of life, and that form would be all-powerful.

Pre-Historic Weapons.

A French writer not long ago visited an ancient village in the Marne Department, far from railways and undisturbed by the war. But is any part of France free from relics of war?

In this village he found that the cure had a wonderful collection of pre-historic tools and weapons.

"Some big battle probably took place here between two important tribes," said the collector. "Every turn of the plough brings up flint weapons."

The collection, 10,000 specimens in all, included even a razor made of flint. The cure's cottage was heaped to the ceilings with these curios, which he had devoted the leisure of a life-time to collecting."

Gone Forever.

The murderer had committed his crime without leaving any trace, except that he found there were blood-marks on his handkerchief. How could he get rid of this tell-tale article?

For a moment he sat deep in thought. Then a diabolical smile crept over his cruel features. He sat down at a writing desk and, with great care, he marked his name on the handkerchief. Then, wrapping it up in a small parcel, he addressed it to his laundry.

A sigh of relief escaped him as he posted it in the letter box.

It was gone, this ghastly evidence of his crime, and he would never see it again.

The word Czechs should be pronounced "Cheks."

Major Raymond Collishaw,

One of Canada's Airmen,

Possesses Unique Record

A LIST of the leading British aviators who figured in the Great War was compiled some time ago by Laurence La Tourette Driggs, one of the leading authorities on the subject of fighting in the air. It was extremely gratifying to Canadians to note that the two names which head the list were sons of our own Dominion. The first was Major Raymond Collishaw, who downed 77 Huns, and the second was Col. William A. Bishop who downed 72 of the enemy and their machines. Strangely enough fame has not always gone to the men who have brought down the most machines. For example, no British airman is so widely known as Capt. Albert Ball, a lad round whom a great deal of romance and admiration circles, and yet he brought down only 43 machines before he fell. Then readers of the papers and magazines of the United States must possess the impression that Major R. Lufbery and Lieut. Putnam take positions that rather eclipse the leading airmen of the other Allies, but the former only accounted for 18 machines, and the latter for 13. It has become a custom to speak of Col. William Bishop as the premier ace of the Royal Flying Corps, and his brilliance in the air undoubtedly establishes his right to the title. But Canadians ought not to forget that another Canadian, Major Raymond Collishaw, stands second among the fliers of the world in the number of machines downed by him. The one man with a bigger record was Capt. von Richthofen, the young German killed in April, 1918, after downing 80 of the Allied airmen. Major Collishaw did not come forward until after the biggest flying reputations had been established. He is a British Columbia boy, and knew something of the risks of boating in the Pacific Ocean. He is still very youthful in his manner and appearance, and his exciting and desperate adventures have not given him that look of maturity which characterizes so many other leading airmen. Major Collishaw has a record which everyone hopes will remain unapproached forever in history of having downed 77 opponents in aerial warfare. He is a son of whom the most western province of Canada may well feel proud.

MAJOR RAYMOND COLLISHAW.

Belgrade to "Come Back."

Belgrade, the capital of Serbia and Jugo-Slavia, is now a mere shell of its former self. The Serbs used to be remarkably proud of their metropolis. Did they not possess a city with first class hotels, electric cars, a boulevard, good shops, and all other modern conveniences, not to mention a profusion of the coffee houses and gardens so dear to the heart of the Serb.

The coffee houses of Belgrade are more of an institution than the tavern ever was in London. A cupful of black coffee in a public garden, a military band playing the weird Slavic songs, and the young people dancing the old folk dances on the grass—these represent the height of contentment to the Serb after a day's work

During the war, however, there was little coffee drunk in Belgrade, and the Serbs have forgotten how to dance. While the streets of a city are systematically shelled by the enemy, and every able-bodied man is off to war, the citizens think less of comfort and concern themselves with safety.

Belgrade was deserted, but its people, those who survived, are coming back to their wrecked homes. They are still battling with hunger, and their loved city is in chaos, but they are hopeful. As the capital of a Slav republic, Belgrade has, they believe, entered upon a new and more auspicious era of its history.

OPPOSE DOUBLE JOBS FOR CIVIC EMPLOYES

TORONTO CONTROLLERS ARE ASKED TO PUT END TO SYSTEM.

Toronto, Aug. 21.—A resolution forwarded by the British Imperial Association of Canada, was discussed by the Board of Control. This body was requesting the Mayor to issue orders that no civic employes be engaged by the Exhibition Board for the two weeks of the Exhibition as the association was opposed to the dual employment of civic or government employes. The members of the Board did not seem to think it would be fair to act in the matter, and it was finally agreed to hold a conference with the heads of departments on the matter.

CANADIAN JEWS WILL RAISE ONE MILLION

FUND TO BE USED TO HELP BROTHERS IN EUROPE.

A campaign has been organized by the Jewish War Relief Societies of Canada to raise $1,000,000 in the Dominion for the relief of the 6,000,000 Jews in Eastern Europe who are facing extermination through starvation and disease and ills attendant upon the aftermath of the war. The campaign is being undertaken in conjunction with that of the society of the United States, where $35,000,000 is the objective. The money is to be used to send shipments of clothing, food, medicines and other necessaries of life to the Jews in the stricken countries. Local committees are to be organized and all the Provinces, all the cities and in the larger towns. The organization is under the control of the chairman Sir Mortimer Davis.

HOT TEMPERANCE FIGHT

Both Sides Working Day and Night in Windsor.

Windsor, Aug. 20.—This city promises to be the scene of a bitter fight when the referendum day rolls around. Both sides are working desperately, the prohibition element openly and the "wets" silently but most effectively, according to reports.

Representatives of the "antis" are using the argument that should the amendment to the O.T.A. be voted favorably, Windsor and its environs would at once become the trysting place for thousands of Detroiters who at present are freely patronizing the local "two per cent." production and finding it more to their tastes than the half of one per cent. on tap across the river.

FIRE CHIEFS FAVOR SYSTEM OF PENSIONS

CONVENTION AT CALGARY DECIDED TO ASK FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION.

Calgary, Alta., Aug. 21.—The question of pensions for firemen occupied the attention of the Dominion Fire Chiefs' convention, at which Chief Grange of Peterborough is in attendance, and it was decided to bring the attention of the Federal and Provincial Governments to the necessity of the establishment of some system of pensions. It was the feeling of the convention that the firemen themselves should contribute to a certain extent to the pension fund.

Valuable addresses were given in the use of gas masks by C. J. Defields, of Windsor, Ont., it being brought out that the army gas mask was not always suitable as a fire fighting mask.

Discussion of fire insurance brought forth a warning that the general public should be more careful in buying fire insurance, in having a full understanding of what they were getting instead of running away with the common idea that a fire insurance policy provided for full compensation to the total cost of the material covered by the policy.

OLD COUNTRY CRICKET

National Pastime Has Been Restowed to Pre-War Standing.

London, August 21.—As was expected, the cricket council has decided that county championship matches shall be three-day fixtures next year, as before the war.

Surrey beat Kent by ten wickets in the Hobbs benefit match. Surrey had to make 95 runs in 42 minutes. Hobbs and Crawford got the runs with ten minutes to spare.

Yorkshire beat Warwickshire by an eight inning and 21 runs. In Warwickshire's second innings Rhodes had eight wickets for 44 runs, and in the match ten wickets for 75 runs. Robinson took seven wickets for 67 runs.

Sussex defeated Lancashire by six wickets. Vine, for the winners, scored 110 and was not out

The Gloucestershire and Worcestershire match was drawn.

PARADE TO GREET PRINCE

Brig.-Gen. Gunn Issues Instructions to Veterans

Brigadier-General J. A. Gunn of Kingston has sent out notice stating that at the military parade to greet the Prince of Wales at the Toronto Exhibition next Wednesday afternoon, the space in front of the Grand Stand is to be allotted to the various divisions, the members of which are asked to take their respective places. At this parade uniforms will be worn if at all possible.

BOLSHEVISM.

Summary of the Program of Russian Radicals.

The salient features which constitute the program of Bolshevism as it exists to-day in Russia are summarized as follows by the Overman Committee of the United States Senate, which has just issued its report on German Propaganda and Bolshevism:

1. The repudiation of democracy and the establishment of a dictatorship.

2. The confiscation of all land and the improvements thereon.

3. The confiscation of all forests and natural resources.

4. The confiscation of all live stock and all agricultural implements.

5. The confiscation of all banks and banking institutions and the establishment of a state monopoly of the banking business

6. The confiscation of all factories, mills, mines, and industrial institutions and the delivery of the control and operation thereof to the employes therein.

7. The confiscation of all churches and all church property, real and personal.

8. The confiscation of all newspapers and periodicals and all mechanical facilities and machinery used in the publication thereof.

9. The seizure and confiscation of all public meeting places and assembly halls.

10. The confiscation of all transportation and communication systems.

11. The confiscation of the entire estate of all decedents.

12. The monopolizing by the state of all advertisements of every nature, whether newspapers, periodicals, handbills, or programs.

13. The repudiation of all debts against the Government, and all obligations due the non-Bolshevist elements of the population.

14. The establishment of universal compulsory military service regardless of religious scruples and conscientious objections.

15. The establishment of universal compulsory labor.

16. The abolition of the Sunday school and all other schools and institutions that teach religion.

17. The absolute separation of churches and schools.

18. The establishment, through marriage and divorce laws, of a method for the legalization of prostitution, when the same is engaged in by consent of the parties.

19. The refusal to recognize the existence of God in its Governmental and judicial proceedings.

20. The conferring of the rights of citizenship on aliens without regard to length of residence or intelligence.

21. The arming of all so-called "toilers," and the disarming of all persons that had succeeded in acquiring property.

22. The discrimination in favor of residents of cities and against residents of the rural districts through giving residents of cities five times as much voting power as is accorded to residents of rural districts in such elections as are permitted.

23. The disfranchisement of all persons employing any other person in connection with their business.

24. The disfranchisement of all persons receiving rent, interest or dividends.

25. The disfranchisement of all merchants, traders and commercial agents.

26. The disfranchisement of all priests, clergymen or employes of churches and religious bodies.

27. The denial of the existence of any inalienable rights in the individual citizen.

28. The establishment of a judicial system exercising autocratic power, convicting persons and imposing penalties in their absence, and without opportunity to be heard, and even adopting the death penalty for numerous crimes and misdemeanors.

29. The inauguration of a reign of fear, terrorism and violence.

The Plot That Failed.

A tale comes out of China which serves to illustrate anew the trials of that country where Japan is concerned. Not long ago, it runs, some Japanese plotters, seeking to weaken their ancient neighbor, conceived the idea of financing a Bolshevist movement among the bandits of northern China. Their emissaries organized several hundred Chinese bandits, including presumably other discontents, and the new movement opened what it called "Bolsevist Headquarters" in Shanghai. The Chinese Government promptly discouraged the local Bolsheviki, descended on the "Bolshevist Headquarters" and that was the end of it. The idea, says a Chinese student of sociology, could have gained no headway under any conditions, because the Chinese people have no conception of either bolshevism or anarchy for propagandists to work on. Capitalism, as it is understood in the west, plays practically no part in Chinese life, and until employers and employes are sharply differentiated as Capital and Labor China will remain apart from western industrial disorders.

Turkish Spy System.

Abdul Hamid essayed a Machievellian policy whereunder an enormous spy system developed and suspicion stalked everywhere, says the Red Cross Magazine. It is still related how his officials confiscated a box of toy soldiers—supposed to be equipment models of some revolutionary army—and deleted from an importation of chemistry books each repetition of H2O which the chief of the Intelligence (?) Bureau ingeniously interpreted as meaning 'Hamid the Second equals Zero.' As for the British machinery firm which shipped over several large packing cases, it is no wonder that their consignment was returned unopened when the accompanying advertising matter was found to contain the damning phrase, 'capable of creating two hundred revolutions per minute'."

Two little boys were recently discussing their respective schools. "My teacher is a war bride," boasted the older one.

The little one thought a minute. Then a look of relief spread over his face. "That's nothing," he retorted, "ours is a Civil war veteran."

War Song Was Composed By Crippled Welshman And Used by Australians

ALTHOUGH it has been said that the "Last of the Troubadours" has long since vanished from the earth, each decade sees a reincarnation of the spirit of minstrelsy in some representative of that once interesting tribe. A great love, a great cause in the affairs of men, seems to bring forth some individual who must put that great emotion into song.

The war has demonstrated this. Many spontaneous singers from their hearts gave something to quicken the hearts of others. But an unusual troubadour, even for those five heavy years, was Skipper Walter William Francis, a crippled Welshman, who travelled 13,000 miles from under the southern sun to sing to the Australian and New Zealand soldiers in hospitals and camps and on the firing line in France. Skipper Francis' song is simple, without a touch of the poetic frenzy that is expected in an inspiring song. But it was taken up by the hard-fighting Anzacs, and during moments of great joy or danger it seemed to satisfy their souls. When a transport was sinking, when the Germans were coming on like a storm, when the King came to review, when victory was at hand, Skipper Francis' song was shouted and piped, whistled and sung, like an anthem from thousands of throats. The song goes thus:

"Rally round the Banner, the Banner of your country
And take the field with brothers o'er the foam;
On land or sea, wherever you be,
Keep your eye on Germany.
But Britain, Home and Beauty
Had no cause to fear.
Should Auld Acquaintance be forgot?
No! No! No! No! No!
Australia will be there!
Australia will be there!

Skipper Francis' life history is interesting. He was born in Wales in 1886, and, through an accident to his right leg and foot, was permanently crippled. This severe handicap did not prevent him, however, from becoming an athlete. By vigorous training he came to excel in many fields of sport. In August, 1912, he swam Bristol Channel, from Penarth to Newport, a distance of fifteen miles. He was in Melbourne, Australia, when the war opened, and he immediately volunteered for the service. He was rejected by every fighting branch because of his physical incapacity. Intensely patriotic, he brooded over his inability to go to the front. In October of 1914 he composed his song, writing both words and music. He visited Broadmeadows Camp, near Melbourne, and told the soldiers that he had a song for them. He sang his lay, "Australia Will Be There," and before he left the cantonment every soldier knew the song and was singing it. From that moment the song grew in popularity, like "Over There" in this country. It was accepted as the official march song of the Australian Expeditionary Forces in the same month, and was sung by the troops on their farewell march through Melbourne, December 17, 1914. Never a troopship left Australian shores but "Australia Will Be There" was sung by both populace and soldiers.

When the transport Southland was torpedoed and sunk on September 2, 1915, the Australians sang as they rowed away from the doomed vessel; and they were singing the Skipper's song. When the Anzacs captured the advanced trenches at Gallipoli in one of the most stirring of campaigns, his song filled the air at the charge. It was sung when the Ballarat was torpedoed in the English Channel on April 25, 1917; at billets on the Western Front, in France, in Flanders, Palestine, and Africa.

An official report of an action on the western front gives this episode dealing with the lay:

"At the height of an action on the western front an Australian subaltern mounted a parapet with a tin whistle in his hand. He played 'Australia Will Be There.' The men cheered as they fed the machine guns, declaring that he would attract the Huns with his music, and they would offer better targets. The subaltern then proceeded to play, 'The Watch on the Rhine,' upon which the enemy machine gunners, greatly incensed, seemed to concentrate their fire upon him."

The song was played as an overture at every London theatre when Prime Minister Hughes arrived; the King and Queen heard it on March 22, 1916; it was played and sung during one of the Liberty Loan campaigns in New York.

Ypres.

Du sublime au ridicule il n'y a qu'un pas, said Napoleon. Tragedy and comedy, it is also well recognized, do not lie leagues apart. A concrete example, and one which both Britain and Belgium could well have dispensed with, is seen, at the present time, in the condition of Ypres. Though so short a time has elapsed since the tragedy of the war enveloped the old Flemish town, it was yet possible, on the first day of the month of June, for an "Ypres Veteran" to write to a home journal that a party of colonial officers visiting Ypres were deeply moved "at the general tendency to make Ypres a sort of second-rate country fair." It was understood that Ypres was permanently to remain "a monument of German ruthlessness and allied tenacity and sacrifice." If so, one Ypres veteran considers that the chief historic sites should be as free from cheap structural eyesores as the Forum or the Coliseum. An opinion which will be shared by British and Belgians alike! It is only the cosmopolitan "profit-hunter" who will demur and there should be no difficulty in dealing with him promptly and effectually.

HAD TO CALL IN THE NEIGHBORS

MRS. ROCK WAS SO RUN DOWN COULDN'T DO HOUSEWORK—RESTORED BY TANLAC.

"This is the only medicine I've ever taken that does just what they say it will do," said Mrs. J. L. Rock, R. F. D. No. 4. Platt, Ill., in telling her experience with Tanlac.

"For eleven years," continued Mrs. Rock, "I suffered with stomach trouble and was in a general run down condition, but it's all different with me now, for three bottles of Tanlac almost made a new woman of me. I lost my appetite and got so that actually I would get sick at the smell of food cooking. What little I did manage to force down would cause gas to form and press up around my heart so bad at times I could hardly get a good breath. I would have cramping pains in the pit of my stomach which would last for many hours, then, to make matters worse, my kidneys became affected and I had terrible pains in my back and sides and at times could hardly turn over in bed. I finally got so weak and run down I couldn't do my ohusework and had to call in the neighbors to help me. I was so nervous the least little noise would upset me, and I could sleep but very little at night.

"I was in this very condition when I heard about Tanlac and asked my husband to get me a bottle, and to my surprise and delight I started to improve right from the start. I have taken three bottles now, and I'll tell you it's wonderful the way this medicine helped me. The pains in my back and sides have all left me. My nerves are quiet and I sleep fine now all night long, and when I get up in the mornings I am rested and refreshed. I never know what it is to have a headache now, I have a splendid appetite, and feel perfectly well in every way, and I want everybody to know what a great medicine Tanlac is."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. D. Warne Drug Co. Ltd., in Havelock by A. C. Denike, in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co. Ltd., in Fowlers' Corners by W. A Hunter, in Gelert by A. J Scott, in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

ANDREW CARNEGIE LEFT HUGE ESTATE

IRONMASTER DIED POSSESSED OF PROPERT WORYTH MANY MILLION DOLLARS.

New York, Aug. 21 Andrew Carnegie died worth $50,000,000, according to one of his executors. His will is to be offered for probate next week. Root, Clark, Buckner & Howland of No. 31 Nassau street are the attorneys representing the estate.

From other sources, said to be authoritative it was learned that the estate was several times $50,000,000.

Provide for Daughter

Before his death, relatives say, Mr. Carnegie provided for his daughter, Margaret, now the wife of Roswell Miller, and she does not share in the will to the extent she would have shared had her marriage not been less than it was.

Although nothing in the will indicates the extent of the estate, Mr. Carnegie's last income tax returns, according to a member of the family, indicate it is valued at about $50,00,000, or just a tenth of the $500,00,000 he earned from his business ventures.

Private Pension System

The will does not indicate Mr. Carnegie's interest in the welfare of those he thought a great deal of. Some were provided for previous to his death by life positions in his various corporations

Others were cared for under the Carnegie private pension system through which between 450 and 500 persons receive monthly cheques from the Home Trust Company. Most of those receiving these cheques are aged friends or former employes of the steel master. They have had a claim in him through their work in his mills because of his association with them or their ancestors or through something or ancestors or through something of him.

TO DARKEN HAIR APPLY SAGE TEA

Look Young Bring Back Its Natural Color, Gloss and Attractiveness

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, streaked or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use. This is the old time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, and luxuriant.

CLEMENCEAU BACK AT WORK

Returns to Paris From Vacation and at Once Tackles Business.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, August 21.—Premier Clemenceau returned to Paris to-day from his vacation in La Vendee. He proceeded at once to the war office and took up the work that had accumulated in his absence.

A week's rest apparently had been of great benefit to the [illegible] statesman's health, and in [illegible] France seems still fit.

BRITISH GOVT. IS REALLY PROTECTING CAN. CHEESE

LOCAL PRODUCT SELLING ABOVE EXPORT PRICE FOR HOME CONSUMPTION.

Many people interested in the rate of cheese have the opinion that the British Government is endeavoring to lower its price on the Canadian market by setting it at 25 cents. In the opinion of some who understand the circumstances thoroughly this is based on mistaken ideas.

The real object of the British Government is to protect the Canadian farmer and cheese manufacturer.

Great Britain is flooded at present with New Zealand cheese and consequently does not really need any cheese whatever from Canada. But if the export of cheese from Canada to Great Britain were cut off entirely all cheese manufactured in Canada would be thrown upon the Canadian market. This, of course, would ruin Canada as a cheese, producing country in a very short time. Therefore, the British Government, realizing that they would need Canadian cheese in the future, have offered to accept a huge quantity of Canadian cheese at 25c. to Protect Canadian cheese and Canadian farmers.

This has had but little effect, and assuredly will have little influence upon the price of cheese on the local board. Local cheese makers have boarded cheese three times since the British Government fixed their price, and bidding each time reached above 25c. The reason of that is that Peterborough being near the Toronto market is placing all its cheese on the Canadian market and the export market has had little effect upon local prices. Eastern producers will be effected by the British Government price as they will be forced to export, being too far from large Canadian markets. Their condition will, however, be a great deal better than if the British Government had allowed Canadian cheese to compete on the British market unprotected.

PARTY LEADERS AT MARMORA PICNIC

PREMIER HEARST AND PROVINCIAL TREASURER McGARRY HEAD LIST OF SPEAKERS.

Marmora, Aug. 21.—Some hot shot for Mr. Hartley Dewart, the new Liberal leader in Ontario, was handed out by Hon. T. W. McGarry, Provincial treasurer, at the Peace Picnic given residents of the riding of West Hastings by their representative in the Federal House, E. Gus Porter, K.C., The Treasurer, with the Premier, Sir William Hearst, headed a list of prominent speakers. Mr. McGarry's indignation had its source in recent insinuations against the Hearst Government made by Mr. Dewart and some of his followers. The picnic all through was an immense success, and marked by great enthusiasm. The applause which greeted the remarks of the various speakers evidenced a hearty endorsation of the record which they recited. "I am here to-day to speak on questions which, within the next year, will be before the people of this Province," was Mr. McGarry's significant opening remark. "Mr. Dewart has already declared an election, but he knows no more of when the Government is going to the people than do those in this audience. However, I repeat, within the next year the people of Ontario will be called upon to decide whether it will be a continuation of Conservative Government, or as one of the Liberal speakers the other day announced, back to the days of G. W. Ross.

Premier Receives Ovation.

Sir William Hearst was accorded an ovation as he rose to speak. He was also presented with an address of welcome by Reeve Robert Grey on behalf of the village of Marmora. The Premier sketched in forceful manner some of the outstanding measures enacted by his Administration. He had come to the Premier's office, he said, in troublous times, yet during his term the high record of the Conservative Government had been maintained, not a charge of wrong doing or misappropriation being sustained against it. He dwelt on the splendid record achieved by the province in the war. He asked that judgment be made on the record, and declared that he had no fear of the result of a fair and impartial consideration of what the Government had done. The financial record was a marvelous one, he declared. It was one unequalled elsewhere in the world. He touched briefly on what had been done to aid agriculture and good roads, and many other lines.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Said:

"After all what a man does with his money is to invest, and there is no better way to in it than in Life Insurance.

As an ESTATE BUILDER there is nothing to equal Life Insurance.

TAKE THE FOLLOWING ACTUAL RESULT

A young man sixteen years of age took out a 15 years Endowment (No. 210380) in the Sun Life of Canada, which matured on the first of April. This young man paid annually $66.30 for fifteen years and he now has, through that investment, an immediate estate of $3495.00 in case of death.

DO YOU KNOW THAT THIS AMOUNTS TO ALMOST 15 PER CENT COMPOUND INTEREST ON EVERY DOLLAR PAID?

No wonder Sir Wilfrid said—and he might have added (no better place than the Sun Life of Canada) "there is no better way to invest it than in LIFE INSURANCE."

PETER McARTHUR TO HEAD PARADE OF WORKINGMEN ON LABOR'S HOLIDAY

Elected Marshal at Meeting of Trades Council Last Night Proposal to Invite Mayor and Aldermen Meets With Objection.

Peter McArthur, president of the Machinists' Union and head of the local branch of the Independent Labor Party, will be grand marshal of the parade of workingmen on Labor Day, September 1st. He was unanimously chosen for that post of honor at the meeting of the Trades Council last night, his election being a deserved compliment to the active interest that he has always taken in the cause.

A proposal that Mayor Duncan and the members of the City Council be asked to take part in the parade met with a chilly reception from the majority of the delegates. There was objection to marching behind a body of men, the majority of whom fight the claims of Labor for an eight-hour day and on other issues. It was recognized that it would hardly be according tho the code to relegate the city fathers to a place in the rear of the procession. Finally it was decided to leave this matter to the members of the Labor Day Committee.

Labor plans a celebration that will be worthy of the name and the prospects are that the parade will break all local records. The different Unions will gather in Central Park at 1.30 and fall into line according to seniority. There will be a ball game in the morning and another in the afternoon, following the parade to Riverside Park. A good program of sports will be run off. Volunteers to act as ticket sellers and grounds committee was asked for last night and secured. There will be a dance in the Armories in the evening so that Labor Day promises to be one long revel. A tug-of-war between members of different teams will be a feature of the entertainment and all Unions wishing to compete are asked to notify the committee by Friday evening preceding the holiday. There will be refreshment booths in abundance on the grounds and in the Armories at night and members of the Boy Scouts will likely be secured to act as waiters.

A special meeting of the Trades Council will be held on Thursday evening of next week to make final preparations for the holiday

CITY SUES FOR $1,174,40

Seeks to Recover Price of Four Cars of Coal Not Delivered.

For the City of Peterborough, City Solicitor Widdifield has issued a writ against Sophia Kohen of Toronto, trading under the name of "The Canadian Oil Co.," to recover $1174.40 by the city for coal ordered through her and not delivered.

On Monday next at eleven o'clock before Judge Huycke, this city, Mr. Widdifield will move for the striking out of defendant's appearance and for payment of the amount as claimed in the original writ of summons dated August 6th.

The debt claimed is the amount paid by the city, through its bank at Pittsburg, last winter, for the delivery at Peterborough of four cars of coal, ordered through Miss Kohen and which in some way was diverted elsewhere.

The city's original claim figured $1674.40, but defendant has paid $500 and has promised to effect a settlement this month.

Defendant claims that the railways are really responsible for non-delivery of the coal in question.

PRINCE ARRIVES AT QUEBEC AT 6 TONIGHT

WHOLE CITY AWAITS HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS WITH CHARACTERISTIC LOYALTY.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Quebec, August 21.—The Prince of Wales is expected to arrive here from Prince Edward Island on H.M.S. Renown at 6 o'clock, and the ancient city is all ready to receive him with characteristic loyalty and enthusiasm. After various inspections and other formalities the Prince is to proceed to dinner at the Citadel, and the whole city will be illuminated with fireworks.

Formal receptions by the city and the province will take place tomorrow.

Quebec, Aug. 21.—The squadron escorting the Prince of Wales up the St. Lawrence River to Quebec passed Cape Salon at 7.30 and will arrive between four and five this afternoon.

FARMERS CHEERED LUSTILY FOR KING

BUT IT WAS FOR BRITISH MONARCH NOT NEW LIBERAL LEADER.

Alexandria, Aug. 21.—The farmers of Glengary will not have Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King as their representative in the Federal House despite his elevation to the leadership of the reorganized Liberal party. They made that fact abundantly plain at the convention held here when, refusing to be beguiled by a letter from Hon Mr. King suggesting that he be given an acclamation on the understanding that he would find a riding elsewhere in the next Dominion general election, they nominated a farmer candidate for the coming by-election in Glengary and Stormont. The choice of the convention was Wilfrid Kennedy, reeve of the Township of Kenyon, whose selection was backed by a vote of 168 to 32.

Since Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King was chosen leader by the Ottawa convention there has been a general belief that he would enter the House of Commons through Glengarry, preferring to represent a riding in Ontario rather than on in Quebec, though his election in the latter province would be a much simpler matter. The first suggestion of trouble for Mr. King was heard a week or more ago when a demand was made for a farmer representative. That that demand was not an isolated one was proven by today's convention.

The letter from the Liberal leader suggesting that he be given a clear field was read to the farmers by a former president of the Liberal Association for Glengarry and Stormont, but it met with a decidedly unsympathetic reception. A resolution was passed rejecting the proposal and endorsing the candidature of a farmer.

Cheered Another "King."

An amusing incident came at the close of the convention, when the usual cheers were called for the King. It was pointed out that "The King" was not known as the "Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King," and the farmers then cheered with a will.

BIG FOX HUNT STAGED FOR NEW METRO PLAY

A big fox hunt will be one of the many unusual attractions seen in "Fools and Their Money," the latest Metro play starring Emmy Wehlen which will be shown at the Grand Theatre today and Saturday.

Over a hundred smartly clad men and women will take part in the hunt which starts from a famous Country Club and continues for many miles over the beautiful pastures and meadowlands of lower California. The pack of hounds which are used in the picture are considered the finest in that section of the West and were loaned to Metro by the club to which they belong, while the many hunters come from a stock farm that boasts many blue ribbons to its credit.

COLLEGE MAN SUPPORTS WEHLEN IN METRO PLAY

Jack Mulhall, the handsome young Columbia graduate, is seen as leading man for Emmy Wehlen, Metro's clever star, in "Fools and Their Money," an original comedy-drama by E. Forst, which will be shown at the Grand Theatre on today and Saturday.

Mr. Mulhall, besides being well known in leading roles on the screen is also a New York stage favorite, having been for some time a member of the West End Stock Company. He also played on Broadway with James K. Hackett in "The Grain of Dust."

THE FRENCH DELEGATES.

How They Were Treated by Germans In 1871.

The peevish and querulous wailings of the German delegates at Versailles against the reasonable and most courteously managed precautions of the French against either their molestation or their abuse of their privileges, suggest a striking contrast to the way in which a French delegate was treated by the Germans in that same city less than half a century ago.

It was in the "terrible year," in January, 1871. The invading Germans occupied Versailles and were besieging Paris. The French Government, a fugitive from its own capital, had assembled at Tours, and realizing the futility of further resistance, and wishing to spare the women and children of Paris from the starvation which the Germans were imposing upon them, sent one of its most distinguished members to Versailles to treat with Bismarck for the surrender of the city. That envoy was Jules Favre.

When it was known to the Germans that Mr. Favre was coming Bismarck entrusted the reception and care of him to a person called Stieber—his real name is unknown. This man was one of the most active and most unscrupulous members of the German secret police. Bismarck called him the "King of the Sleuth hounds." It was Stieber who, on Bismarck's authorization, had connived at and, indeed, practically arranged for the attempted assassination of the Czar, Alexander II., at Longchamps, when he was visiting Paris on the occasion of the World's Fair of 1867. Bismarck wanted to estrange France and Russia, so there would be no danger of Russia intervening in the war of conquest which he was already planning against France, and he felt sure that nothing could estrange them more effectively than to have an attack made upon the Czar's life while he was the guest of France. So he had Stieber let a Polish boy fire a pistol at the Czar, taking care to be himself at the lad's elbow and deflect his aim, and then to have a German officer seize him. Thus the odium of failing to safeguard the Czar fell upon France and the credit of saving his life and of arresting the would-be slayer was won by Germany.

It was this Stieber, then, who was entrusted by Bismarck with the entertainment of Mr. Favre. When the French statesman reached the Sevres Bridge at Versailles he was met by Stieber and was taken in a carriage driven by one of Stieber's aids to No. 3 Boulevard du Roi. This hotel was the headquarters of the German secret police and was exclusively occupied by them, a fact which, of course, was concealed from Mr. Favre. The manager was one Kaltenbach, a lieutenant of police and Stieber's right-hand man, who welcomed Mr. Favre and pretended to be a patriotic Frenchman who was overjoyed at being privileged to entertain the representative of the French Government.

Mr. Favre all during his stay was lodged in a room on the second floor which had been occupied by Kaltenbach himself. A valet was assigned to his exclusive service, who brought his meals to him in his room, brushed and pressed his clothes and waited on him in all respects most diligently. This valet, who also pretended to be a loyal Frenchman, was none other than Stieber himself, who took care to examine the contents of Mr. Favre's pockets, ransack his trunk, read all his correspondence, and even in conversation endeavor to worm out of him all possible information.

Such was the German method of entertaining a distinguished diplomatic envoy, as practiced under the direction of Otto von Bismarck himself.

Venus' Flytrap.

That such plants as "Venus' flytrap" actually catch and squeeze to death flies and other insects alighting on their leaves has long been known, but the discovery is comparatively recent that the plants digest the softer parts of their prey by means of peptic ferment secreted by the leaves. These are real instances of plants feeding upon animals.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

BY EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

"I used to paint dames like that," Bland was saying to the dazed professor. He explained how his picture had enabled many a novelist to "eat up the highway in a buzz wagon." As he approached the time when the novelists besieged him he gave full play to his imagination. One, he said, sought out his apartments in an aeroplane.

"Say, professor," he finished, "we're in the same boat—both hiding from writers. A fellow that's spent his life selling neckties—well, he can't exactly appreciate our situation. There's what you might call a bond between you and me. D'ye know, I felt drawn to you just after I fired that first shot. That's why I didn't blaze away again. We're going to be great friends. I can read it in the stars."

He took the older man's hand feelingly, shook it and walked away, casting a covert glance of triumph at Mr. Magee.

The face of the holder of the Crandall chair of comparative literature was a study. He looked first at one young man, then at the other. Again he applied the handkerchief to his shining head.

"I used to paint dames like that."

"All this is very odd," he said thoughtfully.

He permitted Mr. Magee to escort him into the hall and to direct his search for a bed that should serve him through the scant remainder of the night. Overcoats and rugs were pressed into service as cover. Mr. Bland blithely assisted.

"If I see any newspaper reporters," he assured the professor on parting, "I'll damage more than their derbies."

"Thank you," replied the old man heartily. "You are very kind. Tomorrow we shall become better acquainted. Good night."

The two young men came out and stood in the hallway. Mr. Magee spoke in a low tone.

"Forgive me," he said, "for stealing your Arabella."

"Take her and welcome," said Bland. "She was beginning to bore me anyhow. And I'm not in your class as an actor." He came close to Magee. In the dim light that streamed out from No. 7 the latter saw the look on his face and knew that underneath all this was a very much worried young man.

"For God's sake," cried Bland, "tell me who you are and what you're doing here. In three words—tell me."

"If I did," Mr. Magee replied, "you wouldn't believe me. Let such minor matters as the truth wait over till tomorrow."

"Well, anyhow," Bland said, his foot on the top step, "we are sure of one thing—we don't trust each other. I've got one parting word for you. Don't try to come downstairs tonight. I've got a gun, and I ain't afraid to shoot."

He paused. A look of fright passed over his face, for on the floor above they both heard soft footsteps, then a faint click as though a door had been gently closed.

"This inn," whispered Bland, "has more keys than a literary club in a prohibition town. And every one's in use, I guess. Remember, don't try to come downstairs. I've warned you. Or Arabella's castoff Romeo may be found with a bullet in him yet."

"I shan't forget what you say," answered Mr. Magee. "Shall we look about upstairs?"

Bland shook his head.

"No," he said. "Go in and go to bed. It's the downstairs that—that concerns me. Good night."

He went swiftly down the steps, leaving Mr. Magee staring wonderingly after him. Like a wraith he merged with the shadows below. Magee turned slowly and entered No. 7. A fantastic film of frost was on the windows; the inner room was drear and chill. Partially undressing, he lay down on the brass bed and pulled the covers over him.

At length his mind seemed to stand still, and there remained of all that amazing evening's pictures but one—that of a girl in a blue corduroy suit who wept—wept only that her smile might be the more dazzling when it flashed behind the tears. "With yellow locks, crisped like golden wire," murmured Mr. Magee. And so he fell asleep.

Every morning at 8, when slumber's chains had bound Mr. Magee in his New York apartments, he was awakened by a pompous valet named Geoffrey, whom he shared with the other young men in the building. It was Geoffrey's custom to enter, raise the curtains and speak of the weather in a voice vibrant with feeling, as of something he had prepared himself and was anxious to have Mr. Magee try. So, when a rattling noise came to his ear on his first morning at Baldpate inn, Mr. Magee breathed sleepily from the covers, "Good morning, Geoffrey."

But no cheery voice replied in terms of sun, wind or rain. Surprised, Mr. Magee sat up in bed. About him the maple wood furniture of suit 7 stood shivering in the chill of a December morning. Through the door at his left he caught sight of a white tub into which, he recalled sadly, not even a Geoffrey could coax a glittering drop. Yes—he was at Baldpate inn. He remembered the climb with the dazed Quimby up the snowy road, the plaint of the lovelorn haberdasher, the vagaries of the professor with a penchant for blonds, the mysterious click of the door latch on the floor above. And last of all—strange that it should have been last—a girl in blue corduroy somewhat darker than her eyes, who wept amid the station's gloom.

"I wonder," reflected Mr. Magee, staring at the very brassy bars at the foot of his bed, "what new variations on seclusion the day will bring forth?"

Again came the rattling noise that had awakened him. He looked toward the nearest window, and through an unfrosted corner of the pane he saw the eyes of the newest variation staring at him in wonder. They were dark eyes and kindly. They spoke a desire to enter.

Rising from his warm retreat, Mr. Magee took his shivering way across the uncarpeted floor and unfastened the window's catch. From the blustering balcony a plump little man stepped inside. He had a market basket on his arm. His face was a stranger to razors; his hair to shears.

Magee dived hastily back under the covers. "Well?" he questioned.

"So you're the fellow?" remarked the little man in awe. He placed the basket on the floor. It appeared to be filled with bromidic groceries, such as the most subdued householder carries home.

"Which fellow?" asked Mr. Magee.

"The fellow Elijah Quimby told me about," explained he of the long brown locks, "the fellow that's come up to Baldpate inn to be alone with his thoughts."

"You're one of the villagers, I take it?" guessed Mr. Magee.

"You're dead wrong. I'm no villager. My instincts are all in the other direction—away from the crowd. I live up near the top of Baldpate in a little shack I built myself. My name's Peters, Jake Peters, in the winter. But in the summer, when the inn's open and the red and white awnings are out and the band plays in the Casino every night, then I'm the hermit of Baldpate mountain. I come down here and sell picture postcards of myself to the ladies."

Mr. Magee appeared overcome with mirth.

"A professional hermit, by the gods!" he cried. "Say, I didn't know Baldpate mountain was fitted up with all the modern improvements. This is great luck. I'm an amateur at the hermit business. You'll have to teach me the fine points. Sit down."

"Just between ourselves, I'm not a regular hermit," said the plump, bewhiskered one, sitting gingerly on the edge of a frail chair—"not one of these 'all for love of a woman' hermits you read about in books. Of course I have to pretend I am, in summer, in order to sell the cards and do my whole duty by the inn management. A lot of the women ask me in soft tones about the great disappointment that drove me to old Baldpate, and I give 'em various answers, according to how I feel. Speaking to you as a friend and considering the fact that it's the dead of winter, I may say there was little or no romance in my life."

"Back to nature, in other words," remarked Mr. Magee.

"Yes, sir; back with a rush. I was down to the village this morning for a few groceries, and I stopped off at Quimby's, as I often do. He told me about you. I help him a lot around the inn, and we arranged I was to stop in and start your fire and do any other little errands you might want done. I thought we ought to get acquainted, you and me, being as we're both literary men, after a manner of speaking."

"No?" cried Mr. Magee.

"Yes," said the hermit of Baldpate. "I dip into that work a little now and then. Some of my verses on the joys of solitude have appeared in print on the postcards I sell to the guests in the summer. But my life work, as you might call it, is a book I've had under way for some time. It's called simply 'Woman'—just that one word; but, oh, the meaning in it! That book is going to prove that all the trouble in the world from the beginning of time was caused by females. Not just say so, mind you. Prove it!"

"A difficult task, I'm afraid," smiled Magee.

"Not difficult—long," corrected the hermit. "When I started out four years ago I thought it would just be a case of a chapter on Eve and honorable mention for Cleopatra and Helen of Troy and a few more like that and the thing would be done. But as I got into the subject I was fairly buried under new evidence. Then Mr. Carnegie came along and gave Upper Asquewan Falls a library. It's wonderful to think the great works that man will be responsible for. I've dedicated 'Woman' to him. Since the new library I've dug up information about a thousand disasters I never dreamed of before, and I contend that if you go back a ways in any one of 'em you'll find the fluffy little lady that started the whole rumpus. So I hunt the woman. I reckon the French would call me the greatest cherchez la femme in history."

"A fascinating pursuit," laughed Mr. Magee. "I'm glad you've told me about it, and I shall watch the progress of the work with interest, although I can't say that I entirely agree with you. Here and there is a woman who more than makes amends for whatever trouble her sisters have caused. One, for instance, with golden hair and eyes that when they weep"—

"You're young," interrupted the little man, rising. "There ain't no use to debate it with you. I reckon I'll start your fire."

He went into the outer room, and Mr. Magee lay for a few moments listening to his preparations about the fireplace.

"I say, Mr. Peters," he cried, leaping from bed and running into the other room, where the hermit was persuading a faint blaze, "I've an idea. You can cook, can't you?"

"Cook?" repeated the hermit. "Well, yes; I've had to learn a few things about it, living far from the rathskellars the way I do."

"The very man," rejoiced Mr. Magee. "You must stay here and cook for me—for us."

"Us?" asked the hermit, staring.

"Yes. I forgot to tell you. After Mr. Quimby left me last night two other amateur hermits hove in view. One is a haberdasher with a broken heart"—

"Woman!" cried the triumphant Peters.

"Name, Arabella," laughed Magee. "The other's a college professor who made an indiscreet remark about blonds. You won't mind them, I'm sure, and they may be able to help you a lot with your great work."

"I don't know what Quimby will say," studied the hermit. "I reckon he'll run 'em out. He's against this thing—afraid of fire."

"Quimby will come later," Mr. Magee assured him, drawing on a dressing gown. "Just now the idea is a little water in yonder tub and a nice cheerful breakfast after. It's going to pay you a lot better than selling postcards to romantic ladies, I promise you. I won't take you away from a work for which the world is panting without more than making it up to you financially. Where do you stand as a coffee maker?"

"Wait till you taste it," said Peters reassuringly. "I'll bring you up some water."

He started for the door, but Mr. Magee preceded him.

"The haberdasher," he explained, "sleeps below, and he's a nervous man. He might commit the awful error of shooting the only cook on Baldpate mountain."

Mr. Magee went out into the hall and called from the depths the figure of Bland, fully attired in his flashy garments and looking tawdry and tired in the morning light.

"I've been up hours," he remarked. "Heard somebody knocking around the kitchen, but I ain't seen any breakfast brought in on a silver tray. My inside feels like the Mammoth cave."

Mr. Magee introduced the hermit of Baldpate.

"Pleased to meet you," said Bland. "I guess it was you I heard in the kitchen. So you're going to cater to this select few, are you? Believe me, you can't get on the job any too soon to suit me."

FRANKIE SCHOELL AFTER BULL BOUT

MANY OTHER CHALLENGES TO QUEEN CITY BOXERS.

Toronto, Aug. 20.—Burt Finch, the Buffalo boxing impressario, chirps a few as follows:

Just a few lines in regard to some of the boxers, under my management who I would like to show in your city against the best boxers in their class that can be secured.

First, I have Frankie Schoell, who recently beat Jack Schiffer for the lightweight championship of Buffalo. The fans of your city will remember Schoell, who boxed Freeman at the Armories. This boy has fought Frankie Bull your good lightweight, but lost the decision in six rounds. I am convinced that Schoell can reverse the decision if given another chance, as soon as he returns from a much needed rest in the mountains.

In the meantime I would be glad to match my new champion, Danny Pavese, of Newark, N.J., who has fought such good boys as Lew Tendler, George Chaney Johnny Dundee, Willy Jackson and many others. This boy is legitimate lightweight and will box Bull on any terms the latter may suggest.

I also have Maxey Green, under my management. You will remember him as the boy that boxed Soldier McCraken. He is also willing to meet Bull, if a suitable weight can be agreed on, as he is only a boy scaling around 130 pounds. I have him matched with Jimmy Goodrich, and if he wins I would like him to meet Atkins at 125 pounds.

Frankie Nelson, who was knocked out by Bull last spring, is again in training, and is craving for another chance at Bull and is willing to split the purse any way to suit Bull, on a knockout.

Harry Boyle, is a boy that has been boxing with great success lately and while he is unable to enter the ring under 138 pounds he would also like a chance at Bull at that weight.

I have two heavyweights who I would like to match against Soldier Jones, they are Stanley Meyers, a Marine, just returned from France. He was a good battler before he went away and has been doing considerable boxing while in the service, he and Jones would make a great fight as would also Jerry Donovan, who has beaten several heavyweights in this vicinity. Neither of these boys will weigh over 175 pounds.

If the promoters are looking for a boy to box Bobby Ebor, I have a great boy in Young McBride, who accepted a contest on short notice last spring against Ebor and was given the decision in every paper. This boy would make a great fight either with Ebor or Atkins.

Do not be a bit surprised if Ebor gets the old knockout put over on him at London Labor Day as I have a boy boxing him that received the decision over Jimmy Goodrich only a short time ago. I will mention his name as Johnny McCoy, of Rochester, so you will know that it was my boy that the trick.

It is hardly necessary for me to mention the other boys that I have as you and all the other boxing fans of Toronto have seen them in action. I mean such boys as Raney, Dunn, Foster, Rowan, Martin and others, all boys that never failed to put up a good contest.

Kindly use the above article in your valuable paper and let my many friends know that I am ready for all the fall work, and the more contests I can get the better it will suit me.

Almost forgot one of my best boys in Elmer Doane who will soon be ready for all the best boys in the business at 130 pounds.

CAPITALS WILL PLAY SEN. RUGBY

WON THE JUNIOR O.R.F.U. TITLE IN YEAR 1913—OPTIMISM PREVAILS.

Toronto, Aug. 21.—Capitals, whose name is synonymous with rugby, will again enter team in the O.R.F.U. senior series. Capitals won the junior O.R.F.U. title in 1913 and the intermediate championship in 1915. Most of the "Jesse Ketchum" boys will be back from overseas and prospects for having a strong team are exceptionally bright. A meeting will be held on Friday night at Central Y.M.C.A., when all supporters, officers and past officers are requested to be on hand.

The question of obtaining suitable grounds is causing considerable worry, but Jimmy Garlock is of the opinion that the old Severn Brewery site could be fixed up for a suitable gridiron. In his opinion the O.R.F.U. junior age limit should be lifted this year for city teams. With so many of the boys returning from overseas, there will be no dearth of material.

At present the age limit for the junior series is twenty-one years. A large number of the returned boys will be too old to catch the junior teams and not fast enough for the senior company. With no intermediate series their plight would indeed be deplorable. It would practically mean that they would have to stay out of rugby.

When the O. R. F. U. met several weeks ago to get a line on the prospective teams for the senior series, it was found that not a single team had anything definite settled regarding playing areas. It was therefore decided to meet again on Thursday, August 21 (to-day) at Central Y.M.C.A. and that the clubs should come to this meeting prepared to give something definite along this line. Just what the clubs have done along this line is not known, but at any rate the ground question looks a lot brighter than it did several weeks ago. At that time it was stated that some War Veterans' Association was angling for a yearly lease of the grounds and if they secured it the field would be tied up. Evidently this has not been done because the amateur baseball teams have secured the use of the east end field for three Saturdays. If Scarboro' Beach is available Beaches will play there. Things look brighter as far as Rosedale Field is concerned also. Mayor Church is busy trying to have it arranged that at least a fence be built and that some sort of temporary acommodation provided for the rugby teams this fall. The teams realize that it would be a difficult task to have the stadium completed this fall, but they would be content with temporary quarters and are counting upon the efforts of Mayor Church to bring this about. Then, too, Carsity Stadium will be avilable on the odd Saturdays when the Varsity team is away. London will not be in the senior ranks, but things are very bright in Hamilton and it is expected that at Thursday night's meeting the Ambitious City will be represented and make known the plans for this fall.

TENNIS TITLE NOW GOES TO ANZACS

DEFENDERS TILDEN AND RICHARDS GO DOWN IN DEFEAT.

Newton, Mass., Aug. 20.—The lawn tennis doubles championship of America was won by Norman E. Brooks and Gerald L. Patterson, the Australian team. They took the title from its defenders Wm. T. Tilden, 2nd, of Philadelphia, and Vincent Richards, of Yonkers, N.Y., in five spectaculr sets, 8—6, 6—3, 4—6, 4—6, 6—2, on the courts of the Longwood Cricket Club.

Although the Americans got only two games in the final set, it was perhaps the hardest fought five. Clock-like steadiness of Brookes and the terrific smashes of Patterson were the deciding factors.

Tilden and Richards got away with a rush in the opening set and had three games to nothing almost before the spectators realized that the match was on. In the fourth game Tilden hit a vicious smash, which flew off his racquet sidewise and hit Richards a stinging blow on the head.

Richards seemed dazed for a few minutes and then gamely continued play, but two kills by Peterson took the game. Pretty placements by Tilden and one by Richards gave them the fifth game, but the Australians captured the next three, making it four all. The Americans took the next game and the lead, but Patterson won his serve in the tenth game and made it five all. Once more Richards won on his serve, and put over a clean service ace, making the games 6 to 5, but the Australians stedied and took the next three and the set.

As the match progressed the play became faster, and longer railie frequently brought the gallery to its feet. It soon became a question of the fleetness of foot and amazing reach of Tilden and the good all-round play of his 17-year-old partner against the finished playing and deadly accuracy of Brookes and the brilliant smashing game of Peterson. At the net Brookes and Patterson were invincible, and if Richards' game were to be criticized adversely, fault could not be found with the short lobs which he put into their reach.

Tilden seemed to be working the hardest of the four players, and his anxiety to make placements frequently caused him to drive out. In the five sets he had a total of 37 outs to Richards' 23. However, these tactics won him the greatest number of placements of any of the four players, s he totalled 34.

Patterson's weak point was driving into the net, and this he did thirty times in the five sets. However, he stood next to Tilden in placements with a total of five. Tilden also was highest in service aces, making five, but almost every time he scored an ace he made a double fault in the same.

KINGEDWARD TEAM BEAT QUEEN MARY

King Edward playgrounds defeats Queen Mary's on the former's grounds yesterday 11 to 4 thereby causing a deadlock in the league, each team having won 2 and lost 2 games.

Today, at Central Park, the same teams will play a semi-final, the winner to meet the Central Park team at the same place for the championship of the league.

The Queen Mary grounds will close Friday evening, after a very strenuous but enjoyable summer for the youngsters. At this time, the winners in the high individual point contest will be awarded with pretty badges.

THE HILLCRESTS WHO PLAY HERE SATURDAY CRACK TEAM

The Hillcrest Baseba Team of Toronto who are to play the local Central Ontario League Team Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock have a splendid list of victories behind them. Last year after winning their league the ywon the city championship of Toronto and the championship of Ontario. This year they are victors of their league and are very confident of making this year's honors equal those of last season. If the locals can stop them on Saturday great will be the honor.

Where Women Propose.

In New Guinea it is always Leap Year, for in that island the men consider it beneath their dignity to notice women, much less to make overtures of marriage. Consequently the proposing is left to the women to do. When a New Guinea woman falls in love with a man she sends a piece of string to his sister, or, if he has no sister, to his mother or another of his lady relatives. Then the lady who receives the string tells the favored man that the particular woman is in love with him. No courting follows, however, for it is considered beneath a New Guinea man's dignity to waste time in such a pursuit. If the man thinks he would like to wed the lady, he meets her alone, and they decide whether to marry or not.—Family Herald.

The Difference.

"Why do you waste your days and nights on these pictures?" asked the wife of a struggling painter. "You don't get enough for them to pay for the paint you use." "I know, my dear," he answered, "but think! Rembrandt and others painted pictures and sold them for trifles, and now they are the masterpieces of this world and sell for a million dollars. I am not painting for us, I am painting for our descendants." "Humph!" was the wife's discouraging reply. "You don't make enough for us to raise any descendants."

We Have With Us—

The ensuing squib from the Madras Times (India) would seem to prove that a man must have his wits about him when addressing an Indian dignitary:

"His Excellency the Right Honorable the Lord Pentland, Knight Grand Commander of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India and Knight Eminent Order of the Indian Empire, will hold a formal ceremony for the presentation of decorations at the Banqueting Hall, Government House."

POLICE PROTECTION HERE

Monaghan Road District Under the Eye of Blue-Coated Guardian of the Law.

Boys have become so mischievous and such a nuisance in the outskirts of the city contingent to the Monaghan road that a constable has been assigned to that beat these evenings. Gardens in this neighborhood are quite accessible to youths of a marauding tendency, so much so that vegetables disappear over night and find their way to tables, it is said, for which they were not grown.

Feminine travellers on the Monaghan road of late also seem to have need of the protecting presence of a blue-coated guardian of the peace against annoyance, not to say insult, from members of the masculine sex quite outgrown the boyhood stage. For it has been reported that women and young girls have reason to fear molestation when travelling this district after dark.

In any event, this much-travelled highway, in its semi-darkness at night offers opportunity for misconduct which even the knowledge that the police have an eye on the locality will check.

LIGHTNING STRUCK TREE.

Fifteen Cows of Brockville Farmer Perish in Crash.

Brockville, August 21.—During a thunderstorm which passed over this section, lightning struck a tree on the farm of Wm. Asterford, near Fairfield, killing 15 cows which had taken shelter under it. Asterford and his son were working in a field close by when the storm broke, and made for the tree to escape the downpour of rain. After being there several minutes they decided to go to the barn, and had barely left the spot when the bolt fell. The herd was valued at $2000.

THE CARE AND UPKEEP OF YOUR CAR

There are several things carbon will do to an engine. First, it may cause a knock, if it is very heavy. Second, it causes your engine to overheat, which means loss of power. Third, it causes premature explosion. That is your engine explodes at the wrong time, one cylinder works against the other, causing loss of power. Fourth, your valves, normally, rise only one-fourth inch above the surface, so if there is one-eighth inch of carbon, your exhaust escape is practically cut off. Sometimes all of the symptoms mentioned show up; at other times probably just loss of power and overheating.

There are several ways of cleaning out the carbon. One way is by scraping, another, by burning, and there are so called "carbon removers." The latter are not to be recommended at all, as they act like coal oil, softening the carbon to the consistency of honey, which gets down around the rings and solidifies, causing the rings to "freeze" solid, scoring the cylinders. Scraping is good if done thoroughly but takes too much time. Now, as to carbon burning it makes no difference how bad the engine is carboned up, as soon as the oxygen hits it it immediately turns to carbon dioxide gas and passes away, leaving the interior as clean as when new.

We burn Carbon by the Oxygen process also weld cast iron, steel, brass and aluminum parts, welding fenders frames, cylinder blocks, etc., Millard. lard's Bicycle Shop, 225 Hunter St. Phone 234j.

Consequently, the G.W.V. band will fall in at the G.W.V.A. rooms on Friday, at 5 p.m. sharp, and the bandmaster hopes that every man will be on hand, in uniform and clean instruments and also to take the advantage of hearing this splendid organization.

PRESENTED WITH CLOCK

Token of Good Will and Respect for Miss Edna Bingham.

A very pleasant evening was spent at the home of Miss Edna Bingham, when a number of her fellow spinners presented her with a handsome marble clock. Miss Bingham is severing her connection with the Bonner-Worth Company.

Sorry to Part.

The presentation was made by Miss Annie Seates, accompanied by the following address read by Miss Winnie Knight on behalf of the Bonner-Worth spinners:

"Dear Edna:

It was with sincere regret that we learned of your intended departure from our midst. You have long been a faithful worker among us. Our heartfelt wishes follow you to your new home.

"We ask you to accept this gift as a slight remembrance from your old workmates, and we all join together in wishing you evry success and happiness for the future.

"(Signed) JAS. EMMETT."

Miss Bingham, in the course of a fitting reply to the above tokens of esteem and respect, said the clock would not only remind her of the time of day, but also keep green the memory of many happy and pleasant hours she had spent with her co-workers.

TRANCE DANCER LATEST WONDER

CAN ONLY PERFORM WHEN UNDER HUSBAND'S HYPNOTIC INFLUENCE.

London, Aug. 20.—The latest importation in London is Mme. Carc Cambell, from Paris, who is advertised as a "trance" dancer.

Mme. Cambell's first "performance" at the St. Martin's Theatre was a private performance to the press and other privileged people. It is to be followed by ordinary matinee performances every Wednesday and Thursday.

It is explained for the benefit of the spectators that Mme. Campbell is quite incapable of dancing when in her normal state of consciousness. She can only dance under the hypnotic influence of her husband and in that condition gives interpretation to any piece of music, even though she has never heard it before. She is also able to give a dancer's interpretation of poetry when it is recited.

"Is it genuine, or is it a fake?"

This is the dominant question. Nobody is able to supply a satisfactory answer. The opinion of Dr Archibald G. Buchanan, of Harly street, one of England's experienced psychotherapeutists, is that hypnosis is established.

"I applied by usual tests to discover if she were really hynotized," said the doctor.

"Madame was told to put out her arm, which she did. I then exerted all my weight upon it. It remained outstretched, quite rigid. This rigidity is one of the invariable accompaniments of the cataleptic state. Madam's arm was, in fact, immovable!

"I pricked her finger with a needle and pushed my thumb nail under hers, a painful trick under ordinary conditions. But she showed no sign of pain!

"I am perfectly convinced that this lady was hypnotized, and there is no more difficulty in hypnotizing a person on the stage than off, and it is just as simple that she should dance to music as to do any of the other things which I, as a doctor practicing hypnotism, would suggest to my patients.

"There is nothing extraordinary in this Madame dances to the suggestions of the music. On its ceasing she becomes merely cataleptic, and the rigidity is simply the common symptom of the cataleptic state. If the pose happened to be one which defied the law of gravity she would fall to the ground."

AID FOR CRIPPLED HEROES

An important conference was recently held in New York City to discuss the best means and methods of overcoming the handicap of war as represented by our maimed and wounded heroes.

Representatives from the United States, France, Belgium, Great Britain and Canada attended this conference, and the consensus of opinion was that appliances in the form of hooks had, up to this time, proved the most beneficial and practicable substitutes for the human hand.

The most practical of these, the "Canada Arm," has been used by a great number of returned soldiers and has been pronounced by orthopaedic experts as the most useful of any so far invented. This arm has been specially designed for amputation cases above the elbow, and the main feature is a special elbow joint which can be positively locked in various positions controlled by a shrug of the shoulders. It combines in one appliance the working arm and the dress arm which removes from the wearer the old trouble of changing the limb to meet various needs. The metal parts of the working arm have been made especially strong. It is provided with a snap hook having several positions and with its various adjustments a man can perform many duties. Turned to one angle it is possible for the wearer to wield a heavy hammer, the grasp of the tool being such that the heaviest swinging blow will not dislodge the hold. Men wearing this type of hand hook have been able to saw wood, drive in nails and turn machinery, as well as manage all kinds of lifting. An excellent feature of the grip is that, although it is so vice-like for the purpose of handling tools, when necessary, in the case of an accident it is equally easy for the wearer to loosen the tension.

For this purpose the Orthopaedic and Surgical Appliances Branch has depots scattered throughout Canada where disabled men can receive immediate attention.

LOOKING FOR RETURN OF THE FLU EPIDEMIC

Chicago, August 21. — Have you noticed symptoms of the "summer flu"?

Cold in the head, inflamed throat with temperature may presage an attack of influenza similar to the disease which swept the country last fall and winter, according to state board orf health officials, who are sending out notices of warning.

No deaths so far have been reported to Springfield headquarters. The cases, though milder in form, are said to present all influenza symptoms. For the purpose of control the department urges the necessity of regarding every case of "summer cold," "bronchitis" or "summer flu" with suspicion.

Onset sudden, with feeling of cold in the head, throat inflammation, and temperatures of 103 and 104 degrees, headache, muscle ache, in some cases nausea and vomiting. Atacks last three to fived ays.

In more than 66 per cent. of the cases persons affected were not affected with influenza during the preceding epidemic. Some health authorites look for a repetition of last winter's epidemic next winter. The board of health and the Red Cross are preparing to meet any situation which may develop. Board of health instructions stipulate that quarantine should be strictly enforced.

GOVERNMENT TO ASK PEOPLE FOR LOAN OF THREE HUNDRED MILLION

Will be Floated Toward the End of October, Rate of Interest to be Five and a Half Per Cent. Same as For Victory Bonds.

Ottawa, Aug. 22.—The new domestic loan will probably be floated towards the end of October, and conferences are being held from time to time by the Finance Department to make arrangements. The terms and conditions are yet to be announced, but the interest rate will likely be 5½ per cent. and the total $300,000,000. The loan is the main way of balancing public expenditures and deficient revenue. An idea of this situation may be gathered from the fact that, while the aggregate outlays of the current fiscal year will be $820,000,000, the estimated revenue from ordinary sources is but $250.000.000. Statistics just issued show that revenues are lagging behind. The first month of the current fiscal year the total revenue was $99,000.000, an increase of $8,000.000 compared with a year ago; but, on the other hand, expenditures on consolidated fund totalled $76,000.000. and on capital account was $117,000.000. This total of $193.000.000 is just under a hundred millions less than the revenue For war purposes the country is still spending a million a day, while on public works and other services the outlay has increased much since peace came. For the first four months of the fiscal year it totalled $76,000.000. as gainst $32.000,000 in the same period last year. Interest cuts a large figure.

Trade with the United States stil. shows a decidedly adverse balance In May imports totalled $68.000,000 and exports $35.000,000, and in June the respective totals were $61,000.000 and $29.000,000. It is this factor which accounts for unfavorable exchange, and which makes improbable the placing of a slice of the loan in the States, though it is fully expected that a lot of American money will be sent to Canada and invested in the bonds. payable here.

CRUSHING DEFEAT ADMINISTERED TO BOLSHEVIKI ARMY BY POLISH TROOPS

Soviet Forces Fleeing in Haste at all Points—Fortress of Rovno Captured by Poles, Who Are Advancing North and South of Pripetk—Anti-Bolshevists and Polish Commanders Continue Their Offensive on a Large Front.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Copenhagen, Aug 22. Polish troops have administered a crushing defeat to the Bolsheviki and Soviet forces are being pursued everywhere, the Polish General staff at Warsaw has announced.

The fortress of Ronvo, in Volhynia, northeast of Dunbo, has been captured by Poles after hard fighting East of Minsk the Poles have reached the line of Ihumen, Dortynd.

Still Advancing

Apparently the Poles are advancing north and south of Pripetz Marsh, east of Brest Litovsk Ihumen is forty miles east of Minsk. Rovno is one of a triangle of fortresses in southwestern Volhynia The other two, Lutsk and Dudno, have been captured by Poles within the last few weeks.

Victory Contines

General Petlura, the Ukranian leader, and Gen. Denekine, the anti Bolshevists Commander in Southern Russia, continue their offenses successfully, acording to reports received London on Thursday, by prominent Poles.

Soviets Retiring

The advance of the Poles puts the Bolshevik front in action from Minsk to the northeast of Odessa A Bolshevik wireless communication received in London, Thursday night, said that Soviet troops were retiring before Denekin forces in the regions of Zudna and Morenovoe.

ARCHDUKE JOSEPH EXPECTED TO RESIGN WITHIN A FEW DAYS

Supreme Council Has Insisted That This Step Be Taken by Hapsburg Head of Hungarian Affairs—Archduke's Government Not in Any Sense Popular

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Aug. 22 The supreme council of the Peace Conference expects to hear of the resignation of Archduke Joseph as head of the Hungarian government within a few days.

Apparently the council is of the opinion that it is not necessary to take any more drastic steps than those outlined in instructions sent to the inter-allied military mission in Budapest on Tuesday or Wednesday for delivery to the Hungarian Government. In these instructions council set forth tha it did not regard the Governme Archduuke Joseph as in any sen opular one, and declared it would not deal with it.

Paris, Aug 21- Herbert Hoover, head of the international relief organization who has just returned from a two weeks' trip through Central Europe, told correspondents today that it is imperative that decisive diplomatic action be taken immediately to displace Archduke Joseph as head of the Hungarian Government and to give Hungary a chance to establish a popular Government. The new countries of Central Europe, Mr. Hoove said, are terrorized by the tolerance shown toward the setting up of the Hapsburg Government in Hungary.

Force Resignation

In discussing the Hungarian situation with the newspaper men, Mr. Hoover asserted that Archduke Joseph's resignation can be forced within five days if the Supreme Council takes a firm stand, but that bloodshed will result if such action is postponed for a month.

The Roumanians, Mr. Hoover added, still are requisitioning Hungarian food Only yesterday, he said, the Roumanians, under the eyes of American officers, seized eight truckloads of medical supplies and food destined for the children's hospitals of Budapest, paying no attention to the warnings of the Supreme Council.

CARDINAL RAPS PROFITEERING

Gibbons Commends U. S. Federal Efforts to Reduce Living Cost.

Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 22.—Cardinal Gibbons in an interview here today strongly condemned profiteering.

"I would like to speak in commendation of Attorney-General Palmer and the administration in the work of curbing the profiteer," said the cardinal. "It is necessary that the high cost of living be reduced, especially when it is shown that one of the reasons for it is that certain persons are obtaining excessive profits at the expense of consumers. Profiteering can be justified by nothing and it should be stopped immediately by as drastic measures as are at the command of the Government."

A proposition for insurance against drought and frost is being considered by the Alberta Association of Municipalities.

LIBERTY LEAGUE GETTING TO WORK

MEETING TO ORGANIZE FOR REFERENDUM CAMPAIGN ACIVITIES LAST EVENING.

HEADQUARTERS 440 WATER ST.

A MEMBERSHIP OF SIXTY NOW—WAYS AND MEANS FOR SECURING SPEAKERS.

The newly organized Citizens' Liberty League met in the G.W.V.A. assembly hall last night to discuss executive matters.

Twenty members were present including three ladies, and paid-up membership now numbers sixty. The fee is one dollar.

The league will establish their headquarters in Mr J. Guise-Bagley's office, Water street, for the present, where some of the executive may be communicated with day and evening by phone or otherwise.

Mr. Guise-Bagley is hoping for a committee room in each polling ward eventually, for, as he pointed out, it is organization that wins in an election, and prohibitionists are thoroughly organized.

The meeting also discussed the need for running a moderate advertising campaign to instruct doubting citizens that the Liberty League spell personal freedom in all things, and is not confined to the advocacy of liberty to exercise one's own personal views in the matter of strong drink—the league does not advocate the open bar by any means, and this the league wishes to be distinctly understood.

Ways and means for securing prominent speakers, and a suitable hall to which the general public might be invited to listen to them expound the league's aims and objects entired into the evening's deliberations.

That Col. Machin will be heard in Peterborough at an early date may be taken as a foregone conclusion.

The meeting last evening resolved itself into more of a conversational gathering than working aggregation, and more organized support will have to be forthcoming if Peterborough's branch of the Citizens' Liberty League expects to exercise any serious influence in the coming referendum.

Liberty buttons were distributed.

AMERICAN BARGE SINKS OFF QUEBEC

ALL HER CREW SAVED BY DREDGE EXCEPTING A WOMAN COOK.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Quebec, Aug. 22—The American barge "Captain Dunn" from Great Lakes sank this morning off the breakwater.

The barge had come up from points below the river with pulpwood, half an hour before, collided with Ponte A. Carey wharf and immediately sprung a leak. The crew sped her towards Beaupre Flats to beach her, but she sank on the way.

All the crew were saved by the dredge working near by, except the cook, a woman, who was drowned.

FAMOUS N.S. SHOCK -TROOPS HOME AGAIN

WITHSTOOD DECIMATING FIRE FROM GERMANS ON THREE SIDES.

New York, Aug. 21.—Incoming transports today bore part of the famous shock forces of the 3d division—the 30th infantry regiment—and the equally notable 38th infantry. The America brought the 30th complete and following it was the Matsonia, carrying 1,010 officers and men of the 38th. Each of these regiments lays claim to being the one Gen. Pershing commended without naming when he referred to one regular infantry regiment of the 3d division which had withstood a decimating German fire from three sides.

Nearly 350 convalescent wounded soldiers from Brest helped to make up the America's total of 2,516 passengers. The Matsonia carried 1,661 and the Troy, also due to dock before night, bring 2,395, representing many scattering units.

STEEL WORKERS VOTE STRIKE

Unanimous Ballot Reported Cast by American Unions.

Youngstown, O., Aug. 21—Under the presidency of John Fitzpatrick, the American Federation of Labor's National committee on organization in the iron and steel industry, met here at noon today to begin canvassing a strike vote taken among twenty four unions which have members in the steel industry and to decide whether or not these unions will be asked to present demands and back them up with a strike.

W. Z. Foster, secretary-treasurer of the committee, said that the vote was practically unanimous for a strike in this and in other districts.

UKRANIANS CAPTURE ODESSA PORT

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 22.—Ukranian troops have captured the city of Odessa, the most important port on the Black Sea, it was announced here today by the Ukranian mission. The bolsheviki were reported driven from Odessa by the populace some time ago.

HAD STILL IN HIS CELLAR

And Guelph Man Pays Fine of $400 for Offence.

Guelph, Aug. 22.—Joseph Bronan, was charged before Magistrate Watt, by Inspector B. Iler of the inland revenue department with having in his possession illegally a part of a chemical still. This still was found in the cellar of the house, secreted behind the furnace. Bronan pleaded not guilty. He said the still was left there with him by a man named Fattore an dthat he didn't know even how to use it.

Evidence was produced to show that in the cellar there was a large quantity of raisins and choke cherries in a state of fermentation, and there was also found a small bottle of alcohol, strength 23.6 under proof. The magistrate had no hesitancy in registering a conviction and a fine of $400 and costs was imposed.

THREE BOATS WITH TROOPS

Saxonia Docks This Afternoon, Belgic and Royal George Tomorrow.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Halifax, N. S., August 22. — The "Saxonia" with returning Canadian soldiers, advises that she will dock at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

The "Belgic" is due at 6 o'clock tomorrow morning, and the "Royal George" at 10:40 o'clock tomorrow night.

ALL "LEGITIMATE" THEATRES CLOSED

VAUDEVILLE HOUSES ALSO SLATED TO CLOSE THEIR TICKET OFFICES ANY DAY.

DEARTH OF AMUSEMENT

FEDERATION OF MUSICIANS CALL OUT MEMBERS IF ACTORS STRIKE NOT SETTLED.

Chicago, August 22—With all "legitimate plays in Chicago stopped this afternoon and evening, Chicago theatregoers may be confronted with empty vaudeville and burlesque theatres any day now. In that case the only theatres open in the city will be the "movies."

All matinee performances in the loop were halted yesterday afternoon and it is expected that all evening performances will be stopped.

The musicians and stage hands in the vaudeville and burlesque theatres were working yesterday, but Joseph F Winkler, president of the Chicago Federation of Musicians, threatens to call out the musicians of the Producing Managers' Association does not give in to the striking actors.

Winkler, in the opinion of labor leaders, "put one over on the managers when he ordered more than a hundred musicians to strike in sympathy with the actors, following last night's performances in loop theatres. He issued an order to the musicians that they were to play in the theatres "only upon receipt of a positive and separate order for each day."

"No court can compel me to order my men to go back to work," he said, "and its' too late for any injunction now. If the managers don't get busy this afternoon, Dick Green, secretary of the stage hands, and I will order all vaudeville and burlesque house employes to quit. We'll close every theatre in Chicago to win this actors' strike."

Chorus Girls Wait in Tights.

Nearly one hundred chorus girls stood around the stage of the Palace Theatre yesterday afternoon garbed in flesh colored tights and ballet dresses, and waited for the matinee curtain to rise. At 2 o'clock Earl Steward, manager, called the show off. The girls made a rush for the bathing beaches and parks.

At the Garrick, Studebaker, Olympic and Palace Theatres tickets were still on sale this afternoon. Manager Steward had orders from New York to continue the ticket sale, but he didn't believe there would be any performance until the strike of actors, musicians and stage hands was settled.

AUTO AND STREET CAR COLLIDE

Car Owned by Sam Cohen is Seriously Damaged.

A car owned by Mr Sam Cohen, Charlotte St., was badly damaged when it collided with a street car this morning.

Mr. Cohen states that on coming slowly out of his driveway on the south side of Charlotte St., he turned east and one wheel of his car ran on the street car track. Just at this moment he perceived a street car coming west and immediately put on his brakes and attempted to reverse. In his excitement, he stalled his engine and remained stranded on the track a helpless victim of the impending collision. The street car hit the auto on the left wheel and fender, bending the fender and totally shatterin gthe steering apparatus. In the opinion of Mr. Cohen the strete car had ample time to stop after he had stalled.

STOLE CHAMPAGNE FROM LEGISLATION

PROMINENT CITIZEN OF CHATHAM CHARGED WITH ROBBING CELLAR.

Chatham, Aug. 22.—A reward of one hundred dollars, offered by G. W. Sulman, M.L.A., for information leading to the arrest and conviction o fthe parties who broke into his residence and stole a case of champagne, resulted in information being disclosed as to the activities of a number of local young men, who will be charged with the theft. For certain reasons the names of the youths have been withheld, but it is reported that the youths are the offsprings of some of Chatham's leading citizens

It is reported that the boys in question sold quantities of liquor at Erie Beach when a dance was in progress on Tuesday night. The police are investigating other phases of the case, which might lead to the prosecution of some of the boys, who are alleged to have been members of the party which on the night of Aug 2 raided the home of another prominent citizen and relieved him of 20 cases of whiskey.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

FRIDAY, AUGUST 22, 1919

SITUATION WANTED.

WANTED, a position as representative in Parliament in some riding in Canada. No objection to leaving home. Salary wanted, regular schedule rate. Applicant has had a few years' experience in the business. Reasons for leaving last place conclusive even if not entirely satisfactory. Apply at once to Mackenzie King, Ottawa.

Mr. King has been called the friend of Labor by enthusiastic admirers. He at least knows what it is to be out of congenial employment, and is in a position to sympathize with the workingman who, looking for a job, is willing to leave home and the scenes of his youth to work among aliens.

FORECASTING THE RESULT.

THE TORONTO STAR, Liberal, but sanely so, says that no one is rash enough to make predictions at this stage about the result of the next election. It does not, however, indulge in any hope that the Government's majority will be overcome. The women's vote and the U. F. O. loom up as the possible deciding factors.

At the general election in 1914 the Conservatives secured a majority of 57. The Government had 84 members, the Liberals 25, Independents one and Labor one. A Legislature so top heavy is not desirable in any province, and a reduction of at least 50 per cent would make for the general welfare.

The Government scored 217,219 out of the popular vote of 94,914, thus giving them a majority of 55,425 over the Liberals alone. Of the 20 bye-elections held since 1914 the Conservatives have won twelve, the Liberals six, and the U. F. O. three.

The present Government majority is 44, the membership being made up of 76 Conservatives, 29 Liberals and three U. F. O. Two Conservative seats and one Labor seat are vacant.

That is the situation that confronts Hartley Dewart the new leader of the Opposition. That is the majority that he has to overcome with nothing more at his command than the voicing of unfounded charges with flamboyant oratory, and with a following lukewarm and disjointed.

Partisan though it may be, the Toronto Star is too seasoned a campaigner to risk its reputation as a prophet by indulging any fancy that the Liberal train with Hartley Dewart in the engine cab can make the grade.

MACKENZIE KING HALTED.

PROBABLY WHEN Mackenzie King was elected to the leadership of the Liberal party he imagined, like Edmond Dantes when he located a fabulous fortune, that the world was his. Everything was to be made easy for him. He was the one hope to effect the temporal salvation of his country. Ontario constituencies were to vie with each other in offering him a chance to represent them at Ottawa. The vacant riding of Glengarry and Stormont was fixed upon by the party leaders as the logical political home of Mr. King. On the face of it the situation appeared like an auspicious opening for the new leader. If nationality, ties of race, count for anything in politics, that element was not lacking. In 1917 the constituency in question elected a Laurier representative, a rabid anti-conscriptionist, and Mr King measures up to these requirements. It is, too, a riding in which the majority of the voters are farmers, and the new platform of the Liberal party has been acclaimed as making special concessions to the cause of agriculture. A letter was sent to the voters of Glengarry and Stormont asking that Mr. King be allowed a walkover.

The bait proved of no avail. Nothing turned out as the leaders planned, and at the very outset of his new career Mr. King has received a setback which cannot be regarded as other than a rebuke to the party as a whole as well as to the new leaders personally. The farmers of Glengarry want neither Mr. King nor his policies, and have put up a candidate of their own. This effectually disposes of the aspirations of Mr. King in that direction, and he announces that it would not be advisable for him to contest the riding with a farmer.

Neither advisable nor safe. The attitude taken by the farmers of Glengarry at their convention the other day is especially significant. The Celtic mind has been tempered and has undergone a change since the election of 1917. If a mistake was made in that contest, the error is not to be repeated. The so-called farmers' plank in the Liberal paltform has been openly spurned in a constituency of agriculturists. Both Mr King and his political creed have been turned down when the party looked for enthusiastic support.

Parliament will meet one week from Monday with a nominal leader of the Opposition. The new head of the party will be a man without a seat. His rejection in Glengarry, rejection as unmistakable and emphatic as though a majority had been piled up against him at the polls, can be regarded as his third defeat in the past eight years. Mr. King's truckling to the alien vote in his home riding in 1911, when he urged the defeat of Sir Robert Borden because the latter proposed to strengthen the British navy to make war on Germany possible, did not save him from disaster. In North York two years ago his hostility to the proposition to extend help to the men in the trenches again sealed his doom. And now Glengarry will have none of him.

With recent events in Glengarry before them, how can the Liberals claim that they have gained anything or strengthened themselves in the least by the election of Mr. King?

The differences in the party have not been smoothed out by placing him at the head of the column. The Liberals have merely a sectional leader today, just as they had to their cost in 1917. The leading Liberal papers of the West fail to enthuse, while some actually brand the selection as a lamentable blunder. Ontario shows the same lack of warmth. Mr. King has been rejected in a constituency of farmers. He has been turned down in a riding where his stand on the conscription issue was endorsed two years ago. Ontario farmers have passed on the leader and his platform and condemned both. Mr. King would meet with the same reception in any constituency where the majority of the voters were wage-earners. His stand on the question of Asiatic labor would assure him such a fate. If he is forced to find a seat in Quebec, as looks probable at present, the Liberal party will find itself in the same jug-handled position it has held since the beginning of the war, and even the alien leader cannot muster the unanimous support of the French-Canadian electorate, lacking racial and other qualifications as he does.

LABOR LAWS IN ENGLAND.

THE BRITISH House of Commons is now considering a bill which provides that eight hours shall constitute a day's work throughout the United Kingdom and that all overtime shall be paid for at increased rates. There is every prospect that the measure will become law. This action is the logical sequence of the policy agreed upon by the League of Nations, all signatories to that agreement being pledged to enact such legislation.

The example set by the members of the Peterborough Council, outside of the Labor representatives, has been lost upon the British House of Commons. There are aldermen in this city who personally and officially are opposed to such terms with Labor. In this category appears the mayor, who has placed himself on record as giving his employes an eight-hour day only under compulsion. Personally and privately he is opposed to the idea and to the principle involved.

Every man, private citizen, mayor or alderman, has a right to cherish his own opinions. It is really too bad, however, if these opinions conflict with those of the skilled statesmen who devised the covenant of the League of Nations, and if the holders of these opinions are in an official position, to throw obstacles in the way of an international agreement designed by the master minds of the day to better the social conditions of wage-earning humanity.

The United States Senate is fighting the League of Nations just as the Peterborough Council did, to little purpose. But the inspiration is different. With the senators the issue is held to be the autonomy of the republic. With our own aldermen no higher motive for opposition could be urged than a trifling inconvenience, perhaps a slight loss, to those who employ labor and whose aim is to get as much as possible out of their employes. Canada's right to self-government is not affected or menaced, whether the street laborers in this city or the workmen on the Hunter street bridge work eight or nine hours.

EDITOR'S MAIL

THE LIBERTY LEAGUE

Editor Review: Replying to the letter of your esteemed correspondent in your issue of Thursday, I note that he says that my letter is a fair specimen of a prohibitionist's letter. I feel that he does me too much honor, for I did not presume to speak for any party, but merely stated my own personal views.

But for the purpose of this correspondent I will take the gentleman at his word, and will allow my letter, to every word of which I still adhere, to stand as a fair specimen of a prohibitionist's letter, while I ask your readers to accept his letter, including the editor's note, as a fair specimen of an anti-prohibitionist's letter.

VARIETY IN DIVORCE LAWS

The divorce law reformers are collecting data from all nations with a view to obviating the moral shipwrecks of wedded lives. In Austria, it seems, "an insuperable aversion" is a ground for divorce. Greeks resident in that country have eleven different causes, including "irreconcilable hatred." Belgium recognizes six grounds, including a penal sentence and the "consent of both." Bulgaria has two grounds and Denmark five—including leprosy and absence for five years. In France divorce is not easy, and publication of a case in the press may entail on the newspaper a fine of £40.

Germany accepts three years insanity. Greece will divorce a wife who goes gadding about without her husband's consent to races, theatres and sports. Ireland has no divorce law, neither has Italy, nor the State of South Carolina. Holland hears her cases secretly. In Norway, the Royal decree must be invoked. In Sweden "extravagance" will count, and Switzerland accepts "incompatibility of temper, rendering wedded life unbearable." Scots law holds four years of "malicious desertion" as dissolving the marriage tie.

MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT'S EDEN

"Eden" has changed since Martin Chuzzlewit and Mark Tapley tried to develop the spot which Dickens is said to have described under that name in the State of Missouri. The swamp was too much for them. But now comes the report that this identical tract has lately produced 56,000 bushels of corn and has 350 acres successfully planted to oats and 125 acres profitably raising alfalfa. In 1910 the land which Dickens is held to have named Eden was still as Chuzzlewit and Tapley found it and fled from it; the soil was good, but the river annually overflowed it, and made it an unprofitable swamp. Then came a farmer from Indiana who said "no land is low land if properly drained," and organized a drainge project. The cost of reclamation was $30 an acre. Today the reclaimed land is worth over $100 an acre, and that part of the once hopeless Eden which the organizer improved for himself is considered perhaps the most valuable farm in the state.

THIS PROFITEERING HYSTERIA

(New York Commercial.)

Occasionally in some well ordered community a dog will bite a child and immediately the cry of "mad dog" is raised, until every canine for miles around is under suspicion and every dog at large is supposed to be mad. The cry of profiteering has been raised until every one engaged in business is suspected and every politician, large or small, who may be any stretch of imagination have authority in the matter is running around in circles and shouting himself hoarse. Investigations are being multiplied. Governors are talking of calling legislatures in special session, district attorneys and grand juries are hunting for evidence. Congress is remaining in session and even the President of the United States is taking a hand in it. All of this has been moving at high speed for the past two weeks, with the net result that an obscure little grocer somewhere up the state has been fined five hundred dollars for selling sugar at fifteen cents, which probably cost him more than he was supposed to sell at, and two or three lots of butter and eggs and coffee have been seized, which may have to be released when the merits of the case are tried.

All food in storage warehouses is under suspicion and it would not be in the least surprising if an attempt were made to force sales of food at this time which will be sorely needed during the winter. The Secret Service men are supposed to be investigating the storage warehouses and undoubtedly all the large institutions will be overrun for some time to come with investigators, big and little, and if this were not enough, Mayor Hylan has ordered the Fire Department to make a separate investigation, ostensibly to see if the fire laws are observed, but incidentally to spy out in the hope of discovering hoarded supplies.

This, of course, is an absurdity, for unless the firemen check up the actual stocks, which they can only do by actual count, their investigations will be useless, for they will be unable to tell whih particular supplies are being hoarded and which are legitimately in storage, nor will they be able to identify the ownership of the goods. All of this information is, of course, readily obtainable from the records in the warehouse offices, for it is inconceivable that such records can have been falsified to suit the occasion. The warehousemen are not, as a rule, the owners of the goods in their charge, and are interested in nothing more than taking care of them pending their withdrawal by their actual owners. Still it is more spectacular to have the firemen leave their fire houses and go pussyfooting around, hunting for something they would not recognize if they found it.

Still another absurdity is the proposition to mark goods with the prices paid for them when they go in, so that when they come out it will be known whether any profiteering is going on. Those who are sponsors for this proposition have nothing to say about making allowance for the cost of the storage, insurance, waste, interest on notes, cartage, clerk hire, spoilage or the dozen other items that have to be allowed for between the wholesale cost price and the retail selling price. No allowance is to be made, for instance, for the candling and repacking of eggs.

If many of these drastic propoositions are carried out it will result in many food distributing firms going out of business, for it will be impossible for them to make money under the conditions being prescribed. Profiteering is reprehensible and should be punished. It undoubtedly exists to a certain extent, but until the underlying causes of the high cost of living are reached through the operation of natural laws no real relief can be expected.

High Cost Of Living In Chicago

Compare These Prices With Those You Pay On The Market Or In Stores in Peterborough

"We'll try a north side public market today," said the Woman Who Has Been Married Many Years, as she and the Very Young Married Woman sallied forth, market baskets on their arms. "I'm going to buy a good supply if things are reasonable."

The shoppers found the market near Elston and Central Park avenue. It was thronged. People came in automobiles, on foot and on the street cars. The transportation facilities are excellent. It reminded the two women of a small sized market square, with the shoppers jostling each other good naturedly as they strolled from booth to booth, buying where prices were low and quality excellent.

86 Farmers There One Day.

"We took care of eighty-six farmers last Saturday," the market manager told the interested women. "Our total for last week was 194 farmers—some who come every day, some two or three times a week and some only on Saturdays.

"Everything is absolutely fresh — the stuff is rarely loaded the night before, but picked early in the morning. Some of these men bring in two loads a day. Some of the farmers are in as early as 4 o'clock on Saturday morning, in order to get a good place. Saturday is the big day, of course.

"A business men's association is back of this market—the idea was to see if it wouldn't improve business conditions around the corners. And it surely has. When we started there were ten empty stores in the block; now there is not one, and every merchant has doubled his business.

Price Boosting Barred.

"We don't stand for any price boosting. My partner and I own the property, and while we do not control prices any man who sells above a reasonable profit over wholesale market price is put out.

"We do not attempt to set prices—competition is free and open, excepting that a man does not dare go above a certain price. Some times a man has a big load and wants to get rid of it quickly and get home—he sells his produce cheaply, and the shrewd housewife profits thereby. A difference in quality of produce also makes a difference in price."

"I certainly have enjoyed this market," said the Very Young Married Woman as she tried to board a car, burdened with overflowing basket and a couple of sacks. "But I'm very thankful I won't have far to walk with all this stuff."

The Woman Who Has Been Married Many Years laughed.

"Make a list of what you bought just as soon as you get home," she said, "and then compare the prices with your own grocer's. I want actual figures on your saving. I'll do the same. I'm sure we've saved quite a bit."

$1.40 Saved on Order.

"I saved $1.40 on my order—$1.26 when I charged up carfare," the very young married woman told the woman who has been married many years. "I couldn't wait until I saw you—I just had to phone. I'll read you my figures.

"I've plenty of ice, and I'm sure everything will keep nicely. I've enough green stuff to do me almost all week. Isn't that great?" asked the happy young woman.

"It certainly is," replied the woman who has been married many years.

"I'm a life member of the market basket brigade," laughed the very young married woman. "It's old high cost of living's deadliest foe!"

Its Uses.

"I see you have a scarecrow in your field," said the vacationist to the old farmer. "Do you find it effective?"

"Suttingly," replied the farmer. "So many blamed tramps cross over to see if the clothes on it are worth stealin', it keeps the birds away."

"You mean emulsion, don't you—not compulsion?" said the visitor.

"Well," rejoined Jimmie, "there was a good deal of compulsion about it."

Healthy Mothers Healthy Babies

Every true mother realizes the fact that her baby's health depends upon her own, that the very vitality of her child is influenced by her own physical condition. How important it is, therefore, to guard against any derangement of the female organs, which induce general weakness, nervousness, constant fatigue and utter inability to properly care for her child. Please remember, that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought health and strength to thousands of such mothers.

Mitchell, Ind.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me so much during the time I was looking forward to the coming of my little one that I am recommending it to other expectant mothers. Before taking it, some days I suffered with neuralgia so badly that I thought I could not live, but after taking three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was entirely relieved of neuralgia. I had gained in strength and was able to go around and do all my housework. My baby when 7 months old weighed 13 pounds and I feel better than I have for a long time. I never had any medicine do me so much good."—Mrs. Pearl Montman, Mitchell, Ind.

Good health during and after maternity is a most important factor to both mother and child, and many letters have been received by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., telling of health restored during this trying period by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

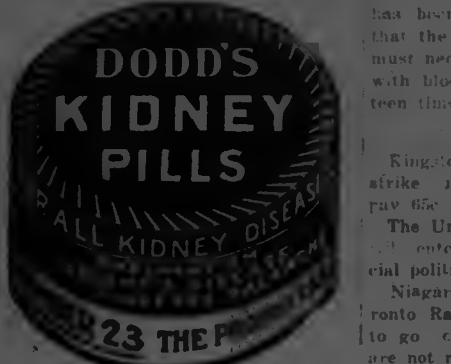
WHO PAYS DIFFERENCE?

Spread Between Price of Wheat Here and in England.

Ottawa, Aug. 21.—The brief cabled announcement that the British Wheat Commission has fixed prices of from $1.55 to $1.80 a bushel for wheat imported from Canada has aroused considerable interest here in view of the fact that the Canadian Government has provided for an initial advance of $2.15 a bushel to Canadian farmers whose grain is acquired by the Canadin Wheat Board. Under the arrangement here the Candian Wheat Board is to handle the whole crop and make advances based on $2.15 a bushel for wheat graded No. 1 northern, f.o.b. Fort William. Officials here have no information as to the action of the British commission, but the apparent spread between the alleged British import price and the initial advance to be made to Canadian wheat growers attracts attention here.



THANKS

TO THE PUBLIC:

Having disposed of my boot and shoe business known as the Peterboro Shoe Store to Messrs. Schwartz Brothers, I wish to thank all my friends and customers for the splendid patronage given to me up to the present. It is a pleasure to remember the cordial relations that have existed between the public and myself, and in introducing Messrs. Schwartz Brothers, I do so feeling sure that the same friendly feeling will be sustained, and the usual high character of the store continued.

I ask for them the continuation of your patronage, and promise the same courteous service from the Messrs. Schwartz as this store has been noted for in the past. High-grade Footwear at the closest possible prices will still be the motto of the Peterboro Shoe Store.

COLORED MURDER SUSPECT IS FREED

HOURS OF GRILLING FAIL TO FIND TRACES OF CRIME.

Chicago, August 21.—The efforts of the prosecuting machinery of the state and city have failed to prove that Tom Hamilton, colored, had an active hand in the murder last week in Evanston of Mrs. Effie L. Watkins, a white woman. That much was admitted yesterday morning, when the negro was given his liberty by Chief of Police Leggott of Evanston and Judge Huga Pam in the Criminal Court dismissed a writ of habeas corpus sought in behalf of the negro by his attorney, Ferdinand Barnett.

The release of the suspect came after many hours of grilling by the state's attorney's office and the police of the negro and the failure to find blood stains on his clothing. It has been concluded by the police that the murderer of Mrs. Watkins must necessarily have been spattered with blood, as she was stabbed fifteen times.

REV. W. C. RIDDIFORD AT PARK ST. CHURCH SUNDAY

Sunday next, August 24th, will be a day of specil services and interest at Park Street Baptist Church, arrangements having been made with Capt. (Rev.) W. C. Riddiford, of London, Ont., a late pastor of this church, and who has recently returned from overseas, where he served as chaplain to the forces, to take part in the services.

This will be a most favorable opportunity for the many friends comrades of the G.W.V.A. and brothers of the local Orange Lodges to once again meet Capt. Riddiford and extend to him a hearty welcome.

He will also give an address to the members and friends at the B.Y.P.M. meeting on Monday evening, August 25th.

IF KIDNEYS ACT BAD TAKE SALTS

Says Backache is Sign you have Been Eating Too Much Meat

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it generally means you have been eating too much meat, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels; removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the urine so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is a life saver for regular meat eaters. It is inexpensive cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink.

U.S. TO BAR THE ALIENS

No Immigration of Foreigners to be Allowed for Two Years.

Washington, August 21.—A bill to stop all immigration for two years and to deport all aliens who withdrew their first papers in order to escape military service during the war was introduced by Chairman Johnson of the House Immigration committee.

After the end of the two-year suspension period aliens would be entitled to admission to the United States only under a passport or on their written declaration to become American citizens. They would be required to register annually until citizenship was conferred. Fraudulent entry would be punishable by five years' imprisonment and $1000 fine, to be followed by deportation.

INSURANCE.

Curious "Risks" Accepted By the Underwriters.

There is an institution in London which insures against everything—from the loss of Atlantic liners to the birth of triplets. That institution is Lloyd's, and the underwriters there are men of the greatest power and influence. There is scarcely a thing under the sun that cannot be insured, and the underwriters at Lloyd's will accommodate people in almost any direction so long as the transaction is a legitimate risk and not a gamble.

Curious "risks" are continually being accepted by the underwriters, and it is by no means an uncommon thing for people to cover by insurance possible losses through earthquake, hurricanes and war. Men and women have protected themselves against loss through invasion, bombardment, and bombs dropped from Zeppelins. The bombardment of our unfortified coast towns by German vessels placed a lot of work into the hands of underwriters.

For years people took out policies against risks connected with the fear of war breaking out between certain Great Powers. Before the average man ever dreamed that we should be bound to take up arms against Germany the underwriters at Lloyd's quoted eight per cent. on the risk of an outbreak of hostilities between France, Germany and Great Britain occurring within six months from the taking out of the policy, and for twelve months 15 per cent. was quoted.

Some years ago the underwriters at Lloyd's received a curious inquiry from an undertaker in business in one of the poor districts of London, who wished to know at what price underwriters would relieve him from any liability for shocks which were caused to private persons by his coffins being taken inadvertently to the wrong houses at night.

It was stated at the time that the underwriters were willing to consider the proposition, provided details were supplied to them, such as the undertaker's annual turnover and the number of such shocks known to have been given.

The great "Cullinan" diamond was once taken from a bank vault, in which it was being safeguarded, and shown to the King of Spain. For that special "show" it was insured for half a million pounds. The rate was only sixpence per cent., yet the underwriters shared £250 among them on the transaction.

Actors and actresses frequently insure themselves for large sums. Parisian actresses and English actresses have insured their eyes, hair, and shoulders; Paderewski, the famous pianist, insured his fingers; while that famous dancer, Mademoiselle Napierkowski, has insured her feet for £10,000.—Family Herald.

Corea Abolishes Ore Royalties.

By a decree of the Government, the Corean mining ordinance has been amended so as to eliminate the royalty on gold, silver, lead and iron ores or alluvial gold and alluvial iron. The exemption of royalty will not apply, however, to special mining concessions that were granted before the date of the mining ordinance.

In Holland a useful gum or paste is being made from garlic.

The First Watches.

The first watches ever made were as big as soup-plates and as heavy as they were cumbersome.

The Emperor Charles V., for instance, had one which weighed 27 lbs. The watches of that day were very much like ordinary clocks. They were cylindrical in shape, finely chased, and had a hinged lid on one side to expose the dial.

A costly and elaborate watch was made for Sultan Abdul-Medjid by Messrs. Hart & Son, of Cornhill, in 1844. It was made of 22 carat gold and was 5 inches in diameter. It chimed the hours and quarters, but was without a bell, the striking parts being made up of wires. It possessed a powerful and resonant tone, was exceptionally harmonious, and sounded like a cathedral clock. Twelve hundred guineas was its cost.—Tit-Bits.

Figures Never Lie.

In January, 1910, there were in the United States 62,683 single men insane and 26,047 married men insane—which shows that the crazy men stay single. At the same time there were 37,115 single women insane and 35,975 married women insane—which proves that in January, 1910, married life made more women crazy than it did men. And the more you study these figures the crazier it makes you.—The Journal of the American Medical Association.

Missed the Vital Points.

Everybody who has used a telephone knows exactly what is meant by the following description of the way a certain person talked over the wire: The man at one end had become thoroughly exasperated and asked his friend if he were losing his hearing. His friend was an Irishman and replied: "I can hear you all right till you begin to talk, and then I can't understand a word you say."

NEW WORLD HITTING RECORD

Set by Wilhoit by Hitting Safely in Sixty-Nine Games.

Wichita, Kas., Aug. 22.—Joseph Wilhoit, outfielder of the local Western League Club, and who will go to the Boston Americans next month, yesterday ended his batting streak in which he set a new world record by hitting safely in sixty-nine consecutive games. The former record of forty-five consecutive games was made by Jackness, Oakland, Cal., in 1915.

Wilhoit, who formerly played with the Boston Nationals an the New York Giants, in the sixty-nine contests prior to today, was at bat 299 times and secured 151 hits. His percentage was 505. He obtained five home runs, eight triples, twenty-three doubles and 115 singles.

The Allies' Casualties.

Comparisons are odious, and when all have done magnificently one does not wish to institute them, but it is, I confess, a little irritating to see it constantly assumed in foreign newspapers that the British losses of men in the war were less than those of the continental allies. This is by no means the case, for, as is pointed out in a very careful statistical article in the current number of the "Round Table," the British Empire actually heads the list of casualties with 4.51 per cent. of its total white population (2,782,779 out of 61,-607,320) killed and wounded. France comes very near with 4.32 per cent. (1,730,000 out of 40,000,000). Serbia comes next with 3.56 per cent., and Belgium next with 0.78 per cent. The United States paid its full toll in the last months of the war, and had 230,419 casualties, but its percentage of 0.22 to total population naturally does not come into this comparison.

Have A Peep at The New Fall Coats on Saturday

The initial showing of Coats for Fall and Winter will be on our racks Saturday morning. Come and have a peep at them and learn just what Fashion favors for the coming season. There is a splendid showing and ample variety to chose from, if your buying must be done early.

Fabrics most favored are those with the softer finish which are exceptionally good, and with silver tones in beautifully soft tints are particularly in favor. Velours in pure wool will also be much in demand, and will be shown in some very handsome garments, while for later wear Plush is expected to be as much in demand as ever. The popular colorings are brown, green and navy, in a variety of shadings, with some two-tone effects that are exceptionally stylish.

If you are thinking of buying, or if only coming to look, we will be very glad to show you these new Fall styles Saturday.

CHARMING FALL MILLINERY READY TOO

Of particular interest for those who visit the store on Saturday will be the advance showing of Fall Hats, in styles adopted for early wear. These are more along the lines of the Ready-to-wear Hat which you see just as it is to be worn.

We will be glad to have you see them Saturday.

First Arrivals for Fall Wear Now at the Dress Goods Counter

If not the first to wear, you may be among the first to view this collection and inform yourself regarding the season's new fabrics for Autumn wear. Visit the Dress Goods Counter at your earliest convenience and look these fabrics over.

ATTRACTIVE PLAIDS

Attractive Plaids promise to be very much in demand both for children's wear and for ladies' separate skirts. Come, and you will see a splendid selection of medium priced qualities suitable for both. HARNESS RACES AT EXHIBITION

SPEED TRIALS AGAIN REVIVED AFTER LAPSE OF MANY YEARS.

Toronto, Aug. 22. After many years the speed trials have been revived at the Canadian National Exhibition, and judging from the entries it looks as if the track has done much good for the sport. Some years ago the track at the Exhibition was conceded to be the fastest half-mile oval on the continent. The track has been more or less neglected for some years past, but for the last eight weeks a staff of men have been angaged looking after the oval, and today it appears as if it had regained all its old time speed qualities. From 12 to 20 horses have been working out every day and the owners declare that the track has not lost any of its qualities. It has been decided to run off the races in three days, Saturday, Monday, and Tuesday. The entries for Saturday's events are as follows:

2.30 trot—Miss Clara Todd, The Saxon, Harry Ross, Bernard McKinney, Nannie Extellion, Mae McKinney, Helena Bingen.

2.30 pace—Billy Patch, Opera Boy, Bob Abdell, Helena Bingen, Viril Maid, ub. Frank M., Lady of the Lake, Darkey Hal, jr.; Steve Ayres, The Baronet.

2.16 pace—Dream Life, Herman Wenger, Lady Abbotsford, Jack Powder, Royal Dundee, Sid H., Adrian Pointer, Charles Patchen, Dan Elger, Steve Ayres, Chepstour Bell.

FUEL IS MADE FROM THE CITY'S GARBAGE

TORONTO FIRM CLAIMS TO HAVE FOUND SUBSTITUE FOR COAL.

The heating and burning qualities of Oakoal, the new substitute for coal being manufactured by the Ontario Oakol Company, were clearly shown last night by a demonstration in the home of one of the directors of the company. The briquettes were placed in an open grate of the English pattern, and a few moments after they were lighted the heat could be felt more than half-way across the room, which was about 30 feet long, in spite of the fact that several windows and all the doors were opened. It burns with a steady glow, omitting long, blueish white flames, but is entirely devoid of all smoke or soot. After having burned for more than an hour none of the briquettes had lost their shape.

VETERANS NAME CANDIDATE

Returned Soldiers to Contest Riding of East Hamilton.

Hamilton, Aug. 22.—The Grand Army of Canada formally entered the political arena when it nominated for the Provincial Legislature for the riding of East Hamilton, Captain Morris L. Fitzgerald, an original officer of Hamilton's 129th Battalion and later a member of the Royal Naval Air Service overseas. Samuel L. Landers, who has already been put forward as a Soldier-Labor candidate for the Ontario House in the riding, announced to-day that he would stay in the fight until the last vote is polled. The Independent Labor Party meets tonight to consider nominating a candidate.

BADGES FOR NAVAL SERVICE IN WAR

NEW ONES BEING DISTRIBUTED UPON APPLICATION BY VETERANS.

Ottawa, Aug. 22.—The Department of the Naval Service announces that the new naval war badge (class A.A.) is now ready for issue and is being distributed to those from whom applications have been received and who are entitled to them.

The badge is issued to ex-members of the Canadian Naval Service who have served at sea or overseas, during the war and have been honorably discharged; also under similar conditions to officers and men honorably discharged from the Imperial Naval Service, provided that they were resident in Canada on August 4, 1914, and have returned to reside in the Dominions.

Applications for all classes on naval war badges should be made by letter addressed to the Secretary, Department of Naval Service, Ottawa, with the words "war badge" in the lower left corner of the envelope.

CHANGES IN SALVATION ARMY

Canadian Officers Promoted—New Financial Sec. for S. America.

Important promotions in the Salvation Army have affected two officers statoined in Canada. Captain Robert Little, of the financial department of Toronto district, has been appointed financial secretary for the Salvation Army in South America. Captain and Mrs. Little left Toronto last night for Buenos Aires. Mrs. Little has been in Salvation Army work for 33 years, and has held many important posts in Ontario and Western Canada.

The other Canadian service promotion is that of Commissioner O. Sowton, in charge of the Canadian West with headquarters at Winnipeg. He has received orders from General Bramwell Booth to become chief of the Salvation Army in Sweden. He will succeed Commissioner Ogrin, who has been appointed to take over the work in Germany.

BANK MANAGER HANGS HIMSELF

CAUSE OF SUICIDE SAID TO BE WORRY OVER BUSINESS COMPETITION.

(Special Correspondence.)

Kingston, Aug. 22.—C. R. Jones, manager of the Sterling Bank, was found by his wife hanging in a barn at Tamworth, Ont., yesterday. He was 54 years of age, and leaves a wife and one son. Worry over business competition caused his suicide, it is thought.

HUNGARIAN CABINET UNDER FORMATION

ARCHDUKE JOSEPH REPORTED TO BE NAME AS COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Vienna, August 22.—The formation of a new Hungarian cabinet and the probably appointment of Archduke Joseph as commander-in-chief of the Hungarian army, were reported in government circles here today.

Baron Sigismund Perenyi, minister of the interior, according to advices from Budapest, has been asked to form a new cabinet.

PURSES OF GOLD FOR RETURNED HEROES

ELEVEN HEROES OF GREAT WAR ARE FITTINGLY WELCOMED HOME.

At a social given at Fairview Church, Smith township, August 19th, a very acceptable concert programme was followed by a formal welcome to eleven soldiers, back from overseas, accompanied by a purse of gold for each. The returned men whose service abroad in the greatest of all great world causes are Charlie Jefferies, George Lockington, Percy Cullen, Alf. Hudson, Fred Hill, Ablert Kennedy, Norman Joses, Bruce Bell, John Brown, Robt. Fowler, Cephas Heard, to whom Rev. Mr. Webster read an address, the presentation being made by Miss Anna Franks and Miss Mabel Mullen.

Two Made Sacrifice

The presentation was accompanied by the following address:

Dear Boys: We your friends and acquaintances have met together this evenin to welcome you back to our midst and to show our appreciation of your great service to our country. We are proud that our boys did not shirk the call to duty but were willing to leave their home in defence of the empire and to lay down their lives if need be for the cause of freedom.

We regret deeply the loss of two of our boys, Noble Milburn and Harry Heard, who were two of the many thousands to lay down their lives for their friends. We are thankful that you have been spared to enjoy the neighborhood as a slight token of our appreciation.

We trust that in the battle of life, you will be spared to still "carry on" as you did in the great battle over there."

Signed on behalf of the community

Harry Seabrook,
E. G. Mullen,
A. Armstrong

Mr. Charlie Jefferies on behalf of the boys replied in a few well chosen words, thanking the people for the gift: also thanking the Ladies' Aid of Fairview church for the parcels received from them while at the front which were highly appreciated by all the boys.

FOOD PROBE IN CALUMET

Hammond, Ind., Aug. 20.—Profiteers and food hoarders in the Calumet region after loud complaints of food and sugar prices in the cities of Hammond, Gary, East Chicago and Whiting, are receiving the attention of the department of justice, which has dispatched agents here to investigate.

Some dealers are charging 18 cents a pound for sugar. Charges have been made to federal authorities that vast quantities of cured meats and groceries have been brought to the region by Chicago wholesalers and stored wherever warehouses could be found.

NOTICE TO VETERANS

Veterans of previous wars are invited to attend the veterans' parade on veteran day at Exhibition camp on Wednesday, Aug. 27, being in position at extreme left of parade at 2 p.m. sharp.

Veterans parading in civilian clothes may wear medals if they so desire. Veterans attending in uniform will wear ribbons only.

POLITE BANDITS SECURE $1,012

CHESTERFIELDRIAN "BABY" HOLDUPS RETURN DROPPED PURSE TO GIRL.

Now we ave te nhervous, polite baby bandits Mrs. Robert C. Anderson and her daughter, Miss Martha Anderson, of 619 Fullerton parkway, and Victor Irving, an actor, were the victims. They lost two diamond rings, a diamond bar pin and $12 respectively. The jewelry is valued at about $1,000.

the home of Mrs. Anderson about 11 o'clock last night when the bandits hopped from a doorway at 522 Fullerton parkway. They trembling presented revolvers and, while one stood guard, the other requested the ladies to remove the jewelry, while he ransacked the actor's pockets. Miss Anderson was frightened when the bandits appeared and dropped her silver mesh bag to the sidewalk. It contained considerable money, but one of the nervous bandits immediately stooped, picked it up and handed it back to her without attempting to search it.

Both robbers were masked and wore cloth hats.

DOES NOT WISH TO GIVE WAY TO NEW LIBERAL LEADER

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Kitchener, Aug. 22.—Friends and supporters here of W. D. Euler, M.P., for North Waterloo, do not take kindly to the suggestion that he resign to provide for the new Liberal Leader, Hon. McKenzie King, as suggested by a local paper.

A SPECIAL COURSE FOR SCH'L NURSES

TWO WEEKS' TRAINING TO PROMOTE UNIFORMITY IN WORK.

Twenty-five school nurses are registered for a special two-weeks' course to promote uniformity in the work of school nurses and officials throughout the province, which is being held this week in the Medical Building of the University of Toronto. Two lectures will be given daily by Ontario physicians. The clinics and the baby welfare exposition at the Exhibition.

MRS. R.C. VANDERBILT SUES

Newport, R. I., Aug. 22.—Mrs. Cathleen (Neilson) Vanderbilt has begun divorce proceedings against her husband, Reginald C. Vanderbilt, of New York, by having legal service made on him at his farm in Portsmouth. Mrs. Vanderbilt alleges desertion and will ask for the custody of their only child, a daughter, Cathleen. Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt were married sixteen years ago. He is the youngest son of the late Cornelius Vanderbilt.

Winnipeg now pays 15 cents a quart for milk.

TORONTO FAIR OPENS SATURDAY

Gates to the Big Show Will be Opened at 8 A.M.

The Canadian [illegible] Exhibition will go off to a real start Saturday. It will be no half-hearted preliminary canter, but a beginning in earnest. The gates will open at eight in the morning, and everything will be in full swing just as on the following week days, the only difference being that Saturday night there will be a military tattoo instead of the spectacle which commences Monday night and continues thereafter. In Saturday night's affair 20 bands will participate, including the famous Grenadier Guards Band under Captain Williams, and altogether there will be about 500 musicians.

An interesting piece of news which came yesterday was that 500 men and 25 officers of the battle cruiser Renown will be in attendance on Monday.

MARTIAL TROUBLE OUT WEST

Eleven Hundred Divorces Are Asked for in Manitoba.

Winnipeg, Aug. 22.—An announcement made at the law courts states that there are more than eleven hundred divorce applications filed for hearing when the Court of King's Bench opens for the fall sittings, September 15. Six Judges will be occupied hearing the cases. In the majority of cases, the divorce applications are being made by soldiers, who have returned to find their wives have been unfaithful. The cost of obtaining a divorce is from $200 up, according to lawyers.

THE FIRST SATURDAY SHOWING OF NEW FALL MERCHANDISE IN ALL DEPT.

To-morrow we make our advance showing of Fall Merchandise in all departments. Some of the old departments have been moved to new locations in the new building, others have been enlarged and others stocked with new lines, for which there was no room under the old roof. This advertisement is composed of groups in which each department has something of interest to announce concerning Fali Stocks : : :

OUR FIRST EXPOSITION OF FALL GARNEN'S

It is refreshing to view these new models, with the characteristic novelty that comes only with a new season. We will mention them briefly and let them tell their own story. If you are sufficiently interested, grant them a personal inspection.

The coats for the coming season, in many cases are made beautiful with wide Dolman sleeves and heavy trimmings of fur, large bone buttons and deep cuffs. On nearly every model, is a convertible collar. The following is the shade card for the 1919-20 season. Plum, Platinum, Bronze Green, Hunter's Green, Hena, Taupe and many shades of Brown, as Bark, Maple, African, etc. Priced from ....

Suits are semi-tailored and on the coat of one of our most stylish models is a series of four set-in pleats that extend from hem to shoulder and fly loose from hem to waist line. Button trimming is also much in evidence. The skirts are a trifle wider and a bit shorter than last season and we are sure the effect is smarter. The materials are: Chevlots, Silver Tone, Velour, Serge, Gaberdine, Tricotine and Boadcloths. The colors are the same as mentioned above in coat item. Priced up to . . . $79.00.

AUTUMN MILLINERY MODES EXEMPLIFIED IN VELVET AND VELOUR

They are forerunners of the many handsome creations that are to follow in our millinery department this autumn. They embody all that is new in millinery ideas. They are beautiful in quality, chic in style and above all, the workmanship is excellent.

Velvet and Felt Velour Hats in a charming array of colors, such as Brown, Taupe, Navy, Black, Blue, etc. They are in fascinating shapes with turned up edges, round Sailors, tam effects and several other novel models. All early fall millinery is lightly trimmed with ribbon and these are no exception to the rule. At any time we will be pleased to have you look over these new creations. Felt Velours, priced . . . . $5.50 to $8.00
Velours from . . . . $9.00 to $12.00

GLOVES OF SILK OR KID

The glove is all important when it comes to accessories for the new garment. Knowing this we have purchased liberally of silk gloves, for early autumn wear, in the darker tones. They come from such celebrated makers as "Queen Quality" and "Kayser". Priced from . . . . . 85c to $1.[illegible]

SILK DRESS GOODS AND GEORGETTES IN BRILLIANT OR SOMBRE AUTUMNAL COLORINGS

They have arrived in all the splendour of autumnal colors and will make stylish snug garments for the bleak days to come. If Silk or Georgette is your quest, you will find either here in a bountiful array of winsome tones.

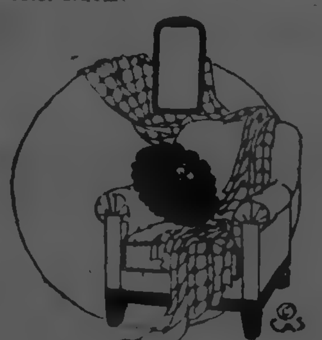
In wool materials, Broadcloths, Velours, Gaberdines, and Serges, are much in favor. As to color, Brown will be much in evidence, especially Reindeer and Bark. There will also be decided partiality to Bronze Green. We have a splendid range of the above shades in 54/56 materials at the following prices: Broadcloths, $6.95 yard; Gaberdines and Serges, $4.50 to $7.50 yard. Also Silvertone Velours for Coatings, at $6.75 yard.

Much can be said in favor of the ever popular crepe de chine, but we will content ourselves, merely, with a mention of a few of the shades for your selection: Taupe, Brown, Navy, Copenhagen, Stone Grey, Maize, Green, Pink, etc. Priced at . . . . $2.25 and $3.00 yard

Georgettes in a variety of twenty-five different shades. The quality is known as "Elbow Proof." The width is 40 inches. Priced at . . . . $2.75 yard.

DRAPERIES, FURNITURE, WALL PAPERS, CARPETS

These departments are all on third floor, excepting the furniture, which is now in its new location on the fourth floor. With these complete stocks of house furnishing necessities, you will find it convenient to arrange your color scheme.



Curtains, Cretonnes, Tapestries and all that the word stands for. They are here in lively colors and sombre tones, not to speak of the shades that are betwixt and between. Curtains $2.39 to $15.00 pair. Chintz, 35c to $3.00 yd. Nets and Scrims, 25c to $2.50 yard. Tapestries $2.75 to $7.50 yard.

In the new building on the 4th floor is a vast array of furniture. There are pieces of many descriptions and prices. The additional space that has been allotted to this department has enabled us to increase the stock, for your selection. Many of the pieces are shaped and finished in handsome, old period designs.

If your need is a Carpet, Rug, Linoleum or anything in the way of Floor Covering, there is much here that will meet with your approval. This stock has been selected with particular care. When you inspect them you will aree that they are an unusual assortment because of the excellent color harmonies and distinctive patterns.

Whether it be kitchen, or the most elegant room in the house you will here find a suitable paper. They come from the celebrated makers "Robert Graves & Co." New York, and several well known Canadian makers. Priced from 8c to $2.00

SHOES FOR THE OCCASION WHEN YOU PUT YOUR BEST FOOT FORWARD

Elegant models that will in no way mar your costume and they are made of such fine supple leather that comfort is bound to be the lot of the wearer. We have made a suitable home for such handsome footwear. This new department is on our second floor. New building.

If you are partial to Brown Calf Skin, you will find something in this model that will please you. It has a nine-inch top, receding toe, long vamp, and can be had either with a high French heel or low heel. Very modish and priced at $12.00

For she who will purchase a Suit of sombre color, this Grey top model will make a pleasing contrast. The toe is long and receding, and the entire vamp is of fine quality Black Kid, and the heel is the popular French shape. Priced at $14.00

Regarding Normal School.

Successful candidates, who desire to attend the coming session of the Normal Schools are advised that their applications for admission must be made immediately to the Deputy Minister of Education. Applicants should not delay mailing such applicants on account of not having received their certificates, but should state clearly on the forms when and where they passed the Middle School examinations for Entrance into the Normal Schools. The Normal Schools will open on Tuesday, September 16, at 9.00 a.m., at which time all candidates must present themselves. Applicants are required to be eighteen years of age before October 1st. Further particulars regarding the conditions fo admission may be obtained from the Syllabus and the Applications forms, copies of which may be had on application to the Deputy Minister of Education.

The answer papers of each candidate whose marks would appear to justify an appeal have been already reread by the Appeal Examiners. Where such a candidate has still failed, the statement of marks will be stamped as reread and no further appeal will be allowed. In all other cases of failure appeals will not be refused if made before September 1st. and accompanied by the fee of $2.00. Certificates and statements of the marks obtained by unsuccessful candidates are in course of preparation, and will be mailed in due course to the principals, to whom all candidates are referred for further information.

PETERBORO HORSES AT COBOURG SHOW

TOWN AND DISTRICT LOYALLY PATRONIZING REVIVED ANNUAL EVENT.

Cobourg, Aug. 22.—Citizens of town and district are giving to Cobourg Horse Show a loyalty that augurs well for succeeding shows in future years. There was a large crowd in town yesterday from all parts of the district, and had it not been for the heavy rainfall the attendance would have equaled Wednesday's. As it was a large number were present on the grounds, but the steady downpour of rain cut the program short, only a few events being run off. The military tattoo with massed bands, fireworks, bagpipes, sword dances, the dragoons and returned soldiers from Cobourg and district taking part, drew a large crowd tonight. The Highlanders' Band, Cobourg Citizens' Band, Port Hope and Alderville Bands furnished the music. Awards today were: Officers' open performance over jumps, 1, 2, 3 and 4, Shot Indian Snow, Longborough; The Whip, Enniscláire Farm, Oakville.

District mare or gelding, 1 and 2, Model Queen and Brookfield Nellie, N. Vermilyea and Sons, Belleville; 3, Rainstorm, G. N. Graham, Peterborough; 4, Royal Guest, C. G. Graham, Peterborough.

Single roadster, 15.2 and under, in harness—1 and 2, Molly Chimes and Lady, C. W. J. Crossen, Cobourg; 3, Sweet Story, W. J. Maher, Cobourg; 4, Edith Cavell, Stanley Blewett, Peterborough.

DESERVES ROYAL MEDAL

Kingston Man Saved American Woman From Drowning.

Kingston, Aug. 22.—The medal of the Royal Canadian Humane Society is being sought for John Prior of Howe Island, who last Saturday saved a young American woman from drowning in the river at Ireland. Though sixty years of age he jumped into the water with his clothing on and swam out to the place where she had sunk. He dived and brought her to shore and just in time to save her life.

THEATRICAL

MONEY'S WORTH AT GRAND LAST NIGHT

LONG PROGRAM OF MOVIES AND MUSIC WHICH DELIGHTED BIG AUDIENCE.

The patrons of the Grand were certainly given their money's worth last night, the program lasting from eight o'clock until well after eleven. The headline attraction was pretty Emmy Wehlan in "Fools and Their Money," but the pictures of local people evoked rather more interest than the films. The Vod-o-vil Movies brought some of America's best vaudeville artists to the local house and their work was much enjoyed. A comedy film was most laughable.

Newly Rich Couple.

In the feature film the story is of a newly-rich couple who are trying to break into society. The wife engages the daughter of a neighbor as her social secretary, although the secretary is several rungs higher on the social ladder than her employer. A son of the ambitious couple [illegible] in that this secretary was on[illegible] ing this wor[illegible] lark [illegible] groom to her [illegible] own home. Of course, they fall in love. The secretary foils the attempt of a [illegible] parasite to wed the daughter of her employers and very dramatically proves him guilty of theft.

Clever Acrobats.

In the Vod-o-vil Movies some very clever juggling and acrobatic work is seen. A parade of the performers is also given and an exhibition of diving and swimming by the lady members of the company.

Excellent Music.

The Grand orchestra plays several excellent selections during the evening which appeared to please the large audience. Mr. Howarth, the director deserves much credit for the high degree of excellence reached by his organization which has no doubt only been done by much hard work.

Repeat Tomorrow.

Last night's program will be repeated on Saturday at both matinee and evening performances.

A. T. Montreuil, Walkerville, has been recommended as collector of Customs for Windsor.

Sir Adam Beck has offered to take over the street railways of Port Arthur and Fort William and make them pay.

It is rumored that Mormon interests are trying to establish a colony in the Thousand Islands near Gananoque.

GUARDS BAND AT GRAND TONIGHT

EXCEPTIONAL OPPORTUNITY TO HEAR A $40,000 ATTRACTION.

His Majesty's Grenadier Guards band which plays at the Grand Opera House tonight is indeed a premier musical attraction.

It cost a small fortune to bring this band to Canada from England, over $40,000 being the amount the National Exhibition Board will pay for their three weeks' visit. This sum includes salaries and transportation charges on ocean and rail, together with hotel expenses.

Peterborough citizens are fortunate in having an opportunity to hear the British Grenadiers at the Grand Opera house tonight.

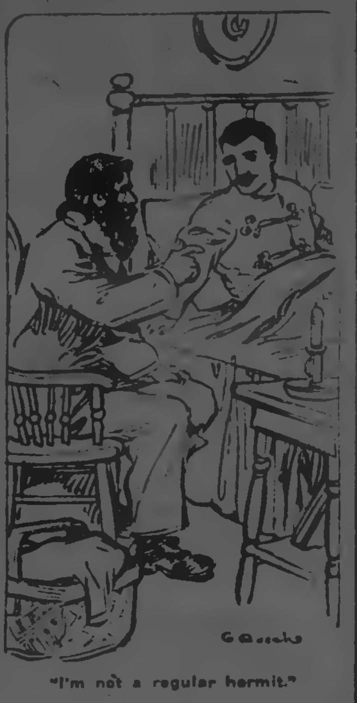
SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

BY EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

Out of a nearby door stepped the black garbed figure of Professor Thaddeus Bolton, and him Mr. Magee included in the presentation ceremonies.



"I'm not a regular hermit."

They talked little, being men unfed, while Jake Peters started proceedings in the kitchen and tramped upstairs with many pails of water.

"You ain't going to see any skirts up here," Mr. Bland promised him. And Mr. Peters, bringing the water from below, took occasion to point out that shaving was one of man's troubles directly attributable to woman's presence in the world.

At length the hermit summoned them to breakfast, and as they descended the heavenly odor of coffee sent a glow to their hearts. Peters had built a rousing fire in the big fireplace opposite the clerk's desk in the office, and in front of this he had placed a table which held promise of a satisfactory breakfast. As the three sat down Mr. Bland spoke:

"I don't know about you, gentlemen, but I could fall on Mr. Peters' neck and call him blessed."

CHAPTER VI.

"From Tears to Smiles."

THE gentleman thus referred to served them genially. He brought to Mr. Magee, between whom and himself he recognized the tie of authorship, a copy of a New York paper that he claimed to get each morning from the station agent, and which helped him greatly, he said, in his eternal search for the woman. As the meal passed, Mr. Magee glanced it through. Twice he looked up from it to study keenly his queer companions at Baldpate Inn. Finally he handed it across the table to the haberdasher. The dull yellow sun of a winter morning drifted in from the white outdoors; the fire sputtered gayly in the grate; also Mr. Peters' failing for literature interfered in no way with his talents as cook. The three finished the repast in great good humor, and Mr. Magee handed round cigars.

"Gentlemen," he remarked, pushing back his chair, "we find ourselves in a peculiar position. Three lone men, knowing nothing of one another, we have sought the solitude of Baldpate Inn at almost the same moment. Why? Last night, before you came, Professor Bolton, Mr. Bland gave me as his reason for being here the story of Arabella, which I afterward appropriated as a joke and gave as my own reason. I related to Mr. Bland the fiction about the artist and the besieging novelists. We swapped stories when you came. It was our merry little method of doubting each other's word. Perhaps it was bad taste. At any rate, looking at it in the morning light, I am inclined to return Mr. Bland's Arabella, and no questions asked. He is again the lovelorn haberdasher. I am inclined to believe, implicitly, your story. That is my proposition. No doubts of one another. We are here for whatever reasons we say we are."

The professor nodded gravely.

"Last night," went on Mr. Magee, "there was some talk between Mr. Bland and myself about one of us leaving the inn. Mr. Bland demanded it. I trust he sees the matter differently this morning. I for one should be sorry to see him go."

"I've changed my mind," said Mr. Bland. The look on his thin face was not a pleasant one.

"I have a letter to Mr. Quimby from my old friend, John Bentley," said the professor, "which I am sure will win me the caretaker's warm regard."

Mr. Magee looked at Bland.

"I'll get Andy Hutter on the wire," said that gentleman. "Quimby will listen to him, I guess."

"Maybe," remarked Magee carelessly. "Who is Hutter?"

"He's manager of the inn when it's open," answered Bland. He looked suspiciously at Magee. "I only know him slightly," he added.

"Those matters you will arrange for yourselves," Mr. Magee went on. "I shall be very glad of your company if you can fix it to stay. Believe it or not—I forgot, we agreed to believe, didn't we?—I am here to do some writing. I'm going up to my room now to do a little work. All I ask of you gentlemen is that, as a favor to me, you refrain from shooting at each other while I am gone. You see, I am trying to keep crude melodrama out of my stuff."

"I am sure," remarked Professor Bolton, "that the use of firearms as a means of social diversion between Mr. Bland and myself is unthought of."

"I hope so," responded Magee. "There, then, the matter rests. We are here—that is all." He hesitated, as though in doubt. Then, with a decisive motion, he drew toward him the New York paper. With his eyes on the headlines of the first page, he continued: "I shall demand no further explanations. And except for this once I shall make no reference to this story in the newspaper, to the effect that early yesterday morning in a laboratory at one of our leading universities a young assistant instructor was found dead under peculiar circumstances." He glanced keenly at the bald headed little man across from him. "Nor shall I make conversation of the fact," he added, "that the professor of chemistry at the university, a man past middle age, respected highly in the university circle is missing."

An oppressive silence followed this remark. Mr. Bland's sly eyes sought quickly the professor's face. The older man sat staring at his plate; then he raised his head and the round spectacles were turned full on Magee.

"You are very kind," said Professor Bolton evenly.

"There is another story in this paper," went on Mr. Magee, glancing at the haberdasher, "that, it seems to me, I ought to taboo as table talk at Baldpate Inn. It relates that a few days ago the youthful cashier of a bank in a small Pennsylvania town disappeared with $30,000 of the bank's funds. No," he concluded, "we are simply here, gentlemen, and I am very glad to let it go at that."

Mr. Bland sneered knowingly.

"I should think you would be," he said. "If you'll turn that paper over you'll read on the back page that day before yesterday a lot of expensive paintings in a New York millionaire's house were cut from their frames and that the young artist who was doing retouching in the house at the time has been just careless enough not to send his address to the police."

Mr. Magee threw back his head and laughed heartily.

"We understand one another, it seems," he said. "I look forward to pleasant companionship where I had expected solitude. Ah, here's Peters!" he added as the hermit entered through the dining room door at the side of the stairs.

"Peters," said Mr. Magee, "we have been wondering if you will stay on here and cook for us. We need you. How about it?"

"Well, I'll be glad to help you out," the hermit replied. "I guess I can manage to give satisfaction, seeing there ain't no women around. If there was I wouldn't think of it. Yes, I'll stay and do what I can to boost the hermit life in your estimation. I"—

He stopped. His eyes were on the dining room door, toward which Mr. Magee's back was turned. The jaw of Peters fell, and his mouth stood wide open. Behind the underbrush of beard a very surprised face was discernible.

Mr. Magee turned quickly. A few feet inside the door stood the girl of the station, weeping no more, but radiant with smiles. Back of her was the determined, impossible companion of yesterday.

"Oh, mamma," laughed the girl, "we're too late for breakfast! Isn't it a shame?"

"From tears to smiles," said Mr. Magee, taking the girl's hand. "What worked the transformation? Not the Commercial House, I know, for I passed it last evening."

"No, hardly the Commercial House," laughed the girl. "Rather the sunshine of a winter morning, the brisk walk up the mountain and the sight of the hermit of Baldpate with eyes like saucers staring at a little girl who once bought his postal cards."

"Then you know Mr. Peters?" inquired Magee.

"Is that his name? You see, I never met him in private life—he was just the hermit when I knew him. I used to come to Baldpate in the summers and send his cards back to the folks at home and dream dreams of his love story when from my window I saw the light of his shack at night. I'm so glad to meet Mr. Peters informally."

She held out her hand, but Peters, by long practice wary of women, had burdened himself with breakfast plates which prevented his clasping it. He muttered "How d'ye do?" and fled toward the door, narrowly averting what would have proved a serious collision with the large woman on the way.

"Mr. Peters meets so few of your sex in winter," Magee apologized, "you must pardon his clumsiness. This gentleman"—he indicated the professor, who arose—"is Thaddeus Bolton, a distinguished member of a certain university faculty, who has fled to Baldpate to escape the press of America. And this is Mr. Bland, who hides here from the world the scars of a broken heart."

The girl smiled brightly. "And you"—she asked.

"William Hallowell Magee," he returned, bowing low. "I have a neat little collection of stories accounting for my presence here, from which I shall allow you to choose later. Not to mention the real one, which is simple almost to a fault."

"I am so happy to meet you all," said the girl. "We shall no doubt become very good friends, for mamma and I have also come to Baldpate Inn—to stay."

Mr. Bland opened wide his usually narrow eyes and ran his hand thoughtfully over his one day's beard. Professor Bolton blinked his astonishment. Mr. Magee smiled.

"I for one am delighted to hear it," he said.

"My name," went on the girl, "is Mary Norton. May I present my mother, Mrs. Norton?"

The older woman adopted what was obviously her society manner.

"I certainly am pleased to meet you all," she said in her heavy voice. "Ain't it a lovely morning after the storm? The sun's almost blinding."

"Some explanation," put in Miss Norton quickly, "is due you if I am to thrust myself thus upon you. I am perfectly willing to tell why I am here, but the matter mustn't leak out. I can trust you, I'm sure."

"The bandits of Baldpate," Magee remarked flippantly, glancing at the two men, "have their own code of honor, and the first rule is never to betray a pal."

"Splendid!" laughed the girl. "You said, I believe, that Professor Bolton was fleeing from the newspapers. I am fleeing for the newspapers—to attract their attention, to lure them into giving me that thing so necessary to a woman in my profession—publicity. You see, I am an actress. The name I gave you is not my stage name. That, perhaps, you would know. I employ a gentleman to keep me before the public as much as possible. It's horrid, I know, but it means bread and butter to me. That gentleman, my press agent, evolved the present scheme—a mysterious disappearance."

She paused and looked at the others. Mr. Magee surveyed her narrowly. He wondered.

"I am to disappear completely for a time," she went on. "'As though the earth had swallowed me' will be the good old phrase of the reporters. I am to linger here at Baldpate Inn, a key to which my press agent has secured for me. Meanwhile the papers will speak tearfully of me in their headlines, at least I hope they will. Can't you just see them—those headlines? 'Beautiful Actress Drops From Sight!'" She stopped, blushing. "Every woman who gets into print, you know, is beautiful."

"But it'd be no lie in your case, dearie," put in Mrs. Norton, feeling carefully of her atrociously blond store hair.

"Your mother takes the words from my mouth," smiled Mr. Magee.

"From what part of Ireland do you come?" laughed the girl. She seemed somewhat embarrassed by her mother's open admiration. "Well, setting all blarney aside, such will be the headlines. And when the last clew is exhausted and my press agent is the same I come back to appear in a new play, a well known actress. Of such flippant things is a Broadway reputation built."

"We all wish you success, I'm sure." Mr. Magee searched his memory in vain for this "actress'" name and fame. The answer was simple. Another fable was being spun from whole cloth beneath the roof of Baldpate Inn. "We have a New York paper here," he went on, "but as yet there seems to be no news of your sad disappearance."

"Wouldn't it be the limit if they didn't fall for it?" queried the older woman.

"Fall for it," repeated Professor Bolton, not questioningly, but with the air of a scientist about to add a new and rare specimen to his alcohol jar.

"She means if they didn't accept my disappearance as legitimate news," explained the girl. "That would be very disappointing. But surely there was no harm in making the experiment."

CHEMONG REGATTA PREVENTED BY RAIN

ONLY FIVE RACES RUN OFF—REMAINING EVENTS TO BE RUN OFF SATURDAY, 2 P.M.

Rain and wind prevented most of the events of the Chemong regatta to be run off yesterday. The rain, which commenced at noon, kept city people from motoring out to witness the sports.

Sailing Events.

Sailing races were, however, run off in spite of inclement weather. The first race, a three-mile dinghy for the Chemong cup, was won by Eddis, with Hopkin's boat a close second. The winds along the Ennismore shore were very baffling, but in the four boats in the race all kept in touch and made a good race across the finish, Eddis' boat leading by a short margin.

The open sailing race proved about the best sailing event seen on the Hawartha Lakes for some time. Knapman got off to a start in the lead and maintained it for most of the course. When the boats were turning the buoy in front of the club house for the second round three of them turned almost together, the nose of Eddis' long boat being even with the stern of Knapman's. Along the Ennismore shore it looked like anybody's race, as one would draw ahead only to be forced to tack again. At the buoy H. Knapman lead and came with the wind to the finish well in front. The L.C.F. boat, sailed by Burret and Russell, came to grief, trying to tack in the first round, and was towed home.

The Kawartha Cup.

The judges had great difficulty in starting the six-mile dinghy race for the Kawartha cup. Just as they were getting the boats off to a good start Hopkin's boat upset, causing great amusement for spectators. The race could have gone on but the others entered showed a sportsman-like spirit, turned around and waited until the unfortunate boat could be righted and bailed out. This race was close all the way, the four dinghies crossing the line in rapid succession with Flanell leading and W. Eddis second.

The wind was too strong for canoe sailors, only two finishing out of several entries, R. Russel and R. Dixon, in the order named.

The ladies' single canoe was the only other race to be held, the ladies showing more courage than that exhibited by the men. This race was won by Miss Agnes Eastwood, with Miss Jean Eastwood second.

Great excitement was afforded by three upsets of the day. The sailing boat, L.C.F., upset close to the Ennismore shore and it was a considerable time before relief could be sent. Besides this unfortunate accident to the Hopkin's dinghy, Mr. Powell Gliddon was forced to take the water in an attempt to make too much speed in the canoe sailing race. She reported that the water was very cold.

The Dance.

A fairly large crowd attended the dance at night and Terpsicharean activities were indulged in to the irresistable music.

The remaining regatta events will be run off tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock.

RUTH IS BIG MORE WAYS THAN ONE

GEORGE S. ROBBINS TAKES ON BABE'S RECORD AND CHARACTERISTICS.

Babe Ruth, batting phenomenon among modern day clouters, is big in more ways than one: Babe is a big eater and a big clouter. In fact, he holds the gastonomic prize of the American League, and is considered the ablest hitting pitcher developed in baseball in two decades. Babe is such a good batsman that his manager doesn't know whether to keep him in the outfield regularly or not. He's such a splendid pitcher that his boss has a brainstorm when he ponders what this big fellow might do for him on his slab staff, which needs bolstering. Ruth Sunday broke the American League record when he smashed out his nineteenth homer.

Roth-Ruth Perilous Pair.

The world's champions are only a shadow of the former club that stowed away a flag for Beantown, yet the coming of Bobby Roth has strengthened the club immensely, and with Roth and Ruth, a pair of clean-up persons, coming up one right after the other, the Red Sox have become doubly dangerous.

Ruth is the extra base hitting sensation of the year in the Ban Johnson circuit. Recently the big fellow spanked a homer into the right field bleachers at Fenway Park, Boston, right into a cluster of fans.

Ties A. L. Homer Record.

That home run of Ruth's was historic. It tied the home run record of the A. L., a mark at which the circuit's sharp shooters had aimed in vain for sixteen eventful years. It was Ruth's sixteenth complete circuit smash of this season.

In Cleveland this week Ruth is to try with all the power and skill at his command to smash out more homers. He has excelled a mark held by Socks Seybold since 1902. That was the first year Connie Mack captured a bunting for Quakertown.

A considerable portion of this season is yet to be reeled off. So Ruth's chances of bettering his present mark by several homers are exceedingly bright. In fact he has a golden chance to equal or excel the major league record of all time established by Buck Freeman, of the Washington Club, in 18999. In that season Buck rapped out 25 homers.

Schulte Credited With 21.

In 1911 Frank Schulte, now with the Leafs, was credited with twenty-one homers, which boosted the Chicago Cubs immensely. Friends of Wildfire contended he made two more for which he wasn't given credit in the averages. Gavy Cravath, now manager of the Phillies, missed Freeman's mark by one homer in 1915. He hammerd out twenty-four complete circuit crashes that season.

CHAMPION RIFLE SHOT OF UNITED STATES MILITARY

Caldwell, N. J., Aug. 21.—Sergt. J. B. Rhine, U.S.M.C. outclassed more than 500 crack marksmen in the 1,000-yard final stage of the President's match here today, winning the title of champion military rifle shot of the United States. His score was 289 out of a possible 300.

We Are Doing What Others Cannot Do

Keeping Down The Price of Clothes

While others have had to raise the price, the Regent Tailors can still sell Suits and Overcoats to measure for $21.

We can do this because of immense purchases of Materials made months ago, when prices were almost 75% less than to-day. We could sell this cloth to other tailoring firms at a handsome profit, but we prefer to give our customers all the benefit. For that reason you still have choice from a big range of the newest and finest materials of

Suit or O'Coat $21.00
To Individual Measure

Give us 15 minutes of your time — you will save at least $1 a minute.

Every Garment Guaranteed to Fit & Satisfy
DON'T DELAY—ORDER AT ONCE

If you cannot wait for Suit or Overcoat to be made, don't forget that the models in our windows and stores are for sale. We always have a full range of sizes and styles at the same price.

We want the public to know that this low price of $21.00 holds good only as long as our present stock of materials lasts. We cannot guarantee it longer than that, because we ourselves will have to pay much more for our future purchases of materials. So to avoid disappointment we urge you to come at once and and leave your order.

And remember that this price of $21.00 is really the WHOLESALE PRICE. There are no middlemen to exact big profits, and no expensive department heads to be paid. We import direct and sell direct there is only one profit, and that an entirely reasonable one. You save money when you order your clothes from the Regent Tailors

TIGERS AND REDS FOR WORLD SERIES

THIS IS A PREDICTION BY JAKE STAHL, FORMERLY OF THE RED SOX.

Atlantic City, N.J., Aug. 22.—"At this stage of the race it looks to me as though the Detroit Tigers in the American League and the Cincinnati Reds in the National League have an edge on the other teams in their respective organizations in the race for the championship flag."

This was the statement today by "Jake" Stahl, famous as a college athlete, as a catcher in the American League, as a first baseman and finally as the manager of the Boston Red Sox, who in 1912 defeated the New York Giants in an historic battle for the world's championship.

Jake Stahl, of the big league, has now become Mr. Garland Stahl, bank president. In the game of [illegible] Stahl is "batting .300." He is president of the Washington Park National Bank, on the South Side, in Chicago.

"The Cincinnati Reds have a great leader in Pat Moran," resumed the former boss of the Red Sox, "and he seems to have fired them with the belief that they can and will win. That old confidence stuff is a great thing in baseball, as it is, indeed, in every walk of life. The Reds are going good. However, John McGraw's New York Giants are tough birds to beat. McGraw is a great handler of men and fights to the finish.

"There is a slight margin between the two teams, and the Giants may grab back the lead, as they demonstrated in Thursday's double-header that they could come back strongly after unanimous defeat. The Chicago White Sox have been leading the American League, but it looks to me as though the strain on Cicotte and Williams, the two first-string pitchers, would prove too great, and I look to see the Detroits, with their powerful hitters, overtake and pass them.

"This has been a wonderful year for baseball, the attendance and interest being enormous. The case of Carl Mays and the legal entanglement resulting from it is likely to hurt the game a lot. Ban Johnson has been a great leader, and I think he is right in imposing discipline with suspension of the big pitcher, who is a trouble man. It is absolutely necessary at times to impose rigorous regulations on ball players for the good of the game. The interests of the game are above the personal whims and idiosyncrasies of individuals. Mays is a great pitcher, but inclined to be unruly, and unless the rebellious spirits are curbed other players quickly develop the 'temperamental' stuff and try to run things."

ROCHESTER CLUB SOLD

Reported Purchased by McGraw, Manager of the Giants.

New York, Aug. 21.—The owners of the New York National League Club, it is reported, have purchased the controlling interest of the Rochester Club of the International League from Charles Chapin. The money involved in the transaction was not revealed.

McGraw, the Giants Manager, will use the new club as a farm for his players. A number of the young players of the Giants have been sent to the Rochester Club to be developed.

WOMEN GOLFERS AT AURORA

Participate in Last Open Tourney Before Assn. Championship.

Chicago, Aug. 21.—Fully fifty local members of the Women's Western Golf Association competed today at the Aurora Country Club in the last open tournament scheduled before the association championship event next week at Detroit. Many Aurora players also took part.

The forenoon was devoted to a match play handicap, versus par, while the post-luncheon feature was the approaching and putting contest. First and second prices were given for the best match play results; first, second and third in the putting and approaching effort, and the low gross on a selected nine holes.

GOOD BOWLING AT LINDSAY

Large Number of Rinks Played All Night Until After Dawn.

The Lindsay Bowling Tournament caused a great deal of interest in Lindsay and the neighboring district Thursday, after ploying until after daylight in the morning of the second day of the tournament the Lindsay rink, skipped by J.J. Turner, succeeded in capturing the McCarthy trophy. Rinks from Lindsay, Cannington, Pt. Perry, Beaverton, Sunderland, and Uxbridge were present and the success of the tournament speaks well for the future of bowling in that distrcit. The exhibition of bowling is said to have been exceptionally good.

Archdeacon Malcolm Scott, many years an Anglican missionary in the Peace River district, died at the age of 68.

MR. GEORGE KENYON RESIGNS POSITION AS THE ORGANIST OF KNOX CHURCH

Popular and Successful Musician Goes to the Wesley Methodist Church, Trenton.

Mr. George Kenyon, organist in Knox Church for the past six and a half years has resigned his position and beginning in September will become organist of the Wesley Methodist Church in Trenton, the largest congregation in that town. Mr. Kenyon's departure will be mourned by the congregation and choir of of Knox Church, by his pupils and by the music loving public in general. He has proved himself a master in every branch of his profession and his record as a teacher of the art stands second to none in this city.

Mr. Kenyon, who came to Peterborough direct from a church in Galt, is an Englishman by birth and has enjoyed the advantage of being trained by some of the most noted musical instructors in his native land. He studied theory under Dr. Edward Harper and the piano under Mr. Geo. Sharpe. Mr. Kenyon, since coming to Peterborough has been granted two diplomas by McGill University of Montreal, one for singing and the other for efficiency in instrumental music.

Mr. Kenyon has been especially successful as a teacher. His local record in this regard is forty-five successful candidates at the McGill Con. On seven successive occasions pupils from Peterborough, trained by Mr. Kenyon have taken at these examinations the highest stand in a competition open to the entire Dominion. Some of the best soloists now before the local public owe their success to the fact that they were trained by him.

Knox Church choir as composed today is the best evidence of the musical efficiency of Mr. Kenyon and of his painstaking efforts. Under his leadership the choir has on different occasions presented Gounod's Messiah and Barnby's Rebekah, in a manner that firmly established individual and collective reputation.

MRS. HAMILTON A CANDIDATE

Mrs. L. A. Hamilton, known in Toronto and in many parts of the Dominion for her many activities of a public nature, is said to be alikely candidate for parliament at the coming provincial elections.

THE CARE AND UPKEEP OF YOUR CAR

There are several things carbon will do to an engine. First, it may cause a knock, if it is very heavy. Second, it causes your engine to overheat, which means loss of power. Third, it causes premature explosion. That is your engine explodes at the wrong time, one cylinder works against the other, causing loss of power. Fourth, your valves, normally, rise only one-fourth inch above the surface, so if there is one-eighth inch of carbon, your exhaust escape is practically cut off. Sometimes all of the symptoms mentioned show up; at other times probably just loss of power and overheating.

There are several ways of cleaning out the carbon. One way is by scraping, another, by burning, and there are so called "carbon removers." The latter are not to be recommended at all, as they act like coal oil, softening the carbon to the consistency of honey, which gets down around the rings nad solidifies, causing the rings to "freeze" solid, scoring the cylinders. Scraping is good if done thoroughly, but takes too much time. Now, as to carbon burning it makes no difference how bad the engine is carboned up, as soon as the oxygen hits it it immediately turns to carbon dioxide gas and passes away, leaving the interior as clean as when new.

We burn Carbon by the Oxygen process also weld cast iron, steel, brass and aluminum parts, welding fenders frames, cylinder blocks, etc., Millard. lard's Bicycle Shop, 225 Hunter St., Phone 2341.

CITY COUNCIL DEALS LIBERALLY WITH LOCAL BOY SCOUT REQUEST

Grant $200 to Aid 150 Boy Scouts to Visit Toronto For Review By Prince of Wales

The committee of the whole Council received a deputation from the Boy Scouts of the city last night, asking for financial help in sending a representation of Peterborough Boy Scouts to Toronto at the opening of the National Exhibition, Monday, to be reviewed by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

Value of Trip.

Mr. Allan, organizer and master of the St. Andrew's Boy Scouts, spoke on behalf of the organization, asking for a grant of approximately $360 to pay the railway fare of 150 boys to Toronto for inspection. He reported that when Baden Powell inspected the Boy Scouts at Toronto, Peterborough was about the only city which did not contribute to the fare of its scouts. He spoke glowingly of the value this trip would be to the scouts, and of the importance of the Scout movement to the rising generation. He also stated that in his opinion this enterprise would be educational and inspirational for boys, and a grant would be money well spent.

Have No Funds.

Replying to a question from the Mayor, Scout Master Allan said there were no funds belonging to the Scouts on account of their comparatively recent reorganization.

Discussion arose as to how the money should be spent provided it were granted. Ald. McIntyre was in favor of the boys drawing to see who would go, but Mr. Allan considered it more expedient to contribute a certain amount toward each boy's railway fare to avoid hard feelings.

Ald. Turner here spoke in favor of granting the full amount asked. He considered the city had been saved a considerable expense by not having an opportunity to welcome His Royal Highness to this city, that it was the duty of Peterborough to send a representation of some kind to meet the Prince, and he considered this opportunity of doing so should be embraced. He was warmly supported by Ald. McIntyre.

Ald. Edgar Cautions.

Ald. Edgar looked at the matter more cautiously, and, although favoring the Scout movement in every way, he felt as though this grant asked was slightly more than ought to be voted in this case. He was in favor of paying $1.80 on each boy's fare up to 150, which at the most would aggregate $270.

Ald. Garside spoke for granting the full amount. These boys compose the rising generation from those who had served overseas and in case of a war in the future, they would fight more gallantly for having been reviewed by the Heir Apparent to their Empire.

Ald. Gainey considered the amount large, but was willing to meet the Scouts half way. Ald. Phelan was in favor of the movement, but could not, he felt, in justice to the ratepayers, go to the extent of $400.

Predecessors Fought.

The president of the Boy Scout Council here helped along his cause with the statement that before the war there had been a good Boy Scout corps in the city and everyone of those boys had gone overseas and many had not returned.

The Mayor was still inclined to be cautious about handling the people's money.

On motion, moved by Ald. Turner and seconded by Ald. Garside, granting $200 to assist the Boy Scouts to go to Toronto for review by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales here carried after an amendment by Ald. Edgar and the Mayor that $1.80 on the fare of each boy up to 150 be allowed had been defeated.

Three Rousing Cheers.

The Boy Scouts held their final drill last night on the old Charlotte street Methodist Church grounds preparatory to their trip to Toronto, and when the news of Council's liberal offer reached them they showed hearty appreciation by rending the air with three lusty cheers.

DEALER FINED $500 HOLDING MEATS IN COLD STORAGE BEYOND LIMITED TIME.

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 22.—Libel proceeding were started by the government in the United States District Court here today against Armour & Co., for the seizure of 165,210 pounds of frozen poultry.

Much of the poultry is said to be stored in a Duluth warehouse and government agents charged in the complaint that some of the food was stored there for eighteen months. Papers were mailed to Duluth last night.

Fine Columbus Food Dealer $500

Columbus, O., Aug. 22. Theodore Leonard, Jr. of Columbus, one of the forty food dealers arrested last week by the state of Ohio on charges of violating the Smith cold storage law by holding meats in cold storage longer than the time limit set by the statute was found guilty on one count in Municipal court here today, and received the maximum sentence a fine of $500 and costs. The charge upon which Leonard was found guilty was that he kept poultry in cold storage longer than ten months.

BUCHAREST GOVERNMENT WARNED THAT REPARATIONS MAY BE ENTIRELY CUT OFF

Rumanians Stand to Lose Benefit in German-Austrian Treaty—Requisitions Already Made by Rumanians to be Deducted From Share in Austria's Indemnity.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Aug. 23. The Reparation Committee of the Peace Conference has completed its note which the Supreme Council will probably send to Rumania immediately, warning the Bucharset Government that reparations under German and Austrian treaties will be entirely cut off, if Roumanians continue to make requisitions; and that all requisitions already made by the Roumanians in Hungary will be deducted from that nation's share of the indemnity to be paid by Austria.

Seizing Foodstuffs

Roumanian soldiers still continue seizing food stuffs, farming machinery and other materials in Hungary, and are sending them to Rumania, but the fact that an important railroad bridge near the Hungarian frontier has been wrecked makes it impossible for goods to enter Roumania.

HOLLAND TIRES OF EXPENSE FOR GUARDING EX-EMPEROR GUEST

Press Declares Wilhelm an Expensive Foreigner—Salaries of Nineteen Police Guards Total Seventy-Five Guilder Daily—His Status is Unchanged.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Amerongen, Aug. 23.—Under the headline "Expensive Foreigner in Amerongen," the Amsterdam Handelsblad, a copy of which has been received here, says nineteen policemens' salaries, of whom total 75 guilder daily, have been guarding the former German Emperor since November.

Tiring of Guest.

"So the Kaiser already has cost our country a total of twenty thousand guilders," says the newspaper, and adds: "Kaiser Wilhelm, former Emperor of the German Empire, is truly an expensive foreigner for Holland."

Confined to Limits.

It is understood here that there has been no change in the status of the former German Emperor with the Netherlands Government, and that he is still confined to certain limits.

Bring Own Furniture.

Report has it that the ex-Kaiser expects to bring to Holland has own furniture from German castles to furnish his newly purchased home, the House of Doorn, if the German Government gives its consent.

FOCH COMING TO STATES IN FALL

IS TO BE GUEST OF AMERICAN LEGION CONVENTION IN MINNEAPOLIS.

Washington, D.C., Aug. 23. Ferdinand Foch, marshal of France and generalissimo of the allies' armies, will be the guest of the American Legion at its convention in Minneapolis this fall. Marshal Foch has had numerous invitations to visit America under consideration for some time and has been compelled to decline because of his manifold duties as commander in chief of the allies' forces since the signing of the armistice. It is now certain, however, that unless some unforseen event arises, the allies' commander will participate in the convention of the American soldiers who helped win the war. While in this country Marshal Foch will also receive official honors, the program for which has not yet been mapped out.

TROOPS TO QUELL CAR PLANT STRIKE

WORKERS QUICKLY DISPERSE AS FOUR COMPANIES OF MILITIA REACH SCENE.

MARTIAL LAW AT HAMMOND, IND

SOLDIERS MOBOLIZED INSTRUCTED TO ACT WITH FORCE IF NECESSARY.

Chicago, Aug. 22. Rifles gleamed in the sun today about the plant of the Standard Steel Car's plant at Hammond, In., and soldiers with cocked weapons marched slowly about the area which for the last week has been the scene of stormy outbreaks of striking employes of the car company. Four companies of Indiana militia took up posts in and about the plant this morning in response to appeal from local authorities. Six more companies were expected during the day.

The presence of soldiery had an immediate effect on the disturbers. The effect occurred even before the event, for news late last night that the militia was coming served to nip whatever spirit of violence was brewing. Threats by the strikers that they would permit no one to enter the plant this morning were heard of no more after the first coach loads of soldiers began to roll into the railroad yards.

Ready for Martial Law.

Gov. Goodrich, who ordered out the troops last night, was prepared today to deal vigorously with the Hammond situation. Word came from Indianapolis that Adjt.-Gen. Harry B. Smith had in his pocket a proclamation declaring martial law in Hammond, and was ready to issue it officially if the trouble there took on serious character during the day.

The governor addressed troops leaving their mobilization point in the capital and charged them with the "most rigorous exercise of force" should occasion demand.

GIRL VICTIM IS IN CRITICAL CONDITION

AS RESULT OF MOTOR CAR RUNNING INTO TREE AT NIGHT.

Further inquiry into the fatal accident by which Ivan Startup, was killed Thursday night when the automobile he was driving crashed into a tree at Morton's Crossing near Orchard Beach, reveals the fact that he was the son of Mr. E. D. Startup, 12 Douglas Drive, Toronto, manager of the blouse department at Eaton's. With young Startup in the car, was Miss Bertha Thompson, 20 years old daughter of Mr. Thomson, of 151 Rusholme Road, contractor of the new buildings being erected for Eaton's. She is in the Private Patients' Pavilion at the General Hospital, and is said to be in a critical condition.

At the time of the accident the couple were motoring from Roach's Point to Orchard Beach. The youth did not see the tree lying across the road, evidently blown down during the storm. The car struck the tree head on, and the driver was hurled out of the car against another tree and probably instantly killed. The girl was also thrown clear of the car and both were found lying on the ground near the wrecked car. The girl's skull was fractured, her arm broken and her body covered with cuts and bruises. She was instantly attended to and was rushed to the General Hospital in a limousine supplied by Mr. Skyes of the Underwood Company. The car in which a temporary bed was fitted up left at two o'clock in the morning and arrived at the hospital three hours later.

Mr. Startup has two other children, one daughter and another son. The latter, Harry, recently returned from overseas after serving three years.

CALLED TO THE BAR AS OTHER STUDENTS

PREPARATIONS COMPLETE FOR PRINCE OF WALES' ADMITTANCE.

Toronto, Aug. 23.—"The Prince will be admitted to the bar just the same as any student," says Mr. Edwin C. Bell, Secretary of the Upper Canada Law Society, to The Times. "The ceremony, which will be very short, will take place in the library. The Prince will sign the roll in the presence of the bar."

The library has been newly decorated for the occasion, and men are at work getting everything ready for the historical event. It was at first intended to hold the ceremony in one of the court rooms, but owing to the number of barristers who wish to attend, it was later decided to hold it in the library.

The decorating of the building was in charge of the T. Eaton Company. It is covered with blue and white, the Prince's colors, and trimmed with flags and evergreen boughs. All the members of the profession have been requested to attend the ceremony properly gowned.

HUGE BRITISH AIRSHIP

Work Has Been Started on Largest Plane Yet Built

London, Aug. 23.—Work has been started on the mammoth new British airship, four times larger that the R-34 which visited America. When completed an effort will be made to fly from England through Egypt to the Cape and back, according to General Groves, of the Air Ministry. A number of changes in the construction of the big dirigible have been made as a result of the Trans-Atlantic voyage of the R-34, and of the accident to the R-33.

Attorney General Palmer will hold a conference in New York today with Fair Price Committee and confer with Federal agents as to their plans for action against hoarders.

INTER-ALLIED MISSION TO LOOK INTO THE GERMAN-POLISH SITUATION

Findings Are to be Considered Final Until Questions Involved Are Settled by Plebiscite of the People—Negotiations With Poles Not to be Resumed Yet.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Berlin, Aug. 23.—The German-Polish situation took on an unexpected aspect yesterday when it was announced that an Inter-Allied mission would leave this city for upper Silesia in the course of the next twenty-four hours.

Commission to Report.

It was announced at the same time that the Polish commission, which has been conferring with the German Government officials, will return to Warsaw and make a report.

Settled by Plebiscite.

It is not expected that negotiations with the Poles will be resumed until after the Inter-Allied commission has made its report, and its findings are accepted as final until questions involved in the situation of upper Silesia as well as other disputes are settled by a plebiscite.

In the meantime the German Government has agreed upon moderate military measures now being enforced in the region and to discontinue executions.

CARNEGIE ESTATE LARGE

New York, Aug. 23. Although Andrew Carnegie expected to give away his huge fortune and "die poor," his estate to be disposed of by will, which will be filed for probate next week, was "several times $50,000,000," is learned from an authoritative source here.

Publication of a story to the effect that Mr. Carnegie had given away all of his estate with the exception of about $50,000,000 brought the statement that the estate was much larger.

PLEADS GUILTY TO THEFT

Manager American Express Company Stole Ten Thousand Dollars.

Montreal, Aug. 23. A. V. Cotton, manager of the American Express Company of this city, was arrested on a charge of stealing $10,000. He will appear in court today. He is married and about 25 years of age, and came to Montreal last December from New York where he was assistant manager.

Cotton pleaded guilty to stealing the money and promised to make restitution to the company. He was remanded for sentence.

Who's Who On The Council Board

A. A. McINTYRE

Alderman McIntyre, familiarly known to his many friends and acquaintances as "Archie," will have served the municipality of Peterborough ten long years on its council board with his term ending nineteen hundred and nineteen. In fact, he might consistently lay claim to the title, "Father of the Council," for his all but unbroken period of office exceeds that of any other present day aldermen actually in harness, and he has fathered many important resolutions affecting the interests of this growing community.

Alderman McIntyre has had the pleasure of sitting under no less than six mayors of Peterborough, town and city, as follows: Henry Best, for two years, R. F. McWilliams, one year; Harry Rush, two years, William Buller, one year; J. J. Duffus, two years, and present Mayor Geo. H. Duncan, two years the coming thirteenth of December.

First Experience.

'Twas in the year 1905 that Alderman McIntyre acquired his first experience in civic government affairs, and in the goodly company of Henry Best, E. F. Mason, T. J. Begley, Wm. Johnston, Joseph Batten, Robert Hicks, Joseph Crowe, W. Scott, Robert Leary, G. J. Tovey, Adam Hall, Frank Adams and a pretty capable council this galaxy of self-denying citizens made. The writer uses the qualification "self-denying" as peculiarly fitting to a Peterborough alderman, who, on assuming office must prepare to deny himself the good opinion of certain of his fellow citizens. As a matter of fact, past local history teaches that an aldermanic post is a thankless job, and in the judgment of many, a capable alderman has yet to be born.

But to return to Alderman McIntyre, it might be interesting to note that of his colleagues in 1905, ex-Mayor Best, Joseph Batten and Robert Leary have passed to their eternal rest. T. J. Begley is now editor of the Lindsay Post. Robert Hicks enjoys public confidence on the Utilities Commission. C. J. Tovey is now resident in the far west, and Frank Adams declares he has a more respectable position as city treasurer. George H. Duncan (now amyor) and Joseph Crowe are, in company with the subject of this sketch, still devoting much of their time to the city's interests on the municipal board, while the remaining councillors of 1905 are still living and engaged in their own private pursuits in Peterborough city.

30 Years a Citizen.

Born in Keene village, Otonabee, A. A. McIntyre came to Peterborough in 1889, and has remained in the town of his choice ever since. Thirty years a resident, he has grown apace with Peterborough in prosperity, and can look back complacently to the time when Peterborough vested in the late James Stevenson dual confidence as mayor, chairman of the Board of Education at one and the same time, to say nothing of the privilege of attaching M. P. after his representative signature. He can also tell you interest-arresting stories of the days of old, when workingmen lived and prospered on $9, $10 and $12 a week, when the Peterborough Light and Power Co., under contract with the town, doused the street lights on supposedly moonlight nights, and long-suffering pedestrians stubbed their toes on knots and raised nails in the wooden sidewalks on Peterborough's main thoroughfares. But, with many others, Alderman McIntyre has stuck to the good old town, and has even taken part in past civic administration under which Peterborough emerged from easy-going town existence into the bristling activities of electric citydom.

Success in Business.

From his introduction into Peterborough, A. A. McIntyre engaged in contracting and building, which he has continued till today and with commendable success. He has left his mark in public buildings such as the Y.M.C.A., the Y.W.C.A. (in conjunction with J. J. Hartley), and the beautiful woodwork interior of Murray Street Baptist Church. He also built the big concrete ele-

HANDICAPS TO ANY COMMUNITY.

NO CITY where the spirit of co-operation is lacking can hope to prosper, as has been frequently stated in these columns and elsewhere. Citizens must work for the common good, not for individual aggrandizemet. If a public measure is mooted, nothing will ever come of it if those concerned in the movement regard it from a selfish angle and study only the possibility of personal profit. There should be no "hole-in-the-wall" confabs or combinations, each concocting plots to overthrow rival factions conducted on the same principle. The general welfare of any city is paramount. That comes first, and the individual results follow inevitably.

The Peterborough Board of Trade as organized and conducted today, on lines never before adopted, should be an unconquerable force in promoting the gorwth of this city. The right civic spirit pervades the organization. The executive officers are experts and are ready at all times to consult with the citizens, ready at all times with practical advice based on years of experience. The citizens as a rule may not realize their advantages in this regard, but the truth will yet be brought home to them. There is in Peterborough an organization in which individual interests are suppressed, where the universal good is the inspiration, and based on these principles that organization is bound to achieve its purpose.

MAKING WAR UNPOPULAR.

"LET US make war unpopular," say the uplifters and the dreamers of the coming millennium, and the expression is becoming a current stock phrase.

We cannot undertake to answer for the profiteers, the men who pile up huge profits while the world undergoes the awful tortures of international conflict, while the flower of young manhood is destroyed and Rachel weeps day and night and finds no surcease of grief. We venture the opinion, however, that war is already unpopular to the limit among the men who endured the hell of the recent struggle as well as among those widowed or orphaned or deprived of promising children as a result.

DEALING WITH OUTSIDE MERCHANTS.

TH MERCHANTS of Peterborough complain frequently of the amount of patronage which the dealers in Toronto receive from local citizens. At the time of the Canadian Exhibition every fall this purchasing of goods in the capital city reaches a climax. When a resident of Peterborough visits the big show he almost invariably comes back loaded down with purchases. The Toronto merchants make special preparations for the annual event with a view to securing this outside business, and for days in advance carry on a systematic campaign of advertising. The dealers in this city are fortunate to the extent that the local papers refuse to carry any of these announcements.

The preparations made by the enterprising Toronto merchants explain the situation. But for their advertisements there would be no extensive sale of goods to outsiders. No salesmanship that money can procure is equal to the investment in printer's ink, and the local merchants who complain most of outside competition are the very ones who do not avail themselves of this agency. Publicity will make any city great, any merchant prosperous. The dealer who does not take the general public into his confidence with regard to the stock he carries and as to his commercial intentions, is likely to have ample time to watch the operations of the persevering spider spinning cobweb across his doorway.

There are merchants in certain lines in Peterborough who never advertise at all. They are in a combination together, pledged to keep their business affairs to themselves. If they can preserve such a compact inviolate then it would be equally possible for them to carry on a campaign of advertising their various lines without in the least injuring each other. Competition is the life of trade. It is good for the purchaser and dealer alike. It makes business brisk, and this condition can be reached only through judicious and systematic action.

The merchant on George street should have no difficulty in holding his own against the competition of the dealer on Yonge or King street in Toronto. There is a vast difference between the overhead expenses of the one and those of the other. On the very first item to be considered the home merchant has the advantage. There is no reason, either, why he cannot carry as complete a stock as does the man in Toronto. All that is necessary is to let the public know that he does so, and there is only one channel through which this information can be imparted.

As a rule people will spend their money where they can do so to the best advantage. There are, of course, some with expensive or aesthetic tastes who are likely to indulge these tastes in making outside purchases under the delusion that foreign goods are necessarily superior, but such citizens are fortunately rare. The instinct to buy at home is as deeply implanted in human nature as that of self-preservation itself. All the public requires is the assurance that they can do so with advantage to themselves. This is entirely a matter of civic education, and the merchants themselves are the logical preceptors.

Local dealers favor combines among themselves. These compacts are really combinations in restraint of the very trade in which they themselves are engaged. They are not only injuring themselves, but are not playing fair with the purchasing public by putting the latter to inconvenience. The percentage of the residents of Peterborough who visit the Toronto Fair every year is comparatively small, and not all of these buy goods during their brief sojourn at he Exhibition. There would be even less of the latter if an educational campaign was carried on to convince the public that their chief opportunities are at home and that they are consulting their individual as well as the general interest by spending their money in Peterborough.

THE NAMELESS CHILD.

FROM TORONTO, the city of churches, the so-called hub of Canadian civilization, the centre of Ontario culture, there come occasionally ghastly records of man's inhumanity to his fellows. The news despatches yesterday contained an account of a young girl from Petrolea being arrested in the Queen City at the request of the police in her home town. It seems that she was the mother of an illegitimate child, and that she lacked means to support it. The father refused her any assistance, but left her to carry the consequences of their joint sin alone. Acting, it is said, on the advice of a lawyer, the mother left her babe on the doorstep of its father, probably with the idea of rousing in him some sense of humanity, and herself went to Toronto, where she fell into the hands of the police. She is to be sent back to Petrolia to stand trial on a charge of child desertion.

From the earliest records in history, from the days when the Jewish mob gathered with stones in their hands to take the life of the erring woman, but fell back abashed at the Divine reproof that cut their consciences like a knife, the weaker partner in such guilt has always been made the scapegoat. Where was the other party to the offence recorded in the New Testament story? Probably skulking on the outside of the mob watching for results, perhaps with a missile in his hand ready to join in the lynching. The hypocritical indignaton of the crowd had no terrors for him.

If this unfortunate girl from Petrolia is to be tried for deserting her child, what of the father whos coffence was no whit less? And the unfortunate child, the innocent victim, is, as the offspring of sin, doomed from the beginning to go through life a social pariah, a legal outcast, thanks to a system of legislation that has not been even touched by the spirit of Divine teaching.

NEW EXPRESS TARIFFS ARE NOW PUBLISHED

INCREASE IN EASTERN TERRITORY APPROXMATELY 60 PER CENT.

Mr. W. S. Campbell, chairman of Transportation Committee of the Board of Trade, has been advised that the new express tariffs and classifications, recently authorized by the Board of Railway Commissioners, with effect from Sept. 1st have now been published and will be ready for distribution in a few days.

Some of the rates effected are as follows: Merchandise, between Toronto and Montreal, present rate $1.00 for 100 pounds, new first-class rate $2.00 for 100 pounds; between Peterborough and Montreal, present rate $1.00, new rate roughly $1.80. This proportion of increase is not general as will be noted that the increase in Eastern territory is approximately 46 per cent. middle west 24 per cent. and west of the Rockies 12 per cent.

Copies of the new tariffs can be obtained at a small charge, on application of Mr. C. N. Ham, secretary Express Traffic Association, Montreal, for a copy of circular ETA No. 85 Express Classification No. 4 and necessary tariffs, publishing rates in and out of Peterborough, to the territories in which the business is conducted.

WIT AND WISDOM

In No Danger.

The judge was evidently getting a bit fed up with the jury, and at last he announced:

"I discharge this jury!"

A tall, lean member of the twelve then rose.

"Say, judge, you can't discharge me!"

"Can't discharge you? Why not?" thundered the other.

"Waal," replied the juryman, pointing to counsel for the defence, "I was hired by that guy over there!"

As a Boy Sees It.

The following composition on "The Angelus" was written by a New York schoolboy: "This picture was painted by Malay. It contains a man and a woman, a pitchfork, wheelbarrow and a church steeple. The man and the woman are very poor and they have been digging potatoes because they need them to live on. The potatoes look quite small. Just at sunset they hear a bell ring. It is the Angelus, it means they must pray. So they bow their heads and pray for bigger potatoes."

Fair Warning.

Mrs. Ensign Miller, only daughter of Andrew Carnegie, the late steel millionaire whose marriage caused much stir recently, is fond of relating the story of a certain deaf old lady who one day came to the church near her father's place in Sutherlandshire.

"Owing to her infirmity," says Mrs. Miller, "she attended the service armed with an ear trumpet. The elders had never seen one before and viewed it with suspicion and uneasiness.

"After a lengthy consultation one of them went up to the old lady, wagging his finger at her, whispered warningly:

"'One toot and ye're oot!'"

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Love of man for himself never grows less.

A book agent is often a woman with a history.

There's always a slip between the sidewalk and the ship.

A woman's anger, like a glass of soda water, sometimes fizzes out.

There's nothing truer than a sister's love for some other chap.

Out of the frying pan of courtship a man slips into the fire of matrimony.

A woman tries to appear discreet by refusing to give a reason where she has none.

The man whose only claim to sanctity is a long face should dispose of a portion of his cheek.

Lots of men after laying up something for a rainy day get discouraged because it does not rain.

With the exception of a fussy woman there is nothing on earth so disagreeable as a fussy man.

Some men owe all they have in this world to others—and some owe a lot more than they have.

J. H. BURNHAM, M. P., ANNOUNCES HE WILL VOTE AGAINST PROHIBITION

Regards the Ontario Temperance Act an Infringement Upon The Rights of the People

Editor Review: It is customary at the present time for people to say that the referendum will decide the question of prohibition. The constituency is probably not aware that the most important consideration of prohibition is that which we are giving it next month at Ottawa in the special session. Twice we passed an Act and sent it on to the Senate prolonging war-time prohibition for another year, but each time the Senate turned it down and we are to be called upon again to pass an Act prolonging prohibition. I voted for it in the past because it was war-time but as I will not vote for it again, I deem it my duty to address this letter to my constituents. People are entitled in public affairs to know all that is being done by their representative.

No private member of Parliament has done so much to clear up the temperance situation as I have done during the last few years. This statement I make boldly and I give as my authority the Minister of Justice, the Hon. C. J. Doherty, author of the Doherty Act. It will be remembered that the Ontario Government said that it could not bring in prohibition because Ontario would be bombarded with liquor from outside and the working of prohibition in Ontario would be made impossible. I took upon myself to communicate with the Ontario Government on several occasions and found out as a private member what a member of the Cabinet would not care to ask, namely what the real opinions of the Ontario Government were as to the provision of an Act by the Dominion Parliament which would make the Ontario act workable. After much labor the Doherty Act was evolved and passed. It gives a Province full power to pass and enforce its temperance acts. It provides that all offenses originating outside the province against the Ontario prohibition law will be prosecuted by the Dominion Government itself wherever the offense is committed. The Doherty Act will render Ontario as tight as the most ardent prohibitionist could desire. This has been the service that I have rendered to the cause of temperance. But a new phase of it has opened up. Is total prohibition right in times of peace?

A partial prohibition, that is regulation, is permissible by the principle of liberty but total prohibition is a measure of tyranny, which, for my part, I will fight to the utmost of my power. The O.T.A. is without any exception the most tyrannical measure ever put on the statute books and nobody but weaklings and slaves would submit to it in time of peace. For example: By section 61 it is not necessary that any information should be sworn to as according to the wording of the statute, it may be laid without any oath or affirmation to the truth thereof. By another section it is not necessary to prove that an offense has been committed. The magistrate may make a conviction if he suspects that an offense has been committed.

Witnesses in ordinary criminal trials are protected by the well-known principles of evidence and liberty but under the O.T.A. they are subject to indefinite imprisonment in utter disregard of those principles. It is hard to believe that a free people will continue to submit to such an act as this and it is not to be wondered that I should have found many of the best Protestants of Quebec, especially those residing in the rural districts of the opinion that a reign of terror exists in Ontario and that to be free it is necessary to live in Quebec. This I am afraid is very close to the truth.

The coming referendum is not a clash between the liquor interests and the people. If that was all it would be the end of the liquor interests.

It is admitted that a strict regulation of the sale of strong liquors would meet the views of the moderates and solve nine-tenth of the objections to the use of liquor made by the prohibitionists. Mild liquors have never been blamed for any serious evil but have been of great benefit as we all know. The determination therefore to inflict total prohibition upon people shows an unreasonableness and a spirit of tyranny that makes it plain that the old battle for civil and individual liberty has got to be fought all over again.

If individual liberty within reasonable limits may be stamped out legimately in the case of liquor much more so is it proper to stamp it out in the case of freedom of religious belief or unbelief. Liquor, tobacco, dancing, gossip, cards, extravagance in dress, freedom of sex, criticism of God's word and denominational rivalry are as nothing in comparison with the evil of unbelief. It is the one unpardonable sin. If the total prohibitionists of liquor are doing right in suppressing a reasonable degree of individual liberty in the case of liquor those who proposed to burn out error at the stake and did so were doing even better than the total prohibitionists.

The truth is that a reasonable freedom carries with it a personal responsibility to God and a possibility of evil that cannot be abolished except by abolishing that liberty itself. Why did not God prohibit the means of evil in Eden?

Do you propose to try to abolish it? It is said that the woman-voter cannot or will not listen to argument and any statement of the case not founded on longing and mere emotion. This is doubtful as the instinctive good sense of women will tell them that it was regard for the principle of civil liberty which put them where they are. It was the "principle" of liberty which forced men even against their self-interest to give women the vote. If women cease to be protected by the principle of individual liberty what will protect them? The last elector to defend the "principle" of freedom will be a woman. She has most to suffer by the loss of it.

The following extract taken from a recent number of the "Libertary Digest" may well be taken to heart by people generally:

"The negro problems so startlingly emphasized by the recent race riots in Washington and Chicago, is increasingly engaging the attention of the religious press. Noting that these riots occurred after prohibition was in force, and therefore presumably could not be charged against alcoholic intoxication, the Philadelphia Presbyterian sees in them a challenge to the Christian church. Such rioting it affirms, 'is a loud call to the church to do her duty and fulfil her commission, it [illegible] a [illegible] under that 'our whole civilization has suffered and is suffering from a disregard of God's truth and law.'"

The self-chosen ones went astray of old and set up false gods. They had grown tired of the old faith and of the ways of god. Let them beware that they do not incur the wrath of God by again setting up their own plans of salvation, and applying them with the unrelenting vigor of the severest penalties and the prison cell, for what all is only objectionable when carried to excess but which some would condemn even as it issues from the very hand of God Himself.

It is perhaps to be expected that those who imported from Germany the spirit of criticism of the word of God would also import and apply the doctrine of force. Our men fought to destroy that doctrine abroad and it will be destroyed at home. Let faith and freedom be our watchword as of old.

GUARD BABY'S HEALTH IN THE SUMMER

The summer months are the most dangerous to children. The complaints of that season, which are cholera infantum, colic, diarrhoea and dysentry, come on so quickly that often a little one is beyond aid before the mother realizes he is ill. The mother must be on her guard to prevent these troubles, or if they do come on suddenly to cure them. No other medicine is of such aid to mothers during hot weather as is Babys' Own Tablets. They regulate the stomach and bowels and are absolutely safe. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE MERCHANTS' COLUMN

Edited by
MANSFIELD F. HOUSE
(Copyright.)

(In this column, which appears every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, will appear news and short articles of special interest to merchants, their salespeople and business men and women in general. All phases of store management—buying, accounting, advertising and retail salesmanship—will be dealt with, not theoretically, but by descriptions of methods actually in use by successful merchants.)

"SALE SCHOOL" IS JUST LIKE STORE

Tucked away in an inconspicuous corner of the huge Loft candy factory in New York, there's a big room with a sign over the door, "Instruction Department."

If you view it from one angle, it resembles the regulation schoolroom, with students' chairs, etc. Seen from the other angle—well, it's a slice of any Loft candy store—from the counter, with its little square red signs over the stock, to the cashier's desk. There's even a cash register and a section of a typical Loft window display where applicants desiring to follow window dressing professions are given the chance to trim windows themselves.

This is the newest Loft innovation—a model school for saleswomen and cashiers. It is presided over by Miss Soffer, who knows all the strategy and rules of candy selling, and who convinces you that there's much more to candy salesmanship than you're inclined to think.

Take, for example, a typical lesson on "Goods and Prices" and the approach to a customer. First Miss Soffer discusses Loft candies, the various qualities and values—showing packages and contents to illustrate her talk. From the sale the Loft students are taught the manner of wrapping and tying neat bundles as well as weighing loose stock.

Cashiering Also Taught.

Another important branch of store work taught in the Loft school is "cashiering." The students make actual sales, ringing up register slips and actually pay the cashier, who sits in a model booth. They request change for various banknotes offered in payment for goods and Miss Cashier is taught the art of making change accurately and rapidly.

In the cashiering study Miss Soffer points out the pitfalls incident to the duties of the average cashier—illustrating the various flimflams and swindles practiced by reasoned male and female crooks. She explains the importance of a cashier keeping her head at all times and under all conditions. By actual illustration the student cashier is shown the tricks of confusing her, often tried. After correct change has been made, Miss Soffer demonstrates the old trick of requesting different forms of change and thereby fleecing the cashier out of th bill and the change.

Window dressing is another branch of salesmanship taught in the Loft school. Here saleswomen are taught the manner of arranging candy and boxes to attract the eye, the effects of contrasting and harmonizing candies in the window, effective and artistic draping and the manner of displaying candies to show the centres. The window dressing instruction is under the direction of Miss Ella J. Griffing and her assistant, Miss Silberman, both Loft window designers.

This instruction school is really a practical college of salesmanship and the young women who pass the required examinations are judged fully competent to take their places behind the counter of any Loft store or to assume the position of cashier.

BABY CARNIVAL DOUBLES BUSINESS

A baby carnival that doubled business in spite of the fact that it rained most of the day was the successful experience of the J. S. Bailey Company, of Brooklyn, on the first day of its baby week, with more than 200 entrants for the contest which will be judged next week.

While it was not anticipated that mothers would take their [illegible] on a rainy day, the store's auditorium, which seats 500, was filled to overflowing, and even while the program containing a lecture and a dancing exhibition was in progress the infants' department was crowded with shoppers eager to buy clothes cheaply.

The tables on the main floor devoted to specials in baby's wear were surrounded by shoppers all day, one of these specials twenty dozen pairs of small boys' khaki pants at fifty-nine cents being completely sold out at 11 a.m.

Fifty toy balloons were set free from the store's roof, each containing a check for a soda and one with a coupon entitling the holder to a dollar's worth of merchandise. This stunt alone brought crowds to the store.

A QUESTIONNAIRE THAT UNCOVERS IDEAS

The Farris-Walker Company department store, of Los Angeles, Cal., recently issued a merchandise questionnaire to every one of its employes, asking for their opinion in reference to the questions asked.

The replies were very fruitful and merchandising suggestions they brought forth. A model questionnaire, with the replies entered, is given below:

You are requested to answer each of the following questions to the best of your ability.

Name five articles of staple merchandise in your department that you are out of.

Russian blouses; different styles in crepe-de-chine blouses at $5; different styles and prices in pussy-willow taffeta blouses; lace and net blouses; percale blouses.

When a customer accompanied by a friend who is assisting her in making selection, and article apparently suits customer, but does not suit friend, what argument would you use to close the sale?

In order to get the favor of the customer I would try to divert the attention of the friend who is trying to dissuade the customer.

When a customer suggests that she will wait until article is on sale for less money, what is a good answer to make?

I would try to persuade customer to buy at present, as the article was selling very rapidly and she may be disappointed.

If the fire alarm was rung in this store, what would be the first thing that you would do?

Keep a cool head. Follow out fire directions of the store.

What expression do you use for attracting customers to merchandise in other departments after the closing of your sale?

Example—"Madam, you should visit our suit department today. We have some splendid values, $25 [illegible] at $15."

IT PAYS TO MAIL GOODS TO CHINA

Development of a wholesale market in the Orient may seem like a queer sideline for a retailer, but W. E. Sullivan, who operates a haberdashery in Rochester, N.Y.—a store that does from $75,000 to $80,000 business annually—has been experimenting with such a sideline for some time and is just getting it in shape where it will show returns on the investment. Judging by the way in which the sideline is growing, it may soon be expected to swallow the retail store—hook, line and sinker.

Mr. Sullivan had no experience in the export business when he began to develop this other business. His first step was to join the United States Chamber of Commerce, and since then he has proceeded, aided only by the bulletins of that body, the United States commerce reports and his own common sense. Thus far the business has been built up entirely by mail, and efforts have been concentrated on several of the larger cities in China.

In addition to the usual lines carried by haberdashers, Mr. Sullivan has added a line of children's shoes and dresses, both products of Rochester concerns, for which he is finding a ready market. This Oriental trade lies mostly among merchants who supply the American and European residents in China with their wearing apparel, and Mr. Sullivan has found that only products of unquestioned reliability are wanted.

The greatest trouble with the export business to the Orient at the present time is the scarcity of merchandise, he declares, as many manufacturers are unwilling to sell their products for export.

MOTOR HIT TREE YOUTH IS KILLED

FOUND DEAD AT DAYLIGHT, GIRL COMPANION FATALLY INJURED.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, August 22.—Ivor Startup, aged 17, was killed, and Miss Thompson probably fatally hurt last night near the summer residences of their families at Lake Simcoe, when their motor in the darkness hit a large tree that had fallen across the road. They were found at daylight this morning.

THE MAN WHO WINS

IS ALWAYS FULL OF LIFE AND ENERGY — FAILURES ARE WEAK AND BLOODLESS.

Some men seem to have all the luck. If there are any good things going these men seem to get them. They make other people do their will—they are leaders. If they are business men they are successful; if they are workmen they get the foreman's job. They have the power of influencing people.

The same thing is true of women. Some have the charm that makes men seek them out; others are always neglected. But this is not luck. It is due to a personal gift—vitality. Men and women of this sort are never weak, puny invalids. They may not be big, but they are full of life and energy. The whole thing is a matter of good blood, good nerves and good health. Everyone would wish to be like this and the qualities that make for vitality and energy are purely a matter of health. By building up the blood and nerves sleeplessness, want of energy, weakness of the back, stooping shoulders, headaches and the ineffectual sort of presence which really comes from weakness can all be got rid of. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have made many weak tired men, vigorous and healthy, and many pale dejected girls and women plump, rosy and attractive, by improving their blood and toning up their nerves. If you are weak, ailing, low-spirited or unhealthy, begin to cure yourself today by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

You can get these Pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Dorothy Hunter, 12 years old, while bathing in the Kettle river at Grand Forks, stepped into a hole, and Charles Mitchener, a returned soldier, went to her help, and both were drowned.

Frshion's Foibles For Coming Season

The fashion—what a large interest in the life of the average woman this subject claims. Take any function where a number of women congregate—at the club, at the afternoon tea, etc., the current fashion is sure to be a live issue. It will furnish material for conversation long after such subjects as the weather, the neighbors, the children, yes, and even the husband, have been torn to shreds.

Through all the years of a woman's life—from the curly-haired little maiden with the fluffy pinnies that must be made just so, to the serene and dignified grandma with a purple sprig in her prim little bonnet—clothes, their cut and their color are of great importance. This is only natural. When a woman loses interest in fashion she loses interest in life. When she ceases to care about the style of her new fall suit and the lines of her hat—not to speak of Mrs. Nexdoor's—in a word, when she relaxes in her efforts to keep up with the Joneses, there is something not quite normal in her life.

Some women there are who carry the vogue to extremes and earn for themselves the sarcastic title, "Butterfly." They becomes slaves to every dictate of fashion, be it ever so absurd. They allow it to tyrannize over them, like the feminine congregation of a certain church down south where the preacher simply could not preserve discipline during prayer. No matter how solemn the moment, at the sound of approaching footsteps every feminine head would turn around to "take in" the apparel of the late comer. The disheartened pastor at last contrived an effective plan whereby he would announce the name of each late arrival. This solved the problem beautifully until, when announcing Mrs. So-and-so, he unthinkingly added, "and she has a new hat." Immediately every neck was craned.

The Coming Styles.

Generally speaking, the modes of this summer and the coming fall allow for a wider and more varied expression of taste and temperament than ever before. Any woman possessing the tiniest artistic vision and a certain cleverness in her fingers can be her own designer this fall. She can take all sorts of liberty with Dame Fashion and express her own individuality as she pleases.

There is no set line of vogue as in other years, and outside of a few new introductions, frocks and suits this fall are particularly adaptable to any number of fancy designs and trimmings. [illegible] comfort and convenience is the predominating note. A large number of thinking women are striking out a new line for themselves, intelligently discarding some of the nonsensical fads and fol-dols which somehow or other had come to be recognized as good style.

Take the large heavy ear-drops, for instance, which jingle on either side of some feminine heads like metal weights, put there seemingly to give some heft to the otherwise light head. These symbols of barbarism are not as much in evidence as they were some time ago, though the more intelligent class of women never did lend themselves to such a fad. This, with a freakish coiffure and a profusion of jewelry on a woman is about the same as a flowing tie bedecked with a flashy stickpin on a man. While there is nothing really wrong about it, it is cheap, glaringly common, and who wants to be considered so?

There are a number of the new fall suits which hark back to, and will probably end in, a revival of the slit skirt effect. The coats worn with these suits are long and inclined to be narrow across the shoulders, giving the figure a sort of stooping, dejected air, while the skirts introduce the peg-top effect, being pleated or gathered at the waist line and very narrow around the ankles, so narrow that the wearer must needs be assisted into a street car, while a race for a slowly moving train would certainly be a losing one.

This vogue will have its little day among a certain class of style devotees, and, like the rest of its kind will probably die a sudden death.

Owing to the scarcity of woolen goods, silks bid fair to be as popular as ever this coming season, and they are beautiful. Lovely soft taffetas with a satin finish and some with showy two-tone effects; lustrous satins, some clinging crepe de chines, and, of course, the ever popular silk poplins, when artistically designed, make up into garments both becoming and serviceable.

Prince Henry Addressed A Very Impudent Letter To the British Monarch

No better example of Prussian stupidity and arrogance has been given to the world, even during the years of the Great War, than the letter recently addressed by Prince Henry of Prussia to King George of England. The intention of the ex-Kaiser's younger brother was to save William Hohenzollern from the punishment that he faces on account of his crimes against civilization, but the impudence of the letter was well-calculated to defeat its purpose. Prince Henry opened his epistle by saying the truth about the war may be had from the Allied statesmen, and he suggests that if the former German Emperor is placed on trial the statesmen should also appear.

The letter asks King George "in the name of justice and his own interests" to desist from demanding the extradition and trial of the former German ruler. The letter, which is signed "Your Humble Cousin Henry," charges that Britain plotted Germany's commercial downfall.

"If the Allies want the truth," the former prince says, "the leading statesmen of England and her Allies should be brought up for trial as primarily and urgently suspected of guilt in the world war."

The letter continues:

"Germany and her brave people have been hit severely, but they are not yet dead. The German spirit, which now seems dead, still lives, and will one day awake to full consciousness of the disgrace and shame which have been inflicted, and will one day demand a reckoning."

The letter charges that it was solely the British Government which for years prepared the world war, in order to eliminate Germany as a troublesome competitor from the world's markets. Prince Henry continues:

"Let me only remind your Majesty of your meetings with M. Sazonoff (then Russian Minister of Foreign Affairs) in September, 1912, at Balmoral, and the utterances of your Majesty on that occasion, which leave no doubt of the fate planned for the German war and merchant navy."

PRINCE HENRY.

Germany was overcome, Prince Henry declares, not by the arms of the Entente, but by a "silver bullet," which lodged in the back of the German people. The latter refers to the hunger blockade, which failed as little in its effects upon the German people as did formerly British measures against the women and children of the Boers.

A Timely Hint.

The first duel to take place in France since the beginning of the war has just been "fought," and according to the society editor a pleasant time was had by all. The performers were the Mayor of Bayonne and the vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce.

They "exchanged shots without results" and tea was served. The duel as staged in France has always been regarded as a healthful pastime, since it takes one out in the open air, the only danger being due to catching cold from walking in the damp grass in the early morning. But our friends the French have yet to grasp the commercial possibilities of these interesting events.

Now, if they would only erect a huge stadium somewhere, have the participants go into training for two months beforehand, get the newspaper to send an army of correspondents to the scene to describe the daily doings of the principals and speculate on the outcome, and then issue a lot of tickets at from $30 to $50 apiece, the French duel might amount to something.

vators for the Peterborough Cereal Co., and is now engaged in the completion of extensive additons to their mill on Simcoe street. Altogether his thirty years' residence here has been a period of industrial enterprise vigorously applied.

Chairman of Committees.

Alderman McIntyre has filled with credit to himself and his colleagues the chairmanship of the following committees: Property, manufacturers, board of works, and power. This year he is chairman of the manufacturers', power and special bathing committees. He also fathered an exceedingly important measure in the milk inspection bylaw, which assured to citizens the delivery of milk that is pure, clean and wholesome. And milk vendors are now governed by license, rules and conditions which make for safety first in milk consumption.

Garbage Collection.

This civic measure was first introduced during ex-Mayor Roland McWilliams' regime, 1907, and Alderman McIntyre proved an indefatigable worker on that committee, which spent night after night in drafting a bylaw to cover all requirements. That was a problem for all but all-night sessions, when on occasions the mayor talked and talked and never left off talking till near the break of day. However, the garbage bylaw was eventually signed and sealed, and its success is now revealed in the fact that year by year the area within its jurisdiction has been extended.

Street Pavement.

Alderman A. A. McIntyre has had the pleasure of watching street paving grow, since its incipiency in Peterborough, under his fatherly eye. But for all that he is opposed to the principle of its being constructed by outside contractors, consistently contending that the city should maintain a paving plant of its own. He figures out that a street paving plant is simple in itself, and that there is no reason why the city should not lay its own street paving as well as concrete sidewalks—a policy of "Peterborough work for Peterborough men" instead of for imported laborers. He never misses an opportunity to hammer away at his pet theory of his, and even now visualizes the day when the corporation will adopt his views that all municipal work should be done by home labor, and apply that principle generally.

Keen for City's Interests.

The subject of the story also moved that Council seek a grant from the Dominion Government toward the new Hunter street bridge, and $50,000 was the acceptable contribution for this work provided in the Government's estimates. He again this year made one of a deputation to Sir Adam Beck in the hope of securing a grant from the Hydro-Electric toward the same structure, on the ground that it would facilitate street railway connection with East City, but Sir Adam proved unkind, and begged to be excused.

When chairman of the manufacturers' committee in 1916, he accompanied ex-Mayor Duffus, ex-Ald. Weir and ex-City Solicitor G. N. Gordon to interview Mr. Robert Stuart at Chicago on the question of rebuilding the Quaker Oats premises in Peterborough after the fire, and the success of that trip can be seen any time by walking down Hunter street to the river's bank, where those new buildings now rear their proud heads skyward.

With Alderman Edgar, he next turned his attention to the non-payment of school taxes by the Quaker Oats property under an old agreement with the town, as a result of which that company now pays into the city's treasury yearly $16,000 in school rates, and that amount has yet to grow. Following up his interest in schools and the kiddies that there attend, Alderman McIntyre accepted the chairmanship of the special bathing beach committee, and as such this year gave the erection of a bathing house at Lake street personal supervision.

Endorsed by Labor.

While not actually a Labor candidate, Alderman McIntyre is Labor's friend, and is endorsed as such by the Trades and Labor Council, of which body he is in reality a member. "Eight hours a day and a higher living standard for workingmen" is his slogan at all times when labor questions arise. This he exemplified in the late laborers' and carpenters' wage dispute, during the whole time of which he stood firm in Council and forcefully advocated 45 cents an hour for the former and 67½ cents for the latter together with an eight-hour day, bridge or no bridge.

No Canvassing.

A. A. McIntyre was the first and only alderman to seek two years ago the prohibition of canvassing for votes by the aldermanic and mayoralty candidates. And, although his advocacy bore no fruit, he still holds that the principle of canvassing for office is wrong in that better men would be the choice of the electors were they left in peace to vote as their own intelligence and knowledge dictates.

A Great White Way.

In conclusion, Alderman McIntyre has taken great interest in the question of power, and more of it, for this electric city, and has actively engaged in the many conferences, to say nothing of strenuous municipal enterprise, which subsequently led up to the absorption by the Hydro-Electric for the city of the Peterborough Light and Power Co. and the Otonabee Power Co.'s interests. This made possible the beautiful magnetic arc lamp "white way" on Charlotte and George streets, and the control of water powers at and contingent to Peterborough for industrial and domestic purposes.

LAST SHIP IN MICHIGAN

Steamers Warned to Look Out For Hulk of Derelict.

Chicago, Aug. 22.—The coast guard station was given a mystery to solve last night when a wireless message was received from the Carolina, a steamer operated by the Goodrich Transit Company, stating that the hulk of an old ship was seen floating three and a half miles northeast of the breakwater.

Capt. J. O. Anderson, in charge of the coast guard, said early this morning that the pall of smoke which hung low over the lake, prevented sighting of the hulk from the station. An attempt was made during the night to locate the wreck, but it could not be found.

The captain said that Cpt. F. Jocobs of the tug Tacoma, yesterday, towed an old vessel out into the lake and sunk it. Capt. Jacobs, when told of the floating wreck, said he was sure it could not be the discarded vessel.

All incoming and outgoing steamers have been requested to keep a sharp lookout for the derelict, in the fear that it may be the wreckage of some vessel.

COULDN'T RIDE ON THE STREET CARS

WAS ALMOST NERVOUS WRECK —SAYS TANLAC IS WORTH ITS WEIGHT IN GOLD

"I would not take one thousand dollars for the good Tanlac had done me," said Arthur Baars, employed by the Milwaukee Paper Box Co., and residing at 1207 Eighteenth St., Milwaukee, in telling the Tanlac representative of this improvement since taking the medicine.

"Yes, sir, this medicine has put me in shape so I can do more work than I've been able to do before in years, and you can just tell the people I think it is worth its weight in gold," continued Mr. Baars, as he went on with his statement.

"My trouble started three years ago when I had a collapse caused by overheat. I was down in bed three months from this spell, and it left me in an awful fix; in fact I became almost a nervous wreck. I couldn't ride on the street cars, and being in a crowd or amongst a little excitement would completely upset me, and I would shake like a leaf and it would take several days to get over it. I had such terrific headaches at time my head felt like iron bands were tied around it. Some nights I would have to sit up in bed and get my wife to bathe my head to get a little relief, and many times I couldn't get to sleep until four or five o'clock in the morning on account of these headaches and nervous spells. This is just the shape I was in when one of the men at the shop suggested to me that I take Tanlac and I agreed to do it, but I had little faith in it or any other medicine.

"By the time the first bottle had gone the headaches had disappeared and my nerves began to get steady. To make a long story short this Tanlac made me feel like a different man and now I haven't a sign of nervousness or the other troubles that had been pulling me down for the past three years. I sleep fine, get up in the mornings feeling refreshed and rested and ready for my day's work. I eat three hearty meals every day—something I couldn't do before—and what I eat agrees with me, and I am gaining in strength and weight every day. This Tanlac certainly beats anything I ever saw in my life."

Tanlac proved of great benefit to Mr. Baars, because it contains certain medicinal properties which enrich the blood and promote a healthy appetite for nourishing food. Tanlac has been very successful in overcoming nervousness and sleeplessness not from a quieting effect on the nerves, for it has no such effect, but by strengthening the nerves and body and bringing the normal state of health through its effect on the appetite and nutrition of the body.

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd., in Havelock by A. C. Denike, in Lakefield by Tanner Drug Co. Ltd., in Fowler's Corners by W. A. Hunter, in Gelert by A. J. Scott, in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

ASKS UNCLE SAM TO WITHDRAW TROOPS

MEXICO RESENTS PRESENCE OF AMERICAN SOLDIERS SOUTH OF BORDER.

Washington, Aug. 21.—Immediate withdrawal of the American troops now on the trail of bandits in Northern Mexico was asked today by the Mexican ambassador, who called at the state department to make protest from the Carranza government. The test of the protest was not made public and officials would not discuss it further than to say that no reply had been made.

CLAIM HOME RULE ACT VALID

Nationalist Paper Says it Was to Take Effect at End of War.

Dublin, Aug. 22. The Irish Nationalist papers print the text of the Act suspending the operations of the Home Rule Act to make it plain that the Home Rule Act must come into within six months of the end of the war, but on a date to be fixed "no later than the end of the war."

It was provided by an Act of Parliament that the date on which the war officially ends shall be a date as near as possible to the date of signing the last of the treaties of peace.

MOLDERS REJECT OFFER

Turn Down Terms of 70 Cents and a 48-Hour Week.

The Molders' Section of the Metal Trades Council, of Toronto, have unanimously rejected an offer from the foundry employers of seventy cents an hour and a 48-hour week. The decision to stand firm for their demand of seventy-five cents an hour and a forty-four hour week was made at a meeting of the strikers yesterday, and, according to Organizer John Barnett, there seems little signs of settlement. The Molders have received $300 from the Galt local as well as several minor contributions from other outside points.

In Peterborough, where the Molders have been locked out for the past three months there is a chance of an early settlement in favor of the men.

Liberty And Its True Meaning

(Hamilton Spectator.)

"What is truth?" asked Pilate, and the same unanswered query may be applied to liberty. Indeed, truth and liberty are in a sense inseparable—"the truth shall make you free." What, then, is liberty? It is a word which is on everyone's lips and enshrined in everyone's heart; but its interpretations are manifold. Each one of us, in fact, has his own conception of liberty; the peculiar differences of disposition which distinguish one man from another which give him his bias and determine his aspirations—that individual quality craves indulgence and development, freedom of action to live the life most congenial to it. Insofar as the bent is good, or at least innocuous, society is not concerned to repress it; but when the proclivity is bad, it becomes necessary to impose restraint. There is a loose idea among the unthinking that if we could only have perfect liberty, all would be well—it is the fallacy at the back of all anarchistic movements, and we see it being worked out to-day, with inevitable consequences, in Russia; where, while the populace is scarcely accorded the freedom of life itself, it is surfeited with all kinds of other "freedoms" which are, in reality, the worst form of bondage.

Freedom, divorce from rectitude, is a greater evil than slavery. Absolute freedom implies the abolition of all law. When we start legislating, we impose restrictions, and, providing these are conceived with a good purpose and administered in an impartial manner, nothing but good can result. All progress is in a way the sacrifice of liberty. It is a surrender of "liberty" when the cannibal gives up his right to feast upon his fellow-men, but no one will deny that he takes a great step forward thereby. The fabric of civilization as it exists to-day is built up of renunciations, and it fails of perfections just because those renunciations are not yet sufficient. If the greedy would renounce their selfishness, the rich their luxury, the lazy their indolence, the vicious their crimes, all our troubles would be brought to a speedy end. It is self-indulgence—another name for liberty, as it is popularly misconstrued—that gives birth to most of life's complications. And the universal cry is for more and ever more indulgence.

The world is setting democracy in the seats of power, and repudiating the old ideas of nobility. What is to be democracy's substitute for the "noblesse oblige"—for it did "oblige" in many cases? Not unrestricted license surely, or it will soon come to an end. This shout for liberty, which always accompanies ideas of equality and fraternity, is good only when it does not run to excesses. "O Liberty, what things are done in thy name!" cried poor Madame Roland, at the scaffold of the Paris guillotine. In the name of liberty we have at the present day wholesale class murder and the nationalization of women! Let the "proletariat" beware lest, in the excess of its zeal to move forward it does not move decidedly backward. There can be too much of a good thing, even of liberty.

CHANCE FOR THE CARRIERS

Toronto Paper Explains Their Opportunities for Advancement.

A Toronto letter carrier sends the following query to a paper in that city.

What provision, if any, has been made for advancement or promotion for letter carriers? I have been a letter carrier for ten years and would like to be transfered to railway mail clerk.

The answer given is as follows: The salary scale for letter carriers under the proposed classification is $780 to $1,260 a year, and in addition uniform, boots, and street car fare. Whether letter carriers who have been at the present maximum or a number of years will be advanced immediately to $1,020, $1,140 or $1,260 a year is a matter to be determined by the regulations to be worked out by the Civil Service commission, and approved by the Governor-in-Council. The classification points out a considerable number of lines of promotion for letter carriers.

WHEN YOU WAKE UP DRINK GLASS OF HOT WATER

Wash the poisons and toxins from system before putting more food into stomach.

Says inside-bathing makes anyone look and feel clean, sweet and refreshed.

Wash yourself on the inside before breakfast like you do on the outside. This is vastly more important because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, causing illness while the bowel pores do.

For every ounce of food and drink taken into the stomach, nearly an ounce of waste material must be carried out of the body. If this waste material is not eliminated day by day it quickly ferments and generates poisons, gases and toxins which are absorbed or sucked into ducts which would suck only nourishment to sustain the body.

A splendid health measure is to drink, before breakfast each day, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless way to wash these poisons, gases and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, thus cleansing, sweetening and freshening the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the blood stream. through the lymph the stomach.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs but very little at the drug store but is sufficient to make anyone an enthusiast on inside bathing. Men and women who are accustomed to wake up with a dull, aching head or have furred tongue, bad taste, nasty breath, sallow complexion, others who have billious attacks acid stomach or constipation are assured of pronounced improvement in both health and appearance shortly.

REMEDY FLOODING NUISANCE

City Will Co-operate With Quaker Oats Co. in Laying Drain.

The water in rainy season has been running down Brock and Dickson streets and washing away a bank on the Quaker Oats Company's property, causing considerable annoyance of that concern.

Last night at a committee of the whole Council, Mr. Cormack of the Quaker Oats Co. asked the city's co-operation in remedying this nuisance. The Quaker Oats Co. were willing to lay a drain over a considerable distance of their property and empty its contents into the river, provided the city build a drain to meet it along the street.

City Engineer Parsons estimated the cost of this work at from $50 to $60.

On a motion of Ald. Turner and Edgar this matter was left in the hands of the chairman of the Board of Works, Ald. Phelan, and the city engineer, with power to act.

French newspapers report an American capitalist offered the French Government annual royalty of $200,000,000 for the tobacco monopoly. Minister of Finance refused the offer.

AUTOS AND TOBACCO TO PAY BULK OF PREFERENCE DUTY.

London, Aug. 23.—Imperial preference goes into effect on September 1. The Commissioners of Customs have issued a list of articles produced in the British Empire to which preferential rates are applicable, as follows:

Pay five-sixths of full rate of duty: Tea, cocoa, coffee, chicory, currants, dried and preserved fruits, glucoses, molasses, saccharine, motor spirit and tobacco.

Pay two-thirds of duty: Motor cars, musical instruments, clocks, watches and cinematograph films.

Wines and Spirits: Wine not exceeding 30 degrees proof spirits will pay 60 per cent. of the full rate and wine exceeding 30 degrees, 66 2-3. On bottled still wines 50 per cent. of the full rate of additional duty will be charged. On spirits preference will be given by means of increasing the duty on spirits not produced in the Empire by four shillings per gallon on perfumed spirits, three shillings fourpence a gallon on liquors, and half a crown per gallons on spirits of other description.

REVENUE FROM AUTOS TO REACH $1,500,000

IN 1918 TOTAL OF 109,000 CONTRIBUTED $1,214,000 TO TREASURY.

Toronto, Aug. 23.—In the course of a special article, W. A. McLean, deputy minister of public highways for Ontario, writes: "Provincial expenditure is now based largely on, but not confined to, income from motor vehicle registration. This in 1918 amounted to 109,000 vehicles with a revenue of $1,214,000. A registration of 140,000 vehicles in 1919 and a revenue of at least $1,500,000 is certain. Townships are annually spending about $2,500,000 on local roads and counties are spending about $4,000,000 annually on market roads, so that, coupled with provincial and federal appropriations, a total annual outlay of $10,000,000 on the rural roads of Ontario is well within the combined financial ability of the municipal and central governments.

Shortage of Labor

"The improvement of roads in the province is unfortunately handicapped at the present time by a shortage of labor and neither county nor provincial estimates will be expended this year, unless labor becomes more plentiful."

EDITOR'S MAIL

UP TO THE BAKERS.

Editor Review: I see by your paper that many complaints are being made about the inferiority of bakers' bread at the present time, and that it is not even as good as the war bread was, which contained so many substitutes as a war measure. There are different theories given for the cause. Some think that potatoes or other cheap ingredients are used in making it. Others think that it is baked with too hot a fire and taken from the oven before it is baked all the way through, thus leaving the centre in a doughy state which will remain damp and heavy for days and cause indigestion. Whatever the cause may be, the bakers as experts ought to be able to rectify the difficulty for the price they charge.

Yours truly,

FOOD.

G.W.V.A. ENTERTAINS THE GRENADIER GUARDS BAND

INFORMAL A HOME AT VET'S CLUB HOUSE GREATLY APPRECIATED BY BANDSMEN.

The Grenadier Band was given an "at home" at the G.W.V.A. after their concert last night. The local veterans and British veterans, because most of the band have seen active service, enjoyed the hour talking over old times greatly. The band was highly delighted with their stay in the city and only wished it had been for three or four days rather than for such a brief time. The members of the band were treated to smokes and treats and all agreed that a very enjoyable time had been spent.

COMES BACK TO THIS CITY.

Dr. H. M. Yelland Has Bought Residence of Late Dr. McGrath.

Dr. H. M. Yelland, a native of Peterborough, son of Mr. Joseph Yelland, and who has been practising medicine for the past five years, has purchased the residence of the late Dr. McGrath. After completing a special course in the hospitals in New York Dr. Yelland will begin practice in this city.

RECORD AUDIENCE GREETS GUARDS' BAND

PROGRAM OF NINE NUMBERS MAKE FOR BEST BAND PROGRAM EVER.

Peterborough music lovers were given a rare treat last night, when the band of His Majesty's Grenadier Guards played a concert, at the Grand Opera House. Several first-class Canadian bands have been heard in Peterborough this summer, but it is safe to say that never has such music as was provided last night been heard here before. The Guards band in is a class by itself both as a military band and as concert organization, and the people of Peterborough were indeed honored in having them perform here. Outside of Toronto this city is the only place in Ontario to have the privilege of hearing a concert by this band. They play in three or four American cities after they finish their engagement at the Toronto Exhibition for which they were brought from England.

Last night's programme consisted of nine numbers and as many encores and it would be a difficult matter to single any particular number out for especial mention. The rendition of "La Misrere" from Il Trovatore with the cornets playing an echo effect off stage was much appreciated by the audience, the softened tones of the cornets and the perfect accompaniment by the rest of the instrumentation appearing to reach the very souls of the listeners.

As an encore the band played an arrangement of "Tipperary," with the heavier brass playing the "Marseillaise," at the time which won great applause, but when they played "The Maple Leaf," and "O Canada," the house went wild.

The overture from William Tell is a wonderful piece of music on any instrument but when heard from a full band it was indescribable. "The British Grenadiers" and "Kelly," played by request, pleased the audience, as in fact did every number on the programme.

The management of the Grand is to be congratulated on securing this band as an attraction at the George street playhouse and many were the warm words of praise for their effort heard last night.

The Guards' band were met on their arrival here by the band of the G.W.V.A. and played to their hotel, and at the theatre the Veterans' band occupied seats of honor. After the concert the visitors were entertained at the rooms of the local association and left about midnight declaring that in Peterborough they had had a beter time than in any Canadian city visited yet. It was quite a pleasing sight last night after the concert to see red-coated bandsmen being escorted through the streets to the Veterans' club rooms by khaki-clad rturned soldiers and speaks well for that great fraternity formed by association with Imperial Troops overseas.

The band left this morning for Toronto where they will play during the Exhibition which opens today.

PARENTS TO PAY $12 DAMAGES

Children Stole Potatoes and Sold Them for Pocket Money.

Magistrate Dumble ordered the parents of children who have been digging Mr. O'Brien's potatoes and selling them to pay $12, cost of the potatoes, in the police court this morning. Boys stealing apples is an old offence but stealing potatoes and selling them is rather a recent innovation for mischevious youngsters under 12 years of age.

AUTOMOBILES MUST BE LEFT ON RIGHT SIDE OF STREET

Some car owners in this city have formed a habit of leaving their cars on the left-hand side of the street contrary to the Highway Travels Act. This is the last warning, and the police are commencing a round-up of all guilty of breaches of the law. For the safety of the general public these laws must be enforced.

PLANS FOR "CURRIE" DAY

How Toronto Will Entertain Canada's Noted Military Leader.

Toronto, Aug. 23.—Word has been received that General Sir Arthur Currie will reach Toronto on August 29, arriving at the North Toronto Station at 8.30 a.m.— A guard of honor and band composed of "Originals" as well as hundreds of officers from the garrison, including the District Staff, will be on hand to meet him. To enable the citizens to take part in the demonstration it is proposed that the train bearing Sir Arthur will pull in along the west side of Yonge street so that the large open space there, in which the troops used formerly to assemble, will be available for the general public. It is estimated that there is room here for some 10,000 persons.

During the morning General Currie will receive at Casa Loma, where hewill be the guest of Sir Henry Pellatt, any officers who wish to call on him. At 12.45 he will be the guest of the Empire Club at a luncheon. In the afternoon he will make an inspection of the Military Hospitals in the city. The route to be followed will be announced later, so that the citizens will have an opportunity of tendering him a reception during his progress.

MADGE KENNEDY ENCHANTING AS PRIMROSE IN "DAY DREAMS"

Irresistible Star's Joyous Mood Given Full Expression in Her Newest GoldWyn Picture, Coming to Grand Theatre

Magnetic, beautiful and charming as ever is Madge Kennedy in her newest Goldwyn Picture, "Day Dreams," written for her by Cosmo Hamilton. The star of "The Kingdom of Youth" and "A Perfect Lady," productions that have enthralled picture enthusiasts in every part of the country has given even more of her wondrous self and her unerring sense of comedy to the picturization of the brilliant Cosmo Hamilton story.

Madge Kennedy's joyous mood is given full expression in "Day Dreams." Never has the delightful artiste, with whom success has become a habit, been seen in a more lovable role than as Primrose. It holds an appeal greater than any character she had previously been cast to portray and the enthusiasm with which she entered work on the production prompted Goldwyn to announce that "Day Dreams" is certain to be the most acclaimed of all Madge Kennedy productions.

That it will be none of her world of admirers will deny. Madge Kennedy has a store of surprises in "Day Dreams" that are certain to delight the most exacting photoplay adherent when Goldwyn presents this brilliant comedy-drama at the Grand Theatre, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

The Plot.

Primrose (Madge Kennedy) lives her dream of fairyland while caring for ducks and geese on the farm of Grandpa and Grandma Burn. Always her thoughts are of the white knight, who is coming to claim her as his princess and take her to his castle across the sea. There are men of wealth, who seek her hand in marriage but to all Primrose gives the same reply: "I am waiting for my white knight. Only him will I marry."

But one of them, George Graham, is firm in his resolve to win the beautiful Primrose. He schemes to wake her from the dream that is causing him unhappiness, unmindful of the joy it gives her. In the village lives Dan O'Hara, a handsome, though struggling author. His brother, a recent employe of Graham, faces prosecution by Graham for some criminal negligence in business. To shield the brother Dan agrees to Graham's demand that he pose as Primrose's white knight. So, garbed as one of the knights of old, Dan presents himself before Primrose. He tells her his galleon is ready to take her to his castle.

Primrose, enthralled, rushes to tell the glad news to Grandpa and Grandma Burn and to bring food for her white knight. Meanwhile Graham is converting his pretty home into a fairy castle. After spending several days on the farm Primrose, her grandparents, and the white knight set sail for her land of happiness—the white knight's estate. Arriving at George's transformed home, Primrose enters her apartments and exults over her good fortune. Dan loves Primrose as much as she worships him. He rebels against going on with the deception, but Graham's threats give him no other alternative. Graham is always about, but unseen by Primrose, to make certain that Dan is carrying out his orders.

One day during Primrose's absence Graham and Dan engage in a heated conversation over the latter's unwillingness to continue the scheme. Unknown to them Primrose appears and is shocked by Graham's presence. She determines to know why he is there. She hides behind a coat of mail and hears Dan say "I can't go on." Graham replies that Primrose's disillusionment will come that night at a big dance he has arranged.

Primrose grieves at the shattering of her dream, but attends the ball as though she knew nothing of the deception. To assure success for his venture Graham has engaged a vampire to expose Dan, the white knight, as the husband, who deserted her years ago. But Graham's vast cunning is made to look foolish when Primrose places her arms about Dan and declares that though he is not a white knight she will marry him and make him one.

BEVERLY BAYNE IS PAINTER OF MINIATURES

Beverly Bayne, the beautiful young actress who is seen as co-star with Francis X. Bushman in "Outlaw," the clever Metro drama to be shown at the Grand Theatre Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, is a versatile artist of many talents.

Besides being one of the most famous stars of the screen she has attained distinction as a miniature painter—the most difficult form of portrait painting there is. Miss Bayne, who was educated at the Hyde Park School, Chicago, had at one time thought seriously of painting as a career—that she changed her mind and became a screen actress instead was due to a caprice of fate.

One day Miss Bayne visited the Essanay studios with some friends. Her unusual beauty and youthful charm attracted the eye of the director in charge and he offered her the leading role in a play which he was then casting. Full of amazement at the idea she, however, at the insistence of her friends, accepted and so became a star in her first production.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

BY EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

"They're a clever lot, those newspaper guys," sneered Mr. Bland, "in their own opinion. But when you come right down to it every one of 'em has a nice little collection of gold bricks in his closet. I guess you've got them going. I hope so."

"I am to disappear completely for a time."

"Thank you," smiled the girl. "You are very kind. You are here, I understand, because of an unfortunate—er—affair of the heart?"

Mr. Bland smoothed back his black oily hair from his forehead and smirked. "Oh, now"—he protested.

"Arabella," put in Mr. Magee, "was her name. The beauties of history and mythology bobbled into oblivion at sight of her."

"I'm quick to forget," insisted Mr. Bland.

"That does you no credit, I'm sure," replied the girl severely. "And now, mamma, I think we had better select our rooms"—

She paused, for Elijah Quimby had come in through the dining room door.

"Well?" he drawled. "Mr. Magee," he said, "that letter from Mr. Bentley asked me to let you stay at Baldpate inn. There wasn't anything in it about your bringing parties of friends along."

"These are not friends I've brought along," explained Magee. "They're simply some more amateur hermits who have strolled in from time to time. All have their individual latchkeys to the hermitage. And all, I believe, have credentials for you to examine."

Mr. Quimby stared in angry wonder. Professor Bolton rose from his chair.

"So you are Quimby," he said in a soothing tone. "I'm glad to meet you at last. My old friend John Bentley has spoken of you so often. I have a letter from him." He drew the caretaker to one side and took an envelope from his pocket. The two conversed in low tones.

CHAPTER VII.

The Mayor Casts a Shadow Before.

QUICKLY the girl in the corduroy suit leaned toward Mr. Magee. She whispered, and her tone was troubled:

"Stand by me. I'm afraid I'll need your help."

"What's the matter?" inquired Magee.

"I haven't much of any right here, I guess. But I had to come."

"But your key?"

"I fear my—my press agent—stole it."

"Never mind," he said very gently; "I'll see you through."

Quimby was standing over Mr. Bland. "How about you?" he asked.

"Call up Andy Rutter and ask about me," replied Bland in the tone of one who prefers war to peace.

"I work for Mr. Bentley," said Quimby. "Rutter hasn't any authority here. He isn't to be manager next season, I understand. However, the professor wants me to let you stay. He says he'll be responsible." Mr. Bland looked in open mouthed astonishment at the unexpected sponsor he had found. "And you?" went on Quimby to the women.

"Why"— began Miss Norton.

"Absolutely all right," said Mr. Magee. "They come from Hal Bentley, like myself. He's put them in my care. I'll answer for them." He saw the girl's eyes. They spoke her thanks.

Mr. Quimby shook his head as one in a dream.

"All this is beyond me—way beyond," he ruminated. "I'm going to write all about it to Mr. Bentley, and I suppose I got to let you stay till I hear from him. I think he ought to come up here if he can."

"The more the merrier," said Mr. Magee, reflecting cheerfully that the Bentleys were in Florida at last accounts.

"Come, mamma," said Miss Norton, rising, "let's go up and pick out a suit. There's one I used to have a few years ago. You can see the hermit's shack from the windows. By the way, Mr. Magee, will you send Mr. Peters up to us? He may be able to help us get settled."

"Ahem!" muttered Mr. Magee. "I—I'll have a talk with Peters. To be quite frank, I anticipate trouble. You see, the hermit of Baldpate doesn't approve of women"—

"The idiot!" cried Mrs. Norton.

"Delicious!" laughed the girl.

"I shall ask Peters to serve you," said Magee. "I shall appeal to his gallant side. But I must proceed gently. This is his first day as our cook, and you know how necessary a good first impression is with a new cook. I'll appeal to his better nature."

"Don't do it!" cried the girl. "Don't emphasize us to him in any way or he may exercise his right as cook and leave. Just ignore us. We'll play at being our own bellboys."

"Ignore you!" cried Mr. Magee. "What herculean tasks you set! I'm not equal to that one!" He picked up their traveling bags and led the way upstairs. "I'm something of a bellboy myself when roused," he said.

The girl selected suit 17, at the farther end of the corridor from Magee's apartments. "It's the very one I used to have years and years ago—at least two or three years ago," she said. "Isn't it stupid? All the furniture in a heap!"

"And cold," said Mrs. Norton. "My land, I wish I was back by my own fire."

"I'll make you regret your words, Mrs. Norton!" cried Magee. He threw up the windows, pulled off his coat and set to work on the furniture. The girl bustled about, lightening his work by her smile.

"I hope you don't expect a tip," the girl said, laughing.

"I do," he said, coming closer and speaking in a voice that was not for the ear of the chaperon. "I want a tip on this—do you really act?"

She looked at him steadily.

"Once," she said, "when I was sixteen, I appeared in an amateur play at school. It was my first and last appearance on the stage."

"Thanks, lady," remarked Mr. Magee in imitation of the bellboy he was supposed to be. He sought No. 7. There he made himself again presentable, after which he descended to the office.

Mr. Bland sat reading the New York paper before the fire. From the little card room and the parlor, the two rooms to the right and left of the hotel's front door, Quimby had brought forth extra chairs. He stood now by the large chair that held Professor Bolton, engaged in conversation with that gentleman.

"Yes," he was saying, "I lived three years in Reuton and five years in New York. It took me eight years—eight years to realize the truth."

"I heard about it from John Bentley," the professor said gently.

"He's been pretty kind to me, Mr. Bentley has," replied Quimby. "When the money was all gone he offered me this job. Once the Quimbys owned most of the land around Baldpate mountain. It all went in those eight years. To think that it took all those years for me to find it out!"

"If I'm not impertinent, Quimby," put in Magee, "to find what out?"

"That what I wanted, the railroad men didn't want," replied Quimby bitterly, "and that was—the safety of the public. You see, I invented a new rail joint, one that was a great improvement on the old kind. I had sort of an idea, when I was doing it—an idea of service to the world—you know. God, what a joke! I sold all the Quimby lands, and went to Reuton, and then to New York to place it. Not one of the railroad men but admitted that it was an improvement, and a big one—and not one but fought like mad to keep me from getting it down where the public would see it. They didn't want the expense of a change."

Mr. Quimby looked out at the sunlit stretch of snow.

"Eight years," he repeated. "I fought and pleaded. No, I begged—that was the word—I begged. You'd be surprised to know the names of some of the men who kept me waiting in their private offices and sneered at me over their polished desks. They turned me down—every one. Some of them played me—as though I'd been a fish. They referred me to other ends of the same big game, laughing in their sleeves, I guess, at the knowledge of how hopeless it was. Oh, they made a fine fool of me."

"You might have put down some of your joints at your own expense," suggested the professor.

"Didn't I try?" cried Quimby. "Do you think they'd let me? No, the pub[illegible] them everywhere. Once I thought I had convinced somebody. It was down in Reuton—the Suburban railway." There was a rustle as Mr. Bland let his paper fall to the floor. "Old Henry Thornhill was president of the road—he is yet, I guess—but young Hayden and a fellow named David Kendrick were running it. Kendrick was on my side—he almost had Hayden. They were going to let me lay a stretch of track with my joints. Then something happened. Maybe you remember. Kendrick disappeared in the night—he's never been seen since."

"I do remember," said the professor softly.

"Hayden turned me down," went on Quimby. "The money was all gone. So I came back to Upper Asquewan—caretaker of an inn that overlooks the property my father owned—the property I squandered for a chance to save human lives."

"The mayor has the fifth key."

He moved away, and the men sat in silence for a time. Then the professor spoke very gently:

"Poor devil—to have had his dream of service—and then grow old on Baldpate."

"Well, everything's shipshape in the kitchen," announced the hermit cheerfully, hurrying into the room. "I couldn't go without seeing to that. I wish you the best of luck, gentlemen, and goodby."

"Goodby?" cried the professor.

"By the gods, he's leaving us!" almost wept Mr. Bland.

"It can't be," said Mr. Magee.

"It has to be," said the hermit of Baldpate, solemnly shaking his head. "I'd like to stay with you, and I would if they hadn't come. But here they are, and when women come in the door I fly out of the window, as the saying is."

"But, Peters," pleaded Magee, "you are not going to leave us in the hole like this?"

"Sorry," replied Peters. "I can please men, but I can't please women. I tried to please one once—but let the dead past bury its dead. I live on Baldpate in a shack to escape the sex, and it wouldn't be consistent for me to stay here now. I got to go. I hate to, like a dog, but I got to."

"Peters," said Mr. Magee, "I'm surprised. After giving your word to stay! And who knows—you may be able to gather valuable data for your book. Stick around. These women won't bother you. And we'll pay you beyond the dreams of avarice of a Broadway chef. Won't we, gentlemen?"

The others nodded. Mr. Peters visibly weakened.

"Well," he began, "I"— His eyes were on the stairs. Mr. Magee also looked in that direction and saw the girl of the station smiling down. She no longer wore coat and hat, and the absence of the latter revealed a glory of golden hair that became instantly a rival to the sunshine in that drear bare room.

"No, Peters," she said, "you mustn't go. We couldn't permit it. Mamma and I will go."

She continued to smile at the obviously dazzled Peters. Suddenly he spoke in a determined tone:

"No, don't do that. I'll stay." Then he turned to Magee and continued for that gentleman's ear alone: "Doggone it, we're all alike! We resolve and resolve and then one of them looks at us and it's all forgot. I had a friend who advertised for a wife—leastways, he was a friend until he advertised. He got ninety-two replies, seventy of 'em from married men advising against the step. 'I'm cured,' he says to me. 'Not for me.' Did he keep his word? No. A week after he married a widow just to see if what the seventy said was true. I'm mortal. I hang around the buzzsaw. If you give me a little money, I'll go down to the village and buy the provisions for lunch."

BIG G.A.C. TOURNEY TORONTO TUESDAY

SOLDIER JONES AND TWIN SULLIVAN MEET IN HEAVIES.

Toronto, Aug. 23.—So eager was Soldier Jones to meet Jack Twin Sullivan again that the Canadian heavyweight champion tuned drown two other matches and picked the one in Toronto next Tuesday night with the famous Buffalo heavy. Jones was asked to box Stanley Myers, the American marine champion, at Buffalo on Monday night, while he was to have fought Porky Flynn in Quebec City on Wednesday night. He preferred the bout with Sullivan, which was sandwiched in between the two others. Jones was ready to engage in all three bouts, but Manager Daniels would not let him do any "iron-man stunts." It just goes to show, however, how much the Toronto heavy is sought after, and the Grand Army of Canada consider they have pulled off a neat thing in securing the Sullivan-Jones bout. Buffalo had been bidding keenly for it, and it developed in a scrap between the two organizations with the G. A. C. emerging the victors.

Another bout which is costing the G. A. C. quite a bit, and which was not arranged until a whole lot of bickering had been done is the ten round championship go between Bobby Ebor, the Canadian bantam title-holder, and Fighting Dick Atkins. The trouble was over the weights. Ebor insisted on 118 pounds at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and, of course, he was right in asking for that weight, as it is the legitimate bantam limit. No man can afford to give such a tough boy as Atkins even an ounce. The big question now is whether the weight reducing process will not weaken Atkins as it did Goodcrich. It should be one grand battle, and if only Atkins can perform consistently Ebor is in for the busiest time of his strenuous young life.

They do say that Ted Lewis and Jack Britton are getting jealous of Alec Lisner and Jack McCracken. For the seventh time Johnny and Scotty will clash at the Arena next Tuesday night. This battle is the "rubber," and fireworks are expected. Irish Kennedy, the aggressive Hamilton feather, will be opposed to a man who is just as ready to mix as himself. Ketchum is the name, and he has been "ketching" quite a few lately. Kennedy will have to look out as he is liable to be "ketched," too. Young Joyce, the hard hitting flyweight, will meet a willing little mixer in Kid Herman, of Hamilton. The bill is one of the best put out in Toronto in years, and a large crowd is expected.

FAWNES LEADING IN GOLF MATCH

A TEST BETWEEN AMERICA'S GREAT VETERAN GOLFERS AT PITTSBURG.

Pittsburg, Aug. 23. — W. C. Fownes, Jr., of Oakmount, led Robert T. Jones, Jr., of Atlanta, one up when the players reached the ninth hole of their match in the semi-final round of the National Amateur Gold Championship yesterday.

The cards:

Fownes . . . . 5 5 5 4 3 4 4 5—40
Jones . . . . 5 5 4 7 4 4 4 4 5—42

GOOD SENIOR O.R. F. U. FORECASTED

KEEN COMPETITION EXPECTED BETWEEN HAMILTON AND TORONTO.

Toronto, Aug. 23.—Hamilton Rowing Club, Toronto R. and A. A., Cpitals and Parkdale Canoe Club will comprise the senior series of the Ontario Rugby Football Union this fall. This much was cleared up at last night's meeting of the Union, held for the purpose of getting something definite concerning the series. It was feared that perhaps four Toronto teams and one Hamilton would want to get in and make to top heavy circles.

This, however, was overcome when Capitals and Beaches announced that they had amalgamated and would play under the name of Capitals. There are still some obstacles in the way of senior Rugby, however. That is the ground question. It has been decided that the O.R.F.U. should send a delegation before the next meeting of the City Council and press the claim regarding the need of Rosedale field for this fall to accommodte the Rugby teams. There is an impression going the rounds that Rosedale field, if secured, will be for the exclusive use of Argonauts. This is far from right. It will be a field for the use of all teams in all sports, and Argos will be dealt with just the same as all other clubs.

Hamilton Rowing Club and Jack McAllister and Frank Robbins, representing them last night, and the former announced that their chances of securing the odd dates at the H. A. A. A. feild are excellent. If they are successful they will play senior and hold an organization meeting next week. Certificates will be in use in all series of the O. R. F. U. this fall, and this will be a help to the managers, who will then know what players they have. These will likely be ready for distribution at the semi-annual meeting on the first Saturday in September. All clubs intending to play in the O. R. F. U. are asked to send as many representatives (with a vote at the civic elections) as possible to next week's meeting of the City Council. Fans who want to see Rugby this fall should help the teams in their task of securing playing fields.

Louis F. Swift, announced Swift & Co. would dispose of all the company's interest in tanning and leather.

Mexican Government ordered full invesetigation into the murder recently of Theodore Patterson, a British subject in the State of Zacatecas.

Since the armistice was signed the War Department received the resignation of 1,300 officers, who report they are unable to live comfortably on present salary.

The match was a test between one of America's great veteran golfers, Fownes, who has held the title, and the brilliant 17-year-old Atlanta boy who became known in the golf world in this same event, three years ago, and has continued to shoot wonderful golf.

Fownes was shooting over a course which was laid out under his personal supervision, and he played his shots today in a manner to indicate that he understood how to keep away from the Oakmont pitfalls.

At the end of the first 18 holes, Jones led Fownes by one up:

Jones . . . . 417345345 — [illegible]
Fownes . . . . 656445345 — 4[illegible]

WINNING TEAM NOT FOREIGN TO CINCINNATI AS SUPPOSED

The Reds' recent climb to the pinacle of the National League, caused many scribes to remark that the idea of a winning team never before occurred to the town opposite Covington. This is false, for that idea originated in Redville, just as did the idea of professional baseball. Cincinnati, under the management of Harry Wright, was the first to "hire" ball players. Wright organized a team of star players from many cities, and in 1869 made a tour of the U.S.A. from coast to coast.

This team played fifty-seven games on its tour, and won all but one, which was a tie. They scored a total of 2,389 runs against 574 for the enemy. The team was composed of Brainard, pitcher; Allison, catcher; Gould, Sweasy and Waterman, on the bases; Geo. Wright, shortstop; Leonard, H. Wright (manager), and McVey in the outfield. And this club, remember, was the Cincinnati Red Sox! They whipped Troy Haymakers, perhaps the second professional club, the Cleveland Forest Citys, Harvard, the New York Mutuals, the Washington Nationals, the Philadelphia Athletics, Rockford, St. Louis, San Francisco and other famous nines of the period. The Red Sox remained undefeated until 1870 when the Brooklyn Athletics took their measure, 8 to 7. That summer they also came near to defeat by Harvard, but were saved by chasing in seven runs in the ninth after two men were out. Soon after this, Harry Wright went to Boston, and 1874 accompanied the Boston club to England. With the formation of the National league in 1876 Wright became manager of the Bostons, and won the pennant in 1877 and 1878. Cincinnati made a poor showing in the first year with the National league, finishing last and dropped out of the circuit. The Red Sox returned to the fold in 1878, and dropped out again in 1881, whereafter they won in 1882 the championship of the American association. Cincinnati returned to the league in 1890. The American association placed a team in Redville the following year, but it was soon transferred to Milwaukee. The Red Sox, although the most ancient of professional clubs have never won a pennant, yet they are the deans of baseball and the original champs.

BUFFALO BOYS AFTER GAME WITH LOCAL C. O. TEAM HERE

Defeated Kingston and Famous Havana Red Sox and Now After Petes.

A baseball game is being arranged for Thursday or Friday of next week with the Buffalo Prospects. This team is made up of college students who spend their holidays touring the country playing baseball. Dr. Savage is in charge of the team. They played a Kingston team recently and won by the score of 4 to 3 treating Kingston to one of the best games seen there in years. In a series with the famous Havana Red Sox they won five straight games. The baseball fans will hope that arrangements can be made for an exhibition game with the locals next week.

BOLSHEVIKI FLEET DISABLED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Stockholm, Sweden, Aug 1[illegible] — The Bolsheviki fleet in the Gulf of Finland, defending Petrograd, has been disabled completely, newspapers here report. The defenses of Kronstadt, which were bombarded by British warships, it is added, have been destroyed.

AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT.

An automobile from out of town collided with a local truck at the corner of Aylmer and Charlotte Sts. last evening at about 5:30. The truck was going south on Aylmer street and collided with the touring car which was running toward the Grand Trunk station. The damage is very slight. The touring car was at fault.

CLOSING SPORTS AT THE QUEEN MARY GROUNDS

ENTIRE SUPERVISION FORCE ON HAND AT END OF SUCCESSFUL SEASON.

The Queen Mary playgrounds, which has been in operation since July 1, closed its work for the season last evening with a record attendance of close to 800 children and adults.

The entire force of supervision was in charge, each handling some particular group in games of various sorts.

The features of the evening were the races for both boys and girls, and the presentation of the badges to the highest point winners for the season. As the King Edward and Central playgrounds were closed in the afternoon, a great many regular attendants at those grounds were on hand for the sports.

Mr. J. W. Worth, a member of the Playgrounds Association, made a very appropriate address to the youngsters who were all seated on the grass, before giving the lucky ones their prizes. These badges were earned soley on a point winning basis, and no partiality was shown in awarding them. The five girls awarded were Dorothy Henry, Mary Dunlop, Ruth Barnes, Lena Hamilton and Clara Morris. The five boys were Don McIntyre, Clarence Lustic, Ralph Koster, Harold Franks and Jack Stewart.

Results of races:

Boy's 75-yard dash (12 years) —1st Harold Franks, 2nd Chas. Sowden.

Boy's 75-yard dash (15 years) —1st L. Collins, 2nd F. Wolfe.

Wheelbarrow race—1st Wolfe and J. O'Brien, 2nd Collins and G. O'Brien.

Jockey race—1st McIntyre and Wolfe, 2nd Koster and Young.

Girl's 5-yard dash (10 years)—1st Margaret Blodgett, 2nd Mary McDonagh.

Girl's 50-yard dash (15 years)—1st Mary Lynch, 2nd Lena Hamilton.

Boy's 3-legged race—1st Wolfe and Collins, 2nd Young and Franks.

Record Year for Flags.

This will be a record year for flags, for not only will the various new countries created by the Peace Treaty hasten to fit themselves out with national emblems, but new flags will also be designed for this country and allied nations, says Pearson's Weekly.

Of these latter two are already in existence. One is the League of Nations Ensign. It has three broad horizontal stripes, the top and bottom being white and the centre blue. It is really the flag representing the letter "J" in the international code — which is the universal language of the sea — with the colors reversed; and the design was selected principally because it clashes in no way with any existing national flag. The other is the Royal Air Force flag, first flown by Brig.-Gen. Seely, Air Under-Secretary, when he journeyed to Windsor in an airship a few weeks back in order to display the new emblem before the King.

The flag is similar to the Naval White Ensign, but a blue cross takes the place of the red St. George's Cross, and the centre of the flag bears in gold the crown and bird of the R.A.F.

Even Germany is thinking out a new flag.

A Primitive Weapon.

The blowgun is still popular for hunting birds among the Koasati Indians at Louisiana. This weapon consists of a tube, usually of cane, about six feet long, rubbed smooth on the inside with an implement made for the purpose, and carefully straightened with the aid of fire. Slender-pointed darts about eight inches long are used as ammunition, each one wrapped neatly along a third of its length with thistle-down or cotton to make it fit the inside of the tube. The hunter places a dart in the tube, which he raises to his lips and with which he takes careful aim at his game; then with a quick puff of breath he drives the little dart flying with sufficient force to impale and kill a small bird or squirrel.

What Bradstreets Says :---

"Bradstreets" has been looking into the interesting subject of the relation existing between business failures and the advertising world. It has gathered statistics indicating the proportion of failures among business men who advertise, and it has discovered the highly significant fact that 84 per cent of all failures are among "non-advertisers."

If any proof were needed of the truth of the old axiom that "it pays to advertise," here it is upon the very best authority. It is needless to draw a moral from the tale, because the moral is self-evident. It is worthy of remark, however, that "Bradstreets" speaks with an authority with no selfish motive, not being interested itself in the advertising business. It neither advertises itself in the ordinary sense nor does it deal in advertising in a general sense. It is simply an expert on finance and trade, interested only in discovering the truth relative to the value of advertising.

With only 16 per cent. of our business failures among advertisers and 84 per cent. among those who do not advertise, the average Peterborough business man should not be long in determining his policy.

BASEBALL TO-DAY WITH HILLCRESTS

GAME CALLED FOR 3 O'CLOCK WHEN PETES PLAY CHAMPION HILLCRESTS.

Hillcrests of Toronto and Peterborough play this afternoon at 3 o'clock sharp at Riverside Park. The Hillcrests have a great team, but so have the locals, and a rattling good game is expected. "Babe" Dye will be on the mound for the Toronto bunch, and he has gained quite a reputation as a pitcher in the Queen City. Kite will be in the box for the Petes, and a pitchers' duel is guaranteed. A large crowd will undoubtedly take advantage of this grand opportunity.

The Review's Portrait Gallery

Can You Identify This Citizen From the Description Here Given?

LIFE with some people appears to be one long season of enjoyment throughout which the sun never ceases to shine. If clouds come they blow the vapors away from their vicinity. Others, again, enjoy existence only as it affords them daily opportunity to find fault. There are men in Peterborough who seem to attend church not for any spiritual good, but simply to look for material upon which to base a new grouch. Nothing that the preacher says, nothing that the choir has to offer, finds favor in their eyes. Even the dress and deportment of their fellow worshippers does not escape caustic criticism. When such men attend a public gathering or drop into a meeting of the City Council, they carry a knife up their sleeve.

The subject of this sketch is an entirely different person. He is a successful business man, born in this city, and in commercial or private life his word is accepted at a premium. Even the most inexperienced can, and usually does, feel perfectly safe in carrying on business with him. He is bluff in his manner, perhaps, but behind it all there is a ring of sincerity. Not every man of Chesterfieldian polish is of necessity a gentleman.

Our subject is a man of broad vision, tolerant in all his views. Perhaps this tendency has, among members of his denomination, given rise to a suspicion as to his orthodoxy, but with him the true Christian spirit is pre-eminent. He is a believer in the Golden Rule, the universal observance of which is all that is required to make this earth an Eden before the fall with the gate closed against the serpent.

In politics, like all true citizens, the original of this pen picture takes an active part, but he is not set in his ways, prejudiced as to judgment or blinded as to his eyes. He can recognize and condemn a fault or a mistake in a member of his own party as well as in those of the other side.

This description is in general terms, but there is only one individual in Peterborough whom it fits. The misfortune of humanity is that there are not more like him, men who recognize worth wherever they see it, men who can dispense charity to the needy without letting the left hand, not to speak of the applauding world, know what the right is doing.

MASQUERADE BALL A HUGE SUCCESS

JUNIPER PAVILLION RESPLENDENT WITH BEAUTIFULLY COSTUMED GUESTS.

Undoubtedly the most successful masquerade ball ever held on the Kawartha Lakes was that of last night at Juniper Island. The object of the dance was to raise the cash for building a new floor in the pavilion.

About 200 people in all sorts of fancy dress costumes were on the floor and the pavilion was lined with interested spectators who appeared to get as muhc enjoyment from the spectacle as the dancers did from tripping the light fantastic.

The judges for the best dressed person on the floor were Mrs. Rogers, Mrs. Amos, Mrs. Woodcock, Mrs. Acton and Mrs. Harstone and they found their task of selecting the best dressed from among many beautiful and unique costumes, extremely difficult, finally awarding a quartet prize to Miss Barbara Willoughby, Miss Florence Fisher, Mrs. Fred Collins and Gordon Graham who were costumed as Honolulu girls.

Prizes Awarded

The first lady's comic prize was awarded to Miss Phyllis Cumberland attractively costumed as a young Turkish girl. The second prize for the best comic costume went to Miss Fitzgerald who was dressed to represent a cigarette girl.

Besides these there were a host of good costumes representing nearly very nation of the world.

Music and Dance

Excelent music was supplied by Mr. Ernest Mairs.

The guests were delighted with a special dance contributed by Mr. Bartels, a professional Terpsichorean artist.

The opening Grand March was a spectacle to be remembered by those present, and beautiful foreign gowns, showed up perfectly in the lights of the pavilion. Much credit is due Mrs Lawrence Graham for making this ball the huge success it is conceded to have been.

About $65 was realized for the building of the new floor.

Guests and Costumes

Among the guests and costumes in evidence were.

Mr. Arthur Bell as mutt

Mrs. Barrie, as an Indian girl

Miss Ruth Knapman, as flag

Miss Violet Stubbs, Mickey.

Miss Rush as Canada

Miss Langley, as a Gypsy

Mr. B Jones, as a suffragette.

Miss Elener Collins, as sunflower.

Miss E Eloise, as a Red Cross Nurse

Mr Greening as a Turk,

Miss Mary Harstone as a jockey

Miss Ruth Alcorn, as a jockey lady.

Walter Kough, as a perfect lady.

John McFadden, as a perfect 46

Miss J. Nicewanger, as a Spanish boy.

Bob Nell as a clown

Mr. Edward Bartels, acompanied by Mrs. M. B. Rodney, of Rochester, N. J.

Miss Audrey Kirban, as a gypsy.

THE CARE AND UPKEEP OF YOUR CAR

There are several things carbon will do to an engine. First, it may cause a knock, if it is very heavy. Second, it causes your engine to overheat, which means loss of power. Third, it causes premature explosion That is your engine explodes at the wrong time, one cylinder works against the other, causing loss of power. Fourth, your valves, normally, rise only one-fourth inch above the surface, so if there is one-eighth inch of carbon, your exhaust escape is practically cut off. Sometimes all of the symptoms mentioned show up; at other times probably just loss of power and overheating.

There are several ways of cleaning out the carbon One way is by scraping, another, by burning, and there are so called "carbon removers." The latter are not to be recommended at all, as they act like coal oil, softening the carbon to the consistency of honey, which gets down around the rings nad solidifies, causing the rings to "freeze" solid, scoring the cylinders. Scraping is good if done thoroughly but takes too much time. Now, as to carbon burning it makes no difference how bad the engine is carboned up, as soon as the oxygen hits it it immediately turns to carbon dioxide gas and passes away, leaving the interior as clean as when new.

We burn Carbon by the Oxygen process also weld cast iron, steel, brass and aluminum parts, welding fenders frames, cylinder blocks, etc. Millard's Bicycle Shop, 225 Hunter St., Phone 2341.

RED ROSE TEA is good tea

ABOUT 170 years ago tea sold in England for $14.60 a pound. It was a luxury which only the wealthy could afford.

Thanks largely to the great increase in the area of tea plants under cultivation in India during the past fifty years, there is enough tea grown to-day to supply tea to the world at a price even the poorest can afford.

A cup of "good" tea—Red Rose Tea—costs only a fraction of a cent. There is hardly anything sold in the grocery store that gives more value or more pleasure for the money.

Consisting chiefly of ASSAM teas—the richest and strongest of Indian teas—Red Rose is exceedingly fragrant, flavory and economical. It is a tea of real quality and real value.

Sold only in sealed packages.

TELEGRAMS SAY ARCHDUKE JOSEPH IS STILL IN POWER, BUT RESIGNATION DUE

Forfeited All Confidence From Peace Council—Rumanians Still Requisitioning Goods

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Aug. 25.—Rumanian forces were still requisitioning goods at Budapest on Saturday, and paying no attention to a warning from the Supreme Council, according to advices reaching Council this morning.

Still in Power.

Telegrams received by the Supreme Council show that Archduke Joseph was still in power in Hungary on Saturday, but his resignation is expected soon.

Has He Resigned?

Budapest, Aug. 24.—A despatch under this date says Archduke Joseph and the Cabinet of Premier Friedric, have resigned as a result of the refusal of the Peace Conference to recognize them.

The Roumanian High Command today issued a note in which it declared that all its efforts for the revictualing of Budapest have failed owing to total lack of organization by the Hungarian authorities. The note says the High Command is doing its utmost to compel the authorities to do their duty.

Must Step Down.

Paris, Aug. 24.—The Supreme Council to-night sent the following note to the Hungarian Government, in which announcement was made that the Council would have no dealings with a Government headed by Archduke Joseph or any other member of the Hapsburg family:

"The allied and associated powers have been further considering information derived from our reports and from other sources, as to recent events in Budapest.

"They are most anxious to conclude a durable peace with the Hungarian people, but they feel that this cannot be done while the present Hungarian Government is in power. The Government came into existence not by the will of the people, but by a coup d'etat carried out by a small body of police under the protection of a foreign army.

Forfeited Confidence.

"It has as its head a member of the House of Hapsburg, whose policies and actions were largely responsible for the calamities under which the world is suffering, and will long suffer. A peace negotiated by such a government is not likely to be lasting; nor can the allied and associated Governments give the economic support which Hungary needs.

"The allied and associated powers would be prepared to negotiate with any Government which possessed the confidence of an Assembly so elected."

PRINCE DONS KHAKI AS TRIBUTE TO ONTARIO'S DEFENCE OF EMPIRE

Greeted With One Continuous Roar of Loyal Acclaim as He Drives Through Flag-Bedecked and Festooned, Streets of the Queen City

Toronto, Aug. 25.—His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales has become a soldier again.

He reached this city today in the uniform of a Captain of Grenadier Guards. It was the first occasion since landing on this side of the Atlantic that the future King had appeared in the military uniform in which he was best known as a real defender of the empire. It was the khaki garb in which he served side by side with Canadians on the fields of Flanders. The people of this inland capital city of the province of Ontario accepted this change from naval uniform, which the Prince wore in eastern Canadian Cities, as a graceful tribute to the services of Ontario in defending the empire on land; and the reception accorded him was therefore all the more spontaneous and enthusiastic.

Always Gracious.

Shortly after ten oclock the guns of a battery manned by veterans of the great war boomed their welcoming salute down the Don Valley. Within a minute or two after the royal train came to a standstill, at the temporary station in Rosedale, near Government House, the Prince was on the platform accepting the introductions to the fifth set of Lieutenant-Governors, Provincial Premiers and staffs he has encountered since he arrived in the Dominion less than two weeks ago. The monotony of it all might tell on some men, but His Royal Highness met them all with that same graciousness and smiling good humor which has characterized him since his arrival on the shores of North America.

After informal greetings from Sir John Hendrie, Lieut.-Governor Sir Wm. Hearst, Prime Minister of Ontario; Mr. Thomas Church, mayor of Toronto and other authorities, His Royal Highness and party proceeded to Government House, where Lady Hendrie and Miss Enid Hendrie were presented.

Real Welcome by People

The route of the Prince's progress from Government House to the Parliament Buildings, where the addresses of welcome were presented by the Province of Ontario and the city of Toronto, gave an opportunity for the indication of the real welcome by the people of the city and province, and also the route from the Parliament buildings to the exhibition grounds where he opened the Canadian National Exhibition.

Buildings, Flag-bedecked

All buildings were flag-bedecked and festooned, of course, and the streets presented great avenues of color. But the actual welcome, and the one that doubtless appealed most to the heart of the Prince was that continuous roar of loyal and hearty cheering that preceded and followed him from one end of the route to the other. It was cheering right from the hearts of all classes of citizens of the queen city to a Royal Prince who has succeeded in capturing the hearts of all kinds of subjects, wherever he has so far appeared.

Ready at all Times

An incident illustrating the democracy and princely nature of His Royal Highness occurred at 2 o'clock this morning at Smith's Falls, where the Royal Train stopped to change engines.

A great crowd clamored around the train, despite the hour and the fact that the Prince had retired. His staff, knowing that the Prince had a busy day, ahead of him in Toronto, besides, hesitated at having His Royal Highness break his rest. The Prince insisted, however, and to the great delight of Smith's Falls people, appeared on the train platform and made a short address in response to a speech of welcome.

REIGN OF TERROR AGAIN IN SILESIA

SITUATION FAR FROM SATISFACTORY AND AGGRAVATED BY GERMANS.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Aug. 25.—Germany has declined to invite Allied troops to police Silesia, before they have that right under the treaty, which stipulates that they are to safeguard the plebiscite there.

Situation is unsatisfactory and Germans are reported to be bringing about a recrudescence of the recent reign of terror in that Province.

FOR THIRD TIME IN HISTORY TORONTO THE LOYAL WELCOMES HEIR APPARENT

H. R. H. PRINCE OF WALES.

Prince of Wales Arrives at Rosedale Temporary Station at 10.15 This Morning—Guns, Manned by Veterans of Sanctuary Wood, Vimy Ridge and Cambrai, Thunder Forth Royal Salute to Princely Comrade in Great War

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, Aug. 25. The loyalty of the Province of Ontario was today pledged in an address presented to His Royal Highness by Sir Wm. Hearst, Prime Minister. The address read on this occasion was one of profound interest and enthusiasm to the people of Ontario Province, which in its short history had the opportunity of welcoming and offering respectful congratulations for a third time to heir apparent to the British throne. Ontario was founded by those who had sacrificed every material interest to preserve their rights as British subjects.

Symbol of Unity.

"The people of Ontario," went on the address, "recognize in the presence of Your Royal Highness among them at once the symbol and the seal of the unity and permanence of our great empire, which, we believe, is destined by the Providence of God, to preserve for future ages the blessings of liberty, justice and sane democracy, and of obedience to constituted authority."

Played Man's Part.

Continuing the address assured His Royal Highness that in the greeting of all governments and peoples of Canada, there was strong element of personal respect and esteem for the young Prince who had played a man's part in the great war. "It rejoices us to know," "that, in close and intimate association with military forces of Canada, nearly one-half of which came from this Province, Your Royal Highness was content to be a man among men, and to inspire these feelings of affection and admiration which augur so well for the attitude of the Canadian people toward their future sovereign."

Spirit of Loyalty.

The address, on behalf of the citizens of Toronto, was signed by Mayor Church, City Clerk Littlejohn and City Treasurer Bradshaw. It breathed a spirit of loyalty and congratulation to the British Crown, and voiced the expectation that the Prince would see prospects throughout this Dominion, that in generations to come, happy and prosperous homes would be found within its borders for millions of subjects ever true in their allegiance to the British Crown.

Patriotism Unquestioned.

In the afternoon at the grounds of the Canadian National Exhibition which the Prince duly opened, another address was presented, on behalf of the Exhibition Association, by President Thomas Russell and General Manager John G. Kent. This address, in addition to conveying feelings of loyalty and esteem for the Prince emphasized the patriotic nature of the Canadian National Exhibition, and the fact that so many men had been trained within its buildings, during four years of war, for service for the empire overseas.

Royal Party Arrives.

Toronto, August 25.—His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and party arrived at Rosedale, where the Government House is situated, at 10:15 this morning. The Prince was greeted as he blithely stepped from the Royal train by Lieutenant-Governor Sir John Hendry, the Premier of Ontario, Sir William Hearst, the Mayor of Toronto, Mr. Church, General Gunn, commanding this military district, and other authorities.

A Royal Salute.

All the streets and thoroughfares in the neighborhood of the temporary station were thronged with cheering citizens, while the battery, manned by artillery veterans of Sanctuary Wood, Vimy Ridge and Cambrai, thundered a royal salute across the Don valley.

The Prince was driven, immediately after an informal reception, to Government House. About noon the formal addresses from the Province and the city will be presented at the Provincial Parliament Buildings, and this afternoon His Royal Highness will open the Canadian National Exhibition.

REFERENDUM SOME TIME IN OCTOBER

SIR WM. HEARST DECLARES IT IMPOSSIBLE TO FIX EXACT DATE.

Brantford, Aug. 23. Sir William Hearst, speaking at a Conservative picnic in Mohawk Park this afternoon, declared it was not yet possible to fix the date for the referendum on prohibition.

He said the preparation of the voters' lists was still far from complete and the earliest date upon which the referendum would be taken was Oct. 1, but it certainly would not be later than Oct. 22.

As soon as more information had been received from different parts of the province the definite date would be announced.

The premier pointed out that the voters' lists for old as well as new Ontario had to be made up and this added to the difficulty of the situation. The government was anxious that no voters' names should be left off and for that reason very largely, it was not possible to fix the date for the referendum.

"The government," said the premier, "has put the final decision as to the future of the Ontario temperance act in the hands of the people, and they will decide it."

Sir William dealt with the great progress that the Hydro-electric undertaking has made in the province, and attacked the statements on the nickel question made by Hartley Dewart, in his speech at London, Friday night.

TRIAL OF SPEED FROM TORONTO TO NEW YORK AND RETURN AT 12.56.

FLEW FROM EXHIBITION GROUNDS

MACHINES STARTED SINGLY — SIX OF EIGHTEEN STARTERS GOT AWAY BY 1.15.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Tornto, Aug. 25. After some delay owing to a slight accident to one of the contestants, the great airplane race from Toronto to New York and return was started at 12:56 today, when Roland Rolfe, in an Oriole machine, circled over the Exhibition and started on his long flight.

Started Singly.

The machines are being started singly or in pairs, and at 1:15 six of the eighteen starters had got away.

FOOT TORN OFF BY CAR

Ghastly Injury Results When Motor-Cycle And Street Car Collide.

Toronto, Aug. 23.—After a collision between his motorcycle and a street car at College and Dufferin street this afternoon, John Leach, 2134 Dufferin street, was found to have had his left foot almost torn off at the ankle. The foot was hanging by a few shreds of skin and the man was rushed to the Western Hospital, where the skin was severed, making the amputation complete. Leach is said to be resting comfortbly at the hospital, despite his ghastly injury. He was riding south on Dufferin street on his motorcycle and collided with a west-bound College street car. Leach was thrown from his machine and in some way his foot became caught in the fender and he was dragged along the ground for some distance, until the car could be stopped. He was extricated from the fender and rushed to the hospital.

PREMIER HEARST PERSONALLY IS IN FAVOR OF ONTARIO TEMPERANCE ACT

His Goverment Created it and He Will Stand by it Until its Fate is Decided by Electors

Brantford, Aug. 25.—"The Government of which I am the head were the authors of the Ontario Temperance Act. I have stood by it from its inception and will stand by it until its fate is decided by the free vote of the electors of the province. In our country's hour of peril, when the fate of civilization hung in the balance, the O.T.A. in my humble opinion, added to the fighting strength of our province. In the days of unrest, or turmoil, and reconstruction through which we are passing, the Act, I believe, is a source of safety and strength and that its repeal or any weaking of its provisions would be unwise. What proved a source of strength in the days of war and is proving a source of safety in the days of reconstruction will, I believe, prove a boon and a blessing in the days of peace and prosperity to which we are hopefully looking."

SIR WILLIAM HEARST

Premier of Ontario who at a Conservative rally at Brantford declared his personal allegiance to the Ontario Temperance Act.

Speaking to a big audience at Mohawk Park, Brantford, Saturday Sir William Hearst in the foregoing words placed himself squarely and emphatically on record upon the temperance question. There has never been any doubt among those who know him about where the Prime Minister stands, but during the last few weeks attempts have been made to create the impression that, having placed the matter bfor the people in the referendum he would hesitate to stake his fortunes upon denfinite championship of the temperance policy.

Date of Referendum

Sir William, who was vigorously cheered when he made his declaration, coupled with it an announcement regarding the time for the holding of the referendum. It would be held, he said, not later than October 22, and certainly not early than October 1. Within a week or two, when the government was in a beter position to judge the time within which the new lists would be completed, a definite date would be set. Sir William's address to a large extent dealth with the referendum. Appreciating he fact that before the general election there will be ample time to st bfore th people the general record of the Government, the Prime Minister devoted himself to the subject that is uppermost in the minds of the electorate.

COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE NOVITIATE CHARGES ADJOURNED

TORONTO POSTIES REGISTER PROTEST

COMPLAIN THAT THEY HAVE NOT YET RECEIVED BONUS PROMISED.

WILL HOLD MEETING THURSDAY

SAY THAT EVEN IF IT IS PAID THE AMOUNT OF BONUS IS INADEQUATE.

Toronto, Aug. 25.—The alleged failure of the Government to make provision for the Re-Classification Bill in connection with the Civil Service, on the order sheet for the coming session, has again aroused a storm of wrath among local postal employees. The letter-carriers have for some time been protesting against the delay in receiving their promised bonus, apart from the general complaint that there were not sufficient to maintain a comfortable standard of living. It is also alleged by several of the men that their last pay envelopes in which the Deputy Post-Master General had promised would be placed their increased bonus were made out on the old scale.

In pointing out these matters a member of the Transfer Clerks' section of the Leter Carriers' Association mentioned bitterly the fact that while the Government could not take the trouble to attend to their needs it would be sure to make provision for increases in the Members' salaries.

A mass meeting of the Letter Carriers is scheduled to be held at the Central Y.M.C.A., College Street next Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. As has been usual with their meetings lately considerable protest is likely to occur in connection with the Government's action.

The letter carriers of Peterborough have received the bonus referred to and it is hard to understand why there has been any discrimination in this matter.

T. R. Ferguson Unable to Proceed, His Witnesses Not Appearing.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Aug. 25. After a brief sitting occupied largely in discussion of preliminaries, the royal commission to investigate charges made by Rev. Kennedy Palmer and Sir Sam Hughes relating to the Jesuit Novitiate Guelph adjourned to meet again in Ottawa, Sept. 8.

T. R. Ferguson, of Toronto, counsel for Palmer, was unable to proceed immediately with the enquiry, because witnesses he proposed to call were not present. He explained he had been given no authority to subpoena witnesses. Charges, which have to do with alleged evasion of military service act by students in the novitiate were read but not discussed.

Judge Middleton, one of the commissioners, accepted the suggestion of Mr. Ferguson that future meetings might be held in Guelph or London, but it was finally decided to meet again in Ottawa.

WARNS OF PENDING TROUBLE IN INDIA

STATE OF UNREST EXISTS DUE TO ACTIVITIES OF EXTREMISTS.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Aug. 25.—A grave warning about possibilities in India arising from activities of extremists was uttered today by Sir Harrington Verney Lovett, who has held many important positions in the Indian Government. In course of testimony before a committee of the government which is considering the India bill.

Stephen Pocock, London, was struck by a motor car and had two ribs broken while riding a bicycle near his home.

LIBERTY THRUST UPON US.

SOME PEOPLE are born free, others acquire liberty by force of arms or through the agency of the ballot, while others are made the subjects of the paternalism of "organized minorities," who would thrust so-called personal liberty upon them.

Before the Ontario Temperance Act was ever thought of there was not in Peterborough County, outside of the city itself, an open bar anywhere in existence. This was a condition which the people in the rural districts brought upon themselves, a condition they were just as competent to remedy—if remedial measures were deemed necessary—as they were to create. They appear to have lived for years well pleased with the situation. If there was any dissatisfaction it seems to have been due to the idea that their so-called "personal liberty" was not sufficiently circumscribed. They would have riveted the chains of bondage, as the "reformers" and "champions of liberty" call them, by having it made illegal for liquor dealers in the city to ship their wares into the dry rural territory. That was always a subject for agitation out in the country, and the movement was crystallized when an influential delegation waited upon the Provincial License Commissioners at their meeting in this city and asked that the law be amended so as to prevent urban-rural traffic in liquor. This was a request the commissioners had no authority to grant, but it served to show the spirit of the temperance party.

If the Ontario Temperance Act is repealed, if the sale of beer and wine, either in standard hotels or in government agencies, is permitted, the situation in Peterborough County will not be changed from what it was before the Act went into operation. The rural districts that were under local option will remain in the dry column. The personal liberty that "organized minorities" would thrust upon the country people, will have no scope outside the city limits. These self-constituted guardians of the morals and happiness of the masses are simply undertaking a task that is beyond them. The subjects of their solicitude are well able to work out their own destiny. "Liberty" forced upon a people savors of nothing quite so much as slavery.

ASKING FOR THE IMPOSSIBLE.

THE MEMBERS of the Trades Council in Montreal adopted a resolution providing that the Prince of Wales be asked to request his father, King George, when the Prince returns to England, to issue a decree of amnesty pardoning all those Canadians who are defaulters under the Military Service Act. Even if King George were so disposed, he has no authority to grant such a request, and it is just as well in the interest of public safety that this is so. The Labor men in Montreal are evidently under a misconception as to the Royal prerogatives.

The King of England is a constitutional, not an absolute, monarch. His powers are well defined by law just as are the rights of the lowliest of his subjects. He is under the same obligation to observe the laws of the land as are the people themselves. If it was part of his prerogative to nullify at will any Act of Parliament by granting a general pardon to those who violated that enactment, then government by the people would be a dream. Such action on the part of the reigning sovereign would be possible only by the advice and consent of his constitutional advisers who are the direct representatives of the people.

PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS.

THE WAR that was to purify the atmosphere of the world, that was to sweep away the last vestige of barbarism, has been fought and won, and the results dreamed of have apparently not been attained. This is especially true in Central Europe, where the conflict was waged. Peace has not really been restored there. There are still wars and rumors of wars in that section between the members of alien races. Worst of all these is still persecution of those who claim liberty of action in the matter of religion. The members of the Jewish race are still maltreated by so-called Christians, their property is confiscated, they are denied the rights of citizenship, and many of the helpless victims of racial aversion are put to death with horrible torture.

The Jews of Canada and the United States propose to raise a fund of one million dollars to help their persecuted brethren in Europe, otherwise the unfortunates will die of starvation. Here in Peterborough contributions will be solicited for this purpose. There is not the slightest justification for this warfare on members of the Jewish race. The only excuse urged is that Jews are identified with the Bolshevist movement that is sweeping over that part of the world. Than this no more outrageous slander was ever uttered against a race. Anyone who has studied conditions knows that the Jew, no matter in what country he may locate, is a peaceful and law-abiding citizen. The records show that there are fewer criminals among them than among those of any other race. This is a fact, not a mere statement of opinion. If all the people in the civilized world conducted themselves as do the Jews, there would be few police officers and penal institutions required.

The Jews were the faithful allies of the Entente Powers all through the war. They have by every international law, by every code of honor and justice, the same right to protection now as that which is accorded any other race that fought devotedly for human freedom. It is unthinkable that their former comrades in arms should now raise their hands against them. The League of Nations has been organized to protect the weak from the strong. An excellent opportunity for the exercise of that function appears to have already arisen, and the League can establish popular confidence in its organization by taking prompt action in this matter. Why make the world safe for democracy at the awful cost of four years of war if human life itself is not assured safety from violent death and unwarranted persecution?

GOOD FOR THE ALDERMEN.

THE ALDERMEN have made it possible for the Boy Scouts of this city to visit the Toronto Fair and to meet the Prince of Wales, their future ruler. This visit will be of vast benefit to all parties concerned. It will be good for the boys themselves, good for the city as a public demonstration of the high standard of its youth. It cannot fail to impress the Prince of Wales and to lead him to form, if possible, a higher estimate than ever of the potentialities of the rising generation who a few years hence will be his co-workers in the matter of making the British Empire stronger and better than ever.

Peterborough sent to the war young men whose military records were in every sense up to the standard. Behind these young heroes are the members of another generation, equally worthy, ready if occasion arises to take part in a task as arduous as that from participation in which they were prevented by lack of years alone. These are the Boy Scouts of Peterborough, the sturdy little fellows whose appearance before Royalty at Toronto Fair will be a credit to the city in which they have been raised and trained. Good for the Boy Scouts and for the aldermen who have sent them abroad. sible.

THE PROPHECY THAT FAILED.

> "There will be no Great Britain at the end of the war. In its place we shall have Little Britain peopled by loutish football-kickers living on the crumbs that Germany will deign to throw to them. The laughable and childish military system of Britain will fall to pieces. Then the once mighty empire, with her naval strength represented by the few old tubs which Germany will have left her, will become the laughing-stock of the nations, the scarecrow at which children will point their fingers in disdainful glee."—Koelnische Zeitung, September, 1914

THE ABOVE is a specimen of the gospel of hate that was preached to the German people as an inspiration for co-operating in a strife, not a war of self-defence, but an unholy conflict for the extermination of a business and military rival. The war is over and the German prophet has been discredited. The tables have been turned on that nation. Every disaster predicted for the British Empire has befallen the confederation of Teutonic states.

Britain as an empire emerges from the war of four years stronger than ever. Every dominion is more closely knit to the Motherland. The military system of which Germany affects to make sport has been vindicated. Britain's naval strength, her supremacy on the sea, one of the leading factors in the winning of the war, is now undisputed.

Setting a trap for Britain, Germany herself was caught in it. The once mighty empire is dismembered. The dynasty has been overthrown. The kaiser and the heir to the throne are exiles hiding in Holland from the righteous indignation of their own dupes, their former subjects, as much as from the outraged justice of their victors. The government has become a mobarchy. The scarecrow of shattered greatness is something at which the children of civilization point their fingers, not in "disdainful glee" but more in pity than in resentment. Germany's overthrow is complete. The pit that she dug for Britain she has fallen into herself.

Same Trouble The Wide World Over

(New York Commercial.)

William C. Edgar, editor of the Northwestern Miller, has written an article for that journal designed to set at rest some of the agitation for a reduction in the price of flour while the price of wheat remains fixed. "The price of flour, with wheat at two dollars and twenty-six cents a bushel," says Mr. Edgar, "could easily have been figured out by any school boy who had mastered the multiplication table when the wheat guarantee bill was passed. Assuredly, any Washington official who cared to take his pencil in hand might have accomplished the same simple task. It was no mystery, yet after passing the bill fixing the price, and proving by another act for administering its provisions, Washington authorities suddenly awakened to the fact that the price of a barrel of flour is monstrously high and proposed to make somebody suffer to it."

Salaried men not belonging to unions and unable to strike for increased wages—professors, clergymen and clerks, men and women of fixed and limited incomes—all such realized what would be the price of flour, but when the wheat guarantee bill was being considered they were ignored. The farmer must be encouraged to raise a great crop of wheat, and money was the only inducement that would reach him.

When the representatives of powerful railway unions protested against the high cost of living and demanded that, having themselves received the maximum pay they could expect, it should be lowered, it was an entirely different matter. Something must be done about it immediately and therefore Washington is aroused and ready to take drastic action.

The first thing to do is to find a scapegoat, and flour, being pre-eminent among the daily needs, although infinitesimal in the sum of an individual's annual expenditure, one barrel sufficing to supply him for an entire year, which even at present prices represents the magnificent outlay of less than 4c a day, is selected for the sacrifice.

The farmer, who receives $2.26 for a bushel of wheat, is of course ignored. No one in Washington would dare accuse him of profiteering, but the miller and the baker are not exempt and upon them must fall the brunt of the first savage onslaught.

Mr. Edgar gives in detail the cost of a barrel of flour laid down in New York on the basis of two dollars and twenty-six cents for the wheat in Minneapolis. On the basis of four and a half bushels of wheat to the barrel, the cost of the wheat is ten dollars and seventeen cents, to which is added a dollar and twenty cents for manufacturing and selling cost, and from which is subtracted a dollar and seventy-five cents for the food produced from the wheat, making the net cost of a barrel of flour in bulk at the mill nine dollars and sixty-two cents. To this is added sixty cents for the cost of packing, sixty-nine cents for freight to New York, seventy-five cents as the jobbers' margin for handling and a dollar and twenty-five cents as the retailer's charge for selling and delivery, making a total of twelve dollars and ninety-one cents as the cost of the consumer. Out of this the farmer receives nine dollars, estimating that he is paid two dollars on the farm, of which anywhere from three dollars to four dollars is profit, according to estimates of those who claim to know, although Mr. Edgar does not cover this point. He adds, however, that "in the face of this it is proposed that the Government buy flour from millers at eight dollars a barrel, which it is alleged will give them a fair profit, then to deduct two dollars and set it to the consumer at six dollars a barrel. Cheap flour from dear wheat can only be accomplished by a miracle; "and," says Mr. Edgar, "Congress lacks the divinity that makes miracles possible."

SNAKES AND ANIMALS KILL 23,000 YEARLY IN INDIA.

London, Aug. 25.—In the past year 23,000 people were killed in India by snakes and wild animals, according to mortuary statistics recently made public here by the Home Office. Snakes were responsible for the death of more than half of the victims, according to the report. Most of the casualties were, of course, in the rural districts, but more than a thousand deaths from snake bites were recorded in the cities.

The deaths from wild animals are higher than they have been for many years and are attributed to the fact that the animals become more numerous and bolder during the war period when there was very little hunting.

EDITOR'S MAIL

Editor Review: I consider the thanks of the prohibition party are due to the press for the space given Mr. J. H. Burnham for his letters in opposition to them, for there is certainly nothing we could say in favor of prohibition that would do more to convince people of its reasonableness and rightness than the paucity of arguments advanced against it.

Mr. Burnham has declared war to the utmost of his power against prohibition. The convincing power of Mr. Burnham's letters are of such a nature that I am glad he is not fighting on our side for such help is a source of weakness. For a lawyer, Mr. Burnham's letters reveal a most lamentable ignorance of the workings of law. "God prohibits nothing," he says and again "why did not God prohibit the means of evil in the Garden of Eden." All law of a negatory or prohibitory nature seeks to prevent by the fear of penalty and the passing of such a law presupposes the evil to exist, that is to be prohibited, else how can a thing be prohibited that has no existence. When God created the world and the Garden of Eden He pronounced it good and, as far as I can learn, there was no whiskey in it. Therefore, God did not prohibit whiskey, but the fruit of the tree in the midst of the garden was forbidden or prohibited and the penalty for the infraction of God's law He declared to be death.

Then again, nine of the ten commandments are of a prohibitory nature. "Thou shalt not" is surely the strongest prohibitory phrase God could use. If thise is not prohibition what is it?

The O.T.A. has proven itself to be one of the best measures ever brought into force in the province, and, so far from it being a curtailment of liberty as its enemies declare, the fact is 1200 less people were arrested in a year in Peterborough than were under license. In Ottawa they were able to reduce the police force, so great was its effect. A curious result from a tyranical law. As for the personal liberty cry this is only a red herring that is being dragged across the path to confuse the issue. Personal individual liberty is impossible in a community as each man's liberty is necessarily limited by the rights of others and the denser the population the more restricted is that liberty. This is an age of democracy and its ideal is the greatest good for the greatest number. The liberty that the liquor men want is the liberty to make easy money out of the misery and poverty of countless women and children, the liberty to get hold of the working man's payroll and send him home drunk, the liberty to bring back into our midst the blacklister and the ne'erdo well to refill our jails and asylums and to increase our risks of accidents, in fact to reintroduce and perpetuate the evils we have so happily got rid of.

Let us have a clean, sober, industrious country with its people living in comfort and peace and, in my opinion for this end, whiskey is not necessary.

TO COMBAT HIGH COST OF LIVING

KANSAS CITY INAUGURATES A NOVEL POST OFFICE DELIVERY PLAN.

Kansas City, Aug. 24.—As a means of helping to combat the high cost of living, Kansas City has organized a novel plan, which started this week. All the Government surplus foodstuffs will be distributed by the mail carriers at a price which is lower than that at which the goods could be bought at grocery stores.

The mail carriers are supplied with order blanks which will be distributed to housekeepers along their routes. The housekeeper fills out the order blank with a list of the groceries she needs, and the quantity she wishes. The mail carrier takes these to the postoffice and a general requisition is sent to the zone surplus foodstuff officer at St. Louis. The requisition will be filled and the food sent to the Kansas City postoffice to be distributed to those who have given orders. It is hoped that there will not be any undue delay in getting the requisition orders filled at St. Louis and delivered in Kansas City.

All the food is canned, and some of the prices are as follows:

A can of corned beef is 32c; baked beans are 7c; cherries, 27c; peas 14c; vegetable soup, 10c; a six-pound can of roast beef costs $2.05. The cost of the postage is included in all prices given.

THE MERCHANTS' COLUMN

Edited by
MANSFIELD F. HOUSE
(Copyright.)

(In this column, which appears every Monday, Wednesday and Saturday, will appear news and short articles of special interest to merchants, their salespeople and business men and women in general. All phases of store management—buying, accounting, advertising and retail salesmanship—will be dealt with, not theoretically, but by descriptions of methods actually in use by successful merchants.)

DRUG STORE FINDS IT PAYS TO HANDLE DRUGS

With other drug stores featuring and advertising everything but drugs and prescriptions, the Newman Drug Company, of Louisville, Ky., has built heavy sales by concentrating on this almost submerged end of the druggist's business.

The Newman policy, however, is not to be confounded with that of those stores which are to be found scattered here and there in various cities adhering to the old conception of the apothecary's ethics and refusing to do a general business in the modern way. The Newman store has not "played down" its other departments in its specialization. It has, rather, aided them by leaving them the full sweep of the store proper and removing the prescription department to an upper floor.

There it has its special equipment and its staff of expert chemists and pharmacists, who are not bothered by the general activities of the store down stairs.

[illegible] the first mailing [illegible]

It believed that [illegible] people could be found [illegible] particular [illegible] cines to [illegible] special service and it believed that inasmuch as other stores were not following this plan, it had a distinction which would make it splendid advertising material with which to differentiate the Newman store, give it an unusual reputation and eventually draw bigger business for all departments.

Two large rooms were rented on the floor above the store. These were equipped with the very finest apparatus that could be found. They were finished in white enamel, cases, ceiling and walls. All the work tables were of white Belgian glass and special ointment and refrigerator cases were provided.

The whole was placed in charge of an expert chemist, who was given a staff of the best pharmacists, efforts being made to get the honest men in their classes. Finally, the stock of drugs was of the highest quality obtainable.

Physicians Invited.

The first step in the advertising campaign was to get every physician in the city to inspect the department, which, owing to the novelty of the venture, was not hard to do. Customers also were invited to visit it.

An illustrated booklet describing the department and its methods, was distributed among physicians, and smaller copies were wrapped with every package sent out.

Main reliance, however, was placed in a steady newspaper advertising campaign.

Space was contracted for at the top of the society page on the theory that women generally buy the household medicines. Following are typical examples of the advertising copy:

"[illegible] with your [illegible]"

"Newman's white enameled prescription department is as spotless and sanitary as a hospital operating room."

"We fully realize that every minute counts in time of sickness—that's why we use motorcycle delivery."

"Instant dismissal is the penalty for substitution by any of our clerks—every man in our employ understands this thoroughly."

"All pills, capsules, powders and suppositories are dispensed in [illegible] boxes, thus preventing the [illegible] of covers, which lessens the liability of a serious error."

Of course the returns from this copy were not immediate. They never are from good will, permanent business-building ads of this type. But then the Newman Drug Company didn't expect big crowds as a result of two or three ads. They knew their's was an educational problem and that education takes time.

But it wasn't long before tangible results began to show. Pretty soon prescriptions were coming in from all parts of the city. A steady, consistent use of newspaper copy resulted in a steady increase of business, until now they have one of the most lucrative drug businesses in the country.

A NEW WAY OF SAYING "THEY'RE COOL"

The advertising manager of Albert Elkus, dealer in clothing for men in Sacramento, Calif., decided that he would not use the old, time-worn phrases in his advertising to express the degrees of coolness that could be attained in an Elkus suit, so he used the following full-of-meaning phrase in newspaper and poster advertising.

As cool as the waiter you forgot to tip last time—
Our Palm Beach suits. See Albert
Elkus.

BUILT HIS BUSINESS ON A QUESTION MARK

This way, Mr. Diogenes, please! Here is an honest man.

Every one in Round Up, Montana and about every one in the state knows of him, even if they do not know his first or second name. For Mr. H. L. Allen grew into popularity on a question mark.

He came into Round Up some years ago, a stranger and a transient. He intended to stay just long enough to clean out some garments that had worried his partner and himself in their Butte store.

One day he heard some man ask another on the street, "Who's this Allen, anyway?" For he had been using newspaper space in a way to make them think about him. "There must be a lot of others with the same question," thought Allen. So right away he took the words from their lips and signed his advertisements "Who's Allen." Then people made it a point to find out. Soon he had to get more merchandise to sell at regular prices and to pay room rent by the month instead of the day.

Finally, in November, 1918, he took over his partner's interest in the Round Up store and sold his interest in the Butte store. He has received mail addressed to "Who's Allen, Montana"—quite often as the result of a wager between a man who knows his reputation and one who is soon to learn its extent.

Won't Crib an Ad.

"I do lots of advertising," says Allen, "and never copy an advertisement. I'm honest, and crazy enough to admit." If a garment is two-thirds cotton, that's just what he calls it.

It seems to please the patrons to know the worst about the goods.

"The people believe what I tell them and I can't blame them for it," he said. Evidence that truth pays is in the fact that although there have been three successive crop failures in the section Allen's sale have shown a gain each successive year. He will not try to "push" shoddy stickers. Recently he gave away to charity a lot of a certain line that did not measure up.

"Never handle cheap stuff. Only nationally advertised goods where I can. I am Allen himself, whether it be behind the counter or in the newspaper advertisement; for I write as I talk. Never think of taking my pipe out of my mouth when waiting on a woman. I'm home folks to them all—city or country. And they like it. I say just what I think in my advertisements or over the counter about non-partisan league, religion, socialism, just as I do about my merchandise. Sure, I lose some trade by it—but to he— with trade if it interferes with my free expression. That's my ticket. Don't even do the lodge stunt to get trade; but I do belong to nine of them. Don't wish people to feel that I use them to get trade. I graduated from the coal and quartz mines, never had any business experience, can't even keep books now. Am on the side of the masses against the classes, and am making a success of this store."

"DON'T" AND "MUST NOT" TWINS ARE BARRED HERE

According to S. J. Bloomingdale, of Bloomingdale Brothers, New York, "don't" and "must not" should have no place in a store creed. Mr. Bloomingdale has therefore developed a creed of his own, in which each salesperson is schooled until letter-perfect.

The title of this creed is "The Way to Succeed," and runs as follows:

"Keep this Fact in mind. Your Position and the very existence of this business both depend on Customers. The Real Boss in every Store is the Customer.

"Each Customer who makes a purchase from you helps toward your advancement. Show your Appreciation by your manner.

"Be on the Alert and don't make it necessary for a Customer to Ask you to Wait on her. Say politely: 'Madam, May I Wait on You?'

"The salesclerk who Waits on a Customer with interested attention will soon have the pleasure of seeing that Customer Wait for Her, should she happen to be busy.

"Discover and remember each Customer's individual taste and you will be able to give her Quicker and Better Service. Always introduce and display your New goods; this will please the Customer and help you sales.

"The Customer is entitled to Know what she is buying and You Must Be Able to Tell Her. This means that you should know the goods you sell and where to find them quickly. Study your stock Constantly.

"Serve each Customer so promptly, pleasantly and politely that she will come back again and again and recommend us to all her friends."

USED A WRONG LETTER

HOW CLEVER GERMAN RAIDER BETRAYED HIMSELF.

One Romantic Tale of the Great War Has Just Been Made Known Concerning Capture of Hun Mine-layer In the Gulf of Aden—Events Took Place Over Two Years Ago, But Are Only Now Made Public.

No more serious error than the use of a "t" when a "d" was required, a slip immediately corrected, led to the capture by a British warship of a most dangerous German mine-layer in the Gulf of Aden. The capture took place two years ago, but it is only recently that the story has been made public by one of the officers who figured in it. Even now, oddly enough, the name of the British ship is suppressed in the account that appears in the London Times, but whether this is the result of the censorship or naval etiquette we are unable to say. The adventure began one beautiful night about 10 o'clock, when the look-out reported a steamer without lights on the starboard bow. At that time the raider Wolf was at large, and it was a common enough thing for British merchantmen and tramps to sneak through the night without showing a light. It was supposed that this darkened ship was British, since no Germans were known to be in the neighborhood. She was tearing along at full speed some three or four miles away when she was hailed.

"What ship is that?" asked the signalman, and had to repeat the question before the answer came.

"Toritella."

"What nationality?"

"British."

"What are your signal letters?"

"J. F. K. L."

Lloyd's register was consulted without success. The boat was not listed, and the captain thinking a mistake had been made ordered the signalman to get the name again. This time the stranger was voluble. He reported "Turritella, London. Runs for British Admiralty. Port Said for orders." This answer was cogitated. The fact that the name was spelt differently on two occasions was curious, but it might have been a signalman's mistake. More curious was the phrase "British Admiralty." It seemed to the captain of the warship that an English skipper would have said "Under Admiralty orders," and would have considered it superfluous to use the word British.

But just at a time when suspicions were aroused the strange ship played a card well calculated to allay them, for he asked "Why did you not stop me when I was passing Aden?" This is exactly the question that a cautious British ship, fearing it had to do with the Wolf, would be expected to ask. It was an intimation that if the warship were indeed British it ought to have questioned the other vessel when they were together in Aden, where the batteries on shore would give him protection. But on the other hand "Aden" had first been spelled with a "t" instead of the more conventional "d," a mistake than an English-speaking signalman would hardly be expected to make though not unnatural in a German. In the meantime, the two vessels were tearing along at their best speed, and it was plain that the warship could not catch the other. Had he been able to do so it would have been a simple matter to continue the chase until the captain was satisfied that the stranger was British as represented. As matters stood the only way to stop the fugitive was to fire on him, and the question was would this course be justified?

Below the officers discussed the matter. Did the stranger continue his flight because he thought the pursuer a German ship? It seemed not unlikely. On the other hand, would a British captain expect to be chased for two hours by a German raider and not fired at? This was the thought that decided the captain. He ordered his signalman to warn the other ship to heave to or he would fire. The answer came promptly, "I am stopping now." He was then ordered to display his navigation lights and remain where he was until morning when he would be boarded. When the distance between the two vessels had been reduced to about a mile, the warship turned her searchlight on the other, and on the stern was revealed the name, "Turritella, London." The captain again changed his mind and thought he had been fooled, especially when there came the angry protest from the stranger through a megaphone, "Turn off your damned searchlight," which seemed very English and seafaring. The light was turned off, and the ships lay where they were until daylight began to glow across the sea. The watchers on board the warship could then discern small boats leaving the other vessel, and hear a babel of strange voices. The British vessel moved closer, and as she did so a cloud of smoke shot up from the stranger, to be followed by a heavy explosion.

There was another explosion and the Turritella began to sink. The warship picked up the small boats, which were found loaded with Chinese and a handful of German officers in uniform. They were made prisoner, and the story of the mysterious vessel was then told. The Turritella was a German ship and had been captured early in the war. With British officers and a Chinese crew she set out from Colombo in February, 1917, and walked right into the jaws of the Wolf. The Germans retained her Chinese crew and put German officers aboard, some of whom could speak English almost perfectly. The Turritella was loaded with a tremendous cargo of mines and bombs which she was prepared to spread about the Red Sea, and later on was to meet the Wolf at a point agreed upon. When she was taken the second time, it was not known that she had passed into German hands, and thus could approach a British port in safety, especially with her English-speaking Germans wearing British uniforms and carrying British papers. The scheme was a pretty one, and reflected much credit on the German officer, who had spent eight years in the English merchant service, but was ruined because his signalman made a blunder in the spelling of Aden.

VERSAILLES.

Historic Scenes Witnessed by Ancient French City.

If one were to compile a list of the seven historic spots of the world, as a companion set to the seven wonders, the Palace of Versailles, where the German delegates signed the peace treaty, would be among them. There Great Britain first recognized the independence of the United States; there the Third Estate formed a National Assembly and gave birth to the French Revolution; there William I was crowned Emperor of Germany while Paris was being besieged, and there representatives of the civilized world not only made peace with 'the madman of Europe,' but signed a document that may rank in history with the Magna Charta.

Nor is this mammoth palace, which once could house a city of 10,000 persons, merely a historic shrine of epochal ceremonies. It vibrates with echoes of human dramas more vivid and enthralling than any stage piece Moliere showed there to distract the blase Louis XIV and his dazzling court.

There the unhappy Valliere, the vain-glorious Montespan, and the austere Maintenon successively loved, infatuated, and exploited the fat and magnificent Louis; there, too, brilliant Pompadour and the seductive Du Barry shone among the galaxy of mistresses; and there some 10,000 drunken women from Paris broke through the gates and sent Louis fleeing to the Tuilleries.

Mere chance set Versailles on a historic eminence. Nature provided only a flat, sandy stretch of country, so arid that the kings never could get water enough for the magnificent fountains. Louis XIII chanced to have a hunting chateau there. So the next Louis was attracted there. He planned his residence on so grandiose a scale that the leveling of the land, building of a road to Paris and construction of an aqueduct engaged 30,000 men for many years.

It was the same galaxy of mirrors, literally the "galerie des glaces," where the first William realized his ambition to rule all Germany, that the erstwhile subjects of the second William paid the penalty for his mania to rule the world.

What scenes those mirrors have reflected! They saw the Louis who proclaimed himself "the State," with his diamond embroidered coat and red-heeled slippers, four inches high; his bloated, milk-fed successor, whose most arduous exercise was frying pancakes for his mistress' breakfast; the irresolute Louis XVI, predestined to disaster, and the tragic figure of Marie Antoinette, she who could bow to ten persons with one movement, giving, with her head and eyes, the recognition due to each one, finally bowing to the headman's blade.

The gallery of mirrors gets its name from seventeen beveled mirrors, more precious than rubies before glass making was reduced to a science. Opposite each mirror is a window; and these windows overlook the famous gardens, scene of royal revelries and regal pomp, where all the sculptors of standing in France were commandeered for innumerable pieces, where the piped waters spout from mouths of gilded frogs and lizards, while fauns play flutes and dragons kidnap cupids, and where the stately old trees give one touch of nature against this supremely artificial setting.

The mirrors do not exhaust the magnificence of the spacious gallery. They are framed in works of art and surmounted by paintings. One series depicts, in flamboyant scenes the career of Louis XIV. Tables and chairs in this hall were of solid silver. The ensemble was typical of the ostentation and the emptiness of the yoke from which France freed herself.

THE DELARA'S PLAY EXCELLENT TENNIS

ONLY DEFEATED BY PETERBOROUGH AFTER HARD FOUGHT GAME.

The village of Delora demonstrated that baseball was not the only game they can play well, when their tennis representatives were defeated by the Peterborough Golf Club, only after a hard fought and close contest. The final score stood 6-2 in favor of the Golf Club, but the play was actually closer than the score would seem to indicate. Both teams are looking forward to the return game scheduled for Sept. 18 at Delora. The detail scores follows:

G. R. Langley (Golf) won from Niles (Delora) 6-0, 6-1.

G. A. McDonald (Golf) won from Smith (Delora) 3-6, 8-6, 6-2.

T. Cuffer (Delora) won from Bowness (Golf, 6-2, 6-0.

Weber and McDonald (Golf) won from Smith and Niles (Delora) 6-1, 6-3.

Bradburn and Bowness (Golf) won from Puffer and Webster (Delora) 6-3, 6-4.

APPALING RECORD OF BOLSHEVISTS PRESENT DAY MENACE TO WORLD

War Would Have Been Won a Year Earlier But For Russian Bolsheviki.

A collection of available evidence bearing on Bolshevist rule in Russia is summed up by Gustave Franez in the Montreal Labor World as follows:

The Kerensky Government would have reorganized Russia, and continued to help against Germany if it had not been for the Bolsheviki.

If Russia had not failed in her obligations to her allies the war would have been won a year sooner, saving hundreds of thousands of lives.

The Bolsheviki maintain themselves by terror—they have to kill people to last.

They have murdered and looted beyond all calculations.

They have suppressed free speech, and press and personal liberty.

They have held no honest elections, and do not permit local control of the local Soviets.

They have published decrees nationalizing women and if these have not been enforced, as they say, they have, nevertheless, enforced laws on marriage and divorce which are below barbaric standards.

Industry is utterly paralyzed. The country is dying of starvation.

They are guilty of the basest treachery to the Czecho-Slovaks, at German command.

After ruining her army, they introduced conscription, not to fight the Germans, but her own people.

They have made money so valueless that food can only be got by bartering clothes. When the clothes were gone the Russian poor had to starve.

They have executed thousands (Gorky says 10,000) without any form of trial, death warrants signed by Peters, an anarchist known to the London police.

They have shot many Socialists whose only crime was denouncing Bolshevik excesses.

They refused to hold elections. They suppressed newspapers that criticized their actions.

They re-established the secret police, with an innumerable host of informers.

They abolished religion, religious services, marriage rite, if performed being dissolved at the will of the man.

They abolished all law, except such as is contained in the decess of the Soviets.

Toronto Mayor To Call A Special Committee For Action.

Toronto, Aug. 25.—In accordance with the instructions issued by Mayor Church, Alderman Nesbitt stated today that he is calling a special committee meeting next Tuesday week for purpose of taking up the question of the rent profiteers. The meeting was called for this week but it is understood it has been altered on account of some special information which the Mayor will have by the following week.

BASEBALL FOR FRIDAY

Announcement Made At Saturday's Game That Buffalo Prospects Would Be Here.

Between innings at the baseball game Saturday the representatives of the Buffalo Prospect baseball club made the announcement that that club would play the locals Friday evening at 6.15 o'clock. This club has a long list of victories behind it but Jake Soloman and crew are eager for a chance to wipe out the effects of their trouncing Saturday. They are not discouraged but just more determined to win. If this game is played a large crowd will show their support of the local team and be on hand.

HAVE NEW METHOD OF TESTING MOTOR CARS

WILLYS-OVERLAND MAKES TRIP ACROSS CONTINENT TO DEMONSTRATE DEPENDABILITY.

Willys-Overland, Limited, of Toronto, has this season introduced new methods for testing automobiles which are a direct development of war experience.

Realizing that the modern motor car must successfully meet the most extreme riding conditions, the Willys-Overland Company planned and carried out the idea of subjecting the new light-weight car the company has been developing for two years, and which it is understood will soon be on the market, to tests which would parallel the rough-and-ready use motor cars in the war zone daily received.

For these tests unusual "breaking machines" have been rigged up and used in the factory, and the cars have then been sent into rough, untravelled country for most gruelling road performance.

In the preliminary tests, the new Overland car showed stamina and riding qualities so remarkable that the car was selected as the official scout car in the first trans-continental test trip of the United States Motor Transport Corps, which started at Washington, D.C., on July 7th and is expected to arrive about September 7th in San Francisco. The route being followed by the Motor Transport Corps is that of the Lincoln Highway.

This trans-continental trip has been undertaken to establish and demonstrate the possibilities of the motor vehicle as a factor in coast-to-coast transportation. It is to serve as a supreme test of the utility and dependability of the modern motor vehicle.

With the army trucks participating in this convoy are three of the new light Overland cars, which will be put on the market this season by the Willys-Overland Company. The cars on this tour, according to report, are making a record for comfortable riding qualities, roadability, and all-around utility.

BOY SCOUT DELEGATION TO LEAVE WEDNESDAY FOR EX.

Date Unexpectedly Changed From Monday—Scouts To Parade Tuesday Night At 8 O'clock.

"Royal Review postponed until Wednesday, August 27. Govern ourselves accordingly as to arrangements for reaching Toronto. Do not come until that note."

This is the advice received by the Boy Scouts yesterday by telephone at noon and later by the above telegram.

The following instructions are for the boy scouts who are going to the Exhibition to be reviewed by His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales. They will receive their railway ticket Thursday evening between six and eight o'clock at the Trinity Church Sunday school Hall, Charlotte St. At 8 p.m. all those going to Toronto will parade at the same place and march down Charlotte to Park up Park to Hunter, thence east to Water up Water to Murray and over to the Armouries. The object of this parade is to give the people a chance to see the splendid showing the scouts will make in Toronto and show them that their $200 was well spent in sending such a splendid delegation to represent Peterborough at the Great National Exhibition. Those going to Toronto must be dressed in full uniform with official crest badge, staff and shoulder knot.

On Wednesday they will assemble at the C. P. R. station at 6 a.m. for roll call. The train will leave for Toronto at 6.21 a.m. and on arrival in Toronto the boys will be taken to the Exhibition grounds by street cars. They will return to the same station at 9.30 p.m. arriving home about midnight. Cars will be waiting to take the boys to their homes on their arrival.

The Peterborough Auto Association had promised to supply cars to meet the boys Monday night and, the Boy Scout council hope their generous offer will be extended to Wednesday on account of the unexpected change in date.

HILLCRESTS WIN FROM LOCALS BY SCORE OF 15--8

PETES BADLY BEATEN IN CONTEST SATURDAY—BLEW UP IN SIXTH INNING.

The locals were defeated here Saturday afternoon by Hillcrests of Toronto in a closely played baseball game by the score of 18 to 5. The early innings of the game were exciting and exhibited a good brand of baseball for both teams. After the fourth and fifth innings, however, when the locals "blew" the game was rather listless and devoid of interest.

The locals proved one thing that there is very little wrong with their hitting notching 13 safeties off the famous "Babe" Dye. The Petes were hitting his offerings hard and often but with poor base running and a failure to hit in the pinches most of the hits were wasted. Cherett as lead-off man had a big day with the bat, getting 4 hits out of 5 times up. It is peculiar to notice that Walter Jackson, hitting in the clean-up position, was the only Peterborough player to fail to get a hit. This is very unusual for him, because he has been hitting often and consistently all season in both the City League and the Central Ontario League.

"Babe" Dye impressed the Peterborough fans, as he has impressed those of every place where he has played, as a slugger, getting a three-bagger, a double and a single in five trips to the plate, hitting in a total of five runs and scoring three times himself. This is giving a good account of himself for a pitcher.

The game started off fast and snappy, the first nine men facing Kirn being outs in the first three innings while the local boys had secured a lead of four runs in the first inning. This part of the game brought cheer to the hearts of the crowd, but when the Hillcrests scored three in the fourth, one in the fifth and nine in the sixth it took the heart out of everyone. Kirn started out pitching good consistent ball, but developed a wild streak, which helped along by some costly errors and timely hitting by Hillcrests spelt disaster for the local boys. Lornie Rose took up the pitching duties in the seventh with two runs across, one man out, and two on bases. He quickly disposed of Murphy and Warrinder by the strike-out route. He pitched the eighth and ninth and for that brief space, held the visitors at his mercy, allowing only one scratch hit by Dye. If he can get his arm loosened up, as it appears to be sore, he will be of great value to the team in any future games the Petes might play in.

Although the Hillcrests won by such a margin their exhibition of baseball did not impress the local crowd as favorably as that put up by the Moose team of Toronto on their visit here. The locals tried hard, but for one of those mysterious reasons which will upset all baseball "dope" they fell to pieces Saturday. It was not that they didn't have the goods to defeat the Toronto bunch, but by some accident they faltered in the sixth and before they could get themselves together again the game was lost.

One of the amusing things of the game was Dye's protest of Johnston's decision on second when he called Cherett safe even after he has been pushed off the bag. Dye protested vigorously and for a time refused to continue the game to the great amusement of the crowd. As the Hillcrests had just nine men in uniform it was impossible for the umpire to banish him. Such vigorous protests are rare here even Jake Solomon never going that far, but it was stated they are frequent in the big leagues. "Babe" was just giving the local fan an exhibition of one phase of big league stuff.

VISITOR WRITES RE NEED OF STREET NAMES IN THIS CITY

Compliments Mayor on Condition of Streets, But Points Out Need of Street Names in Conspicuous Places.

The following letter has been received by Mayor Duncan from a former resident of this city:

Peterborough, Aug. 16, 1919.
To the Mayor, Peterborough:

"On the eve of my departure to Pennsylvania by motor allow me to congratulate you on the improved condition of your city streets during the past five years. The roads leading to and from Peterborough are also changed a little (for the better). A big change is probable soon in these roads when the good roads movement gets properly going.

"However, my object in writing is to draw your attention to the complete lack of street names at the street intersections. You and your council may not notice it particularly, and think it a matter of no great importance, but to new-comers to the city and strangers visiting it, it is vital.

"I made some inquiries and was told that the matter had been called to the attention of the council frequently, but nothing was done. A druggist, of whom I inquired where Hunter street was, told me that an appropriation had been set aside for street names at the beginning of the year, but nothing had resulted.

"Mr. Mayor, this is a matter of real importance. It would cost but little, and its benefits are many. It's hardly the right thing to ask a stranger to get out of his car, go to the sidewalk to see what street he is on. If the Motor League signs are needed in the country, street signs are more necessary in your city.

"Yours truly,
"CHAS. W. WINSLOW."

TURN HAIR DARK WITH SAGE TEA

If Mixed With Sulphur It Darkens So Naturally Nobody Can Tell

The old-time mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur for darkening gray streaked and faded hair is grandmother's recipe, and folks are again using it to keep their hair a good-even color, which is quite sensible, as we are living in an age when a youthful appearance is of the greatest advantage.

Nowadays, though, we don't have the troublesome task of gathering the sage and the mussy mixing at home. All drug stores sell the ready-to-use product, improved by the addition of other ingredients, called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound. It is very popular because nobody can discover it has been applied. Simply moisten your comb or a soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also produces that soft lustre and appearance of abundance which is so attractive.

MOVING TO LINDSAY

Wm. Stevens Leaves Many Friends In This City—Faithful Worker In George Street Church.

Many friends will regret the departure of Mr. Wm. Stevens for Lindsay, today. Mr. Stevens has been for several years back a faithful worker in the George Street Methodist Church. He was one of the leaders of the Excelsior Young Men's Club of that church and his constant cheerfulness and earnestness were thoroughly appreciated by all members. He was presented with a signet ring by the members of his club at a supper given in his honor Saturday night. His friends feel that his departure is Peterbrough's and Lindsay's gain.

JUDGE STEWART VIES WITH SOLOMON

UNIQUE METHOD OF SETTLING DISPUTES BETWEEN COLORED NEIGHBORS.

Chicago, Aug. 25.—Solomon was the wise man when it came to deciding which of two women was the mother of a child, but even he might have been puzzled today to decide which of two colored women should move after it was found that they could not inhabit the same building peaceably. Judge Hugh R. Stewart in the South Clark street court did it, however. Here's how:

On several recent occasions either Mrs. Bessie Craft or Mrs. Helen Peyton has hauled the other into court on charges of disorderly conduct. They lived in an apartment building at 3814 South State street.

Today it was Mrs. Peyton's turn. She told the judge that Mrs. Craft was circulating "deflamatory rumors" about her in the neighborhood.

"One of you has to move," Judge Stewart decreed. "Who wants to?"

Mrs. Peyton said she didn't. So did Mrs. Craft.

"Here I have two stripes of paper, one short and the other long," said the judge. "The one who draws the short one moves."

Mrs. Peyton grabbed at the long slip, but missed it somehow and got the short one.

"Also sign a peace bond," said the judge, and the affair is over for the present at least.

THEATRICAL

MADGE KENNEDY FINDS FARM IDEAL SPOT FOR "DAY DREAMS"

Piquant Goldwyn Star Mixes Work With Pleasure on Long Island Estate While Acting For Scenes in Latest Picture.

Madge Kennedy spent the all too-short Indian summer season on a Long Island duck farm, the location for many scenes in her newest Goldwyn Picture, "Day Dreams," by Cosmo Hamilton, which comes to the Grand Theatre, today, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Those who know Long Island as it usually is in October will agree with Miss Kennedy that there is no more delightful spot in the entire country at that time of the year.

Had the Goldwyn artiste spent weeks in deciding where to pass a month for recreation she could hardly have had a more pleasurable period than she experienced while at work and during her leisure hours on the duck farm. Denied a summer vacation because of the constant demand of Goldwyn exhibitors for Madge Kennedy productions, the prepossessing star now declares she has no regrets and that never has Nature smiled upon her as it did during those four weeks of work and pleasure while enacting the role of Primrose in "Day Dreams."

Numerous incidents in the production show Miss Kennedy surrounded by ducks and geese—swarms of them, borrowed by Clarence G Badger, the director, from nearby farmers to take part in this unusual Goldwyn production. Miss Kennedy's associates say that never has she appeared so happy and free from care as she did while driving the fowl and attending to their wants. It was real fairyland for her, they say, and not the make-believe kind the story calls upon her to inhabit while awaiting her white knight, who will take her to his beautiful fairy castle across the water.

Then there was Rumpelstilzen to add to Miss Kennedy's joys. Rumpie is a goose that proved not only a capable actor but an affable companion for the star. He was her pet between scenes just as he has while the cameraman was cranking. A wise goose is Rumpie, and his wisdom has been rewarded, for Miss Kennedy has taken him to California as a companion for her Russian wolf-hound, Vladimir.

Miss Kennedy was the life of the party at the quaint farmhouse rented by Goldwyn for housing purposes for the company all the time the star and her cast were at work on the duck farm scenes. A clever pianiste Miss Kennedy furnished merry music until bed time. One of the scenes shows the star at the piano accompanying her leading man, John Bowers, the white knight, in play, as he sings of his castle and estate that await her, his fairy princess.

CARMEL SAW NEW YORK BUT CANNOT PROVE IT

Carmel Myers, the lovely star of "A Society Sensation," a Bluebird photodrama of unusual appeal which is being shown at the Grand Theater, has returned to the Bluebird studios from New York.

Although the Myers home in Los Angeles is the original stamping ground of early rising and earlier retiring, Miss Myers and her mother were stepping out in New York and as a result spent most of the days in sleep.

Consequently Carmel has no knowledge with which to prove that she had been in New York.

To overcome this shortage in facts she purchased a book on the train entitled: "New York and Its Environs." This she read faithfully all the way home so that she would at least know where the Flatiron Building loiters.

Carmel is to be seen tonight and Tuesday and Wednesday at the Grand Theatre, in "A Society Sensation."

U-BOATS MISSED CHANCE

The Kaiser's U-Boat commanders missed a fine chance at Balboa off the Southern California coast recently, when Fred Kelsey, one of the players supporting Carmel Myers in "A Society Sensation," her latest Bluebird put out to sea in a row-boat. Kelsey pulls a strong oar and so does the wind, herein rests the plot of this epic. It will be shown at the Grand Theater today, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Robert Ewen and Charles Roberts, Durham, were both injured by their car turning a somersault down a hill when they turned out to let a rig pass.

The Coulson Telephone Co. of Newcastle is being amalgamated with the Bell Telephone Co.

A young son of Chas. Ramsden, Chatham, picked up a bottle of carbolic acid on Erie Beach which he tasted and narrowly escaped poisoning.

Sam Harris, Galt, was fined $200 for having 135 bottles of whiskey in bags in his cellar.

W. Betts, Brocklet, Alta., a returned soldier, has been appointed superintendent of the experimental farm at Lacombe, Alta.

Geo. Shortt, Ottawa, returned soldier, was appointed Sub-Trade Commissioner of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mrs. Kniel and her nine-year-old daughter are dead as the result of the auto which she was driving going over the bank at Niagara Falls, Ont.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE

BY EARL DERR BIGGERS

Copyright, 1913, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

Gleefully Mr Magee started the hermit on his way, and then went to where the girl stood at the foot of the stairs.

They went together to the kitchen, found a pail and filled it with icy water from the pump at the rear of the inn. Inside once more, Mr. Magee remarked thoughtfully:

"Who would have guessed a week ago that today I would be climbing the broad staircase of a summer hotel carrying a pail of water for a lady fair."

They paused on the landing.

"There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio," smiled the girl, "than are dreamed of, even by novelists."

Mr. Magee started. Had she recognized him as the Magee of light fiction? Her face went suddenly grave. She came closer. "I can't help wondering," she said, "which side you are on?"

"Which side of what?" asked Magee.

"Why, of this," she answered, waving her hand toward the office below.

"I don't understand," objected Mr Magee.

"Let's not be silly," she replied. "You know what brought me here. I know what brought you. There are three sides, and only one is honest. I hope, so very much, that you are on that side."

"Upon my word"— began Magee.

"Will it interest you to know," she continued, "I saw the big mayor of Reuton in the village this morning? With him was his shadow, Lou Max. Let's see—you had the first key, Mr Bland the second, the professor the third and I had the fourth. The mayor has the fifth key, of course. He'll be here soon."

"The mayor," gasped Mr. Magee. "Really, I haven't the slightest idea what you mean. I'm here to work"—

"Very well," said the girl coldly, "if you wish it that way." They came to the door of 17, and she took the pail from Mr. Magee's hand. "Thanks."

"'Where are you going, my pretty maid?'" asked Magee, indicating the pail.

"'I'll see you at luncheon, sir,' she said,'" responded Miss Norton, and the door of 17 slammed shut.

Mr. Magee returned to No. 7 and thoughtfully stirred the fire. The tangle of events bade fair to swamp him.

"The mayor of Reuton," he mused, "has the fifth key. What in the name of common sense is going on? It's too much even for melodramatic me." He leaned back in his chair. "Anyhow, I like her eyes," he said. "And I shouldn't want to be quoted as disapproving of her hair either. I'm on her side, whichever it may be."

CHAPTER VIII.

Ghosts of the Summer Crowd.

IT was past 1 o'clock and Mr. Magee with his four mysterious companions stood before the fire in the office, each with an eager eye out for the progress of the hermit, who was preparing the table beside them. Through the kindness of Quimby, the board was resplendent with snowy linen.

"We may seem overeager," commented Professor Bolton. "I have no doubt we do. It is only natural. With nothing to look forward to but the next meal, the human animal attaches a preposterous importance to his feeding. We are in the same cases as the summer guests"—

"Are we?" interrupted Mr. Magee. "Have we nothing but the next meal to look forward to? I think not. I haven't. I've come to value too highly the capacity for excitement of Baldpate inn in December. I look forward to startling things. I expect, before the day is out, at least two gold laced kings, an exiled poet and a lord mayor, all armed with keys to Baldpate inn and stories strange and unconvincing."

"Your adventures of the last twenty-four hours," remarked the professor, smiling wanly, "have led you to expect too much. I have made inquiries of Quimby. There are, aside from his own, but seven keys in all to the various doors of Baldpate inn. Four are here represented. It is hardly likely that the other three will send delegates, and if they should you have but a slim chance for kings and poets. Even Baldpate's capacity for excitement, you see, is limited by the number of little steel keys which open its portals to exiles from the outside world. I am reminded of the words of the philosopher"—

"Well, Peters, old top," broke in Mr. Bland in robust tones, "isn't she nearly off the fire?"

"Now see here," said the hermit, setting down the armful of dishes with which he had entered the office, "I can't be hurried. I'm all upset, as it is. I can't cook to please women—I don't pretend to."

"I'm sure," said Miss Norton sweetly, "that I shall consider your luncheon perfect."

"They get more faultfinding as they get older," replied Mr. Peters unresilantly, glancing at the other woman. Mrs. Norton stared.

"Meaning me, I suppose," she rasped. "Well, don't worry. I ain't going to find anything wrong."

"I ain't asking the impossible," responded Mr. Peters. "I ain't asking you not to find anything wrong. I'm just asking you not to mention it when you do." He retired to the kitchen.

Mrs. Norton caressed her puffs lovingly.

"What that man needs," she said, "is a woman's guiding hand. He's lived alone too long. I'd like to have charge of him for awhile. When I was a girl I was mighty popular. I had a lot of admirers."

"No one could possibly doubt that," Mr. Magee assured her.

"Then Norton came along," she went on, rewarding Magee with a smile, "and said he wanted to make me happy. So I thought I'd let him try. I always brought him up sharp. 'Your great desire,' I told him, 'is to make me happy. I'd keep on the job if I was you!' And he did, to the day of his death. A perfectly lovely man, though careless in money matters. If he hadn't had that ailing I wouldn't be"—

Miss Norton, her cheeks flushed, broke in hurriedly.

"Mamma, these gentlemen can't be at all interested." Deftly she turned the conversation to generalities.

Mr. Peters at last seated the winter guests of Baldpate inn and opened his luncheon with a soup which he claimed to have wrested from a can. This news drew from Professor Bolton a learned discourse on the tinned aids to the hermit of today. He pictured the seeker for solitude setting out for a desert isle with canned foods for his body and canned music for his soul. "Robinson Crusoe," he said, "should be rewritten with a can opener in the leading role." Mrs. Norton gave the talk a more practical turn by bringing up the topic of ptomaine poisoning.

While the conversation drifted on Mr. Magee pondered in silence the weird mesh in which he had become involved. What did it all mean? What brought these people to Baldpate Christmas week? His eyes sought the great safe back of the desk and stayed there a long time. In that safe, he was sure, lay the answer to this preposterous riddle. When his thoughts came back to the table he found Mr Bland eying him narrowly.

The luncheon over, Miss Norton and her mother prepared to ascend to their rooms. Mr. Magee maneuvered so as to meet the girl at the foot of the stairs.

"Won't you come back," he whispered softly, "and explain things to a poor hermit who is completely at sea?"

"What things?" she asked.

"What it all means," he whispered. "Why you wept in the station, why you invented the story of the actress, why you came here to brighten my drab exile—what this whole comedy of Baldpate inn amounts to anyhow?"

She only looked at him with unbelieving eyes.

"You can hardly expect me to credit that," she said. "I must go up now and read mamma into the pleasant land of thin girlish figures that is her afternoon siesta. I may come back and talk to you after awhile, but I don't promise to explain."

"Come back," pleaded Mr. Magee. "That is all I ask."

"A tiny boon," she smiled. "I grant it."

Laughing, Mr. Magee sought the solitude of No. 7.

"After all, I'm here to work," he told himself. "Alarms and excursions and blue eyes must not turn me from my task. Let's see—what was my task? A deep heart searching novel, a novel devoid of rabid melodrama. It becomes more difficult every minute here at Baldpate inn. But that should only add more zest to the struggle. I devote the next two hours to thought."

He pulled his chair up before the blazing hearth and gazed into the red depths. But his thoughts refused to turn to the masterpiece that was to be born on Baldpate. They roamed to far off Broadway; they strolled with Helen Faulkner—the girl he meant to marry if he ever got around to it—along dignified Fifth avenue. Then joyously they trooped to a far more alluring, more human girl, who pressed a bit of cambric to her face in a railway station, while a ginger haired agent peeped through the bars. Soon Mr Magee's thoughts were climbing Baldpate mountain, there to wander in a mystic maze of ghostly figures which appeared from the shadows, holding aloft in triumph gigantic keys. Mr. Magee had slept but little the night before. The quick December dusk filled No 7 when he awoke with a start.

He remembered that he had asked the girl to come back to the office and berated himself to think that probably she had done so only to find that he was not there. Hastily straightening his tie and dashing the traces of sleep from his eyes with the aid of cold water, he ran downstairs.

The great bare room was in darkness save for the faint red of the fire. Before the fireplace sat the girl of the station, her hair gleaming with a new splendor in that light. She looked in mock reproval at Mr. Magee.

"For shame," she said, "to be late at the trysting place."

"A thousand pardons," Mr. Magee replied. "I fell asleep and dreamed of a girl who wept in a railway station, and she was so altogether charming I could not tear myself away."

"I fear," she laughed, "you are old in the ways of the world. A passion for sleep seems to have seized the hermits. The professor has gone to his room for that purpose, and Mr. Bland, his broken heart forgot, slumbers over there." She pointed to the haberdasher inert in a big chair drawn up near the clerk's desk. "Only you and I in all the world awake."

"Pretty lonesome, isn't it?" Mr. Magee glanced over his shoulder at the shadows that crept in on them.

"I was finding it very busy when you came," she answered. "You see, I have known the inn when it was gay with summer people, and as I sat here by the fire I pretended I saw the ghosts of a lot of the people I knew flitting about in the dusk. The rocking chair fleet sailed by"—

"The what?"

"Black flag flying, decks cleared for action—I saw the rocking chair fleet go by." She smiled faintly. "We always called them that. Bitter, unkind old women who sat hour after hour on the veranda and rocked and gossiped and gossiped and rocked.

"And I saw some poor little ghosts weeping in a corner," she went on; "a few that the fleet had run down and sunk in the sea of gossip. A little ghost, whose mother had not been all she should have been, and the fleet found it out, and rocked and whispered and she went away. And a few who were poor—the most terrible of sins—to them the fleet showed no mercy. And a fine proud girl, Myra Thornhill, who was engaged to a man named Kendrick, and who never dared come here again after Kendrick suddenly disappeared, because of the whispered dishonors the fleet heaped upon his head."

"What wicked women!" said Magee.

"The wickedest women in the world," answered the girl. "But every summer resort must have its fleet. I doubt if any other ever had its admiral, though, and that makes Baldpate supreme."

"Its admiral?"

"Yes. He isn't really that, I imagine—sort of a vice or an assistant, or whatever it is, long ago retired from the navy. Every summer he comes here and the place revolves about him. It's all so funny! I wonder if any other crowd attains such heights of snobbishness as that at a summer resort? It's the admiral this, and the admiral that, from the moment he enters the door. Nearly every day the manager of Baldpate has a new picture of the admiral taken, and hangs it here in the hotel. I'll show them to you when it's light. There's one over there by the desk of the admiral and the manager together, and the manager has thrown his arm carelessly over the admiral's shoulder with 'See how well I know him' written all over his stupid face. Oh, what snobs they are!"

"And the fleet?" asked Mr. Magee.

"Worships him. They fish all day for a smile from him. They keep track of his goings and comings, and when he is in the card room playing his silly old game of solitaire they run down their victims in subdued tones so as not to disturb him."

"What an interesting place?" said Mr. Magee. "I must visit Baldpate next summer. Shall—shall you be here?"

"It's so amusing," she smiled, ignoring the question. "You'll enjoy it. And it isn't all fleet and admiral. There's happiness and romance and whispering on the stairs. At night, when the lights are all blazing and the band is playing waltzes in the Casino and somebody is giving a dinner in the grill room and the girls flit about in the shadows, looking too sweet for words—well, Baldpate inn is a rather entrancing spot. I remember those nights very often now."

"Many men have loved you," he said.

"Are you reading my palm?" she asked, laughing.

"No—your face," answered Mr. Magee. "Many men have loved you, for very few men are blind. I am sorry I was not the man on the stair or on the mountain in the moonlight. Who knows? I might have been the favored one for my single summer of joy."

"The autumn always came," smiled the girl.

"It would never have come for me," he answered. "Won't you believe me when I say that I have no part in this strange drama that is going on at Baldpate? Won't you credit it when I say that I have no idea why you and the professor and Mr. Bland are here nor why the mayor of Reuton has the fifth key? Won't you tell me what it all means?"

(To Be Continued.)

CHEMONG REGATTA GREATLY ENJOYED

FINE LIST OF EVENTS RUN OFF UNDER IDEAL CONDITIONS —DUCK RACE FEATURE

THE WEATHER MAN WAS KIND

VERY SUCCESSFUL DANCE CONCLUDED FIRST REGATTA SINCE WAR BEGAN

The events of the Chemong regatta postponed on account of the rain on Thursday were run off on Saturday afternoon under ideal weather conditions. Every race was keenly contested and the crowd thoroughly enjoyed the afternoon.

The feature of the program was the duck race, the concluding event of the afternoon. A live duck was released and an eager crowd of swimmers took up the chase.

The prizes were fairly evenly divided among the contestants.

The Programme

Ladies' Single Canoe—1st Miss Bull; 2nd, Miss A. Eastwood.

Boys' Tandem Canoe—J. Matthews, M. Halpine; 2nd W. McElhiney, H. Ruddy.

Mixed Tandem Skiff—1. R. Russell and Miss J. Eastwood; 2. Mr. Kohn and Miss A. Eastwood.

Ladies' Single Skiff—1st, Miss A. Eastwood, 2nd, Miss Denne.

Men's Tandem Canoe—1st, McClelland and Russell; 2nd, Bradburn and Burrett.

Crab Race, 12 entries—1st, K. McLelland; 2nd, H. Long; 3rd, J. Matthews.

Boys' Swimming—1st J. Matthews; 2nd, H. Dryden.

Ladies' Swimming—1st, Miss Bull, 2nd, Miss Virginia Charles.

Men's Swimming—1st Mr. Kohn; 2nd, J. Desbecker.

Boys' and Girls' Tandem Canoe—1st, Miss Matthews, and R. Dillon; 2nd, Miss Davidson and M. Halpine.

Duck Race—P. Burrett and R. Dixon, tied.

Splendid Dance

One of the most acceptable dances of the season, given in the evening, concluded the first Regatta, since 1914, at Chemong. Lovers of the Terpscheorean tripped the light fantastic on the well waxed floor of the pavilion to their heart's content. First class music and a happy crowd made for a jolly time and all present voted both regatta and dance a huge success in every way.

MILTON WON ELGIN RACE

Course Over Dangerous Country Road—One Machine Rolls Over.

Elgin, Ill., Aug. 23.—With Ralph Mulford, the ranking favorite, thirteen cars were sent away at 12.01 p.m. today in the seventh renewal of the Elgin Road race of 301 miles. The course was over a dangerous country road, 8¼ miles long.

Cliff Durant, of San Francisco, winner of the Santa Momica road race, turned over three times with his machine, while speeding around one of the treacherous turns, but escaped serious injury. His car was wrecked, however, and he withdrew from the race.

Tommy Milton won the 301-mile Elgin automobile road race today. His time was 4.05.17. Milton's average speed was 73.5 miles an hour.

CUP GOES TO GARLAND

Defeats Davis in Men's Tennis Singles in Three Straights.

Southampton, N. Y., Aug. 23.—Charles S. Garland, jr., of Philadelphia, defeated Willis E. Davis, of San Frncisco, 6-4, 6-8, 6-3 in the final and cup round of the Meadow Club Men's Singles here to-day. Davis yesterday defeated Norman E. Brooks, the Australian tennis star, in the semi-finals.

INVENTION FOR SHAMROCK IV.

Sir Thomas Lipton Hopes to Win Yachting Trophy.

London, August 25.—Through a secret invention Sir Thomas Lipton hopes to attain a victory over the United States in the next America Cup yacht race with his speed king, Shamrock IV. Sir Thomas is maintaining the utmost secrecy regarding the invention, but states that the Shamrock IV. will be a far more powerful racing machine when she crosses the line in the first of the cup races. "I regard victory as a moral certainty" is the way the noted yachtsman expresses his confidence in the event.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Said:
"After all what a man does with his money is to invest, and there is no better way to in it than in Life Insurance.
As an ESTATE BUILDER there is nothing to equal Life Insurance.
TAKE THE FOLLOWING ACTUAL RESULT
A young man sixteen years of age took out a 15 years Endowment (No. 210380) in the Sun Life of Canada, which matured on the first of April. This young man paid annually $66.30 for fifteen years and he now has, through that investment, an immediate estate of $3495.00 in case of death.
DO YOU KNOW THAT THIS AMOUNTS TO ALMOST 18 PER CENT COMPOUND INTEREST ON EVERY DOLLAR PAID?
No wonder Sir Wilfrid said—and he might have added (no better place than the Sun Life of Canada)—"there is no better way to invest it than in LIFE INSURANCE."

HERRON WINS THE U.S. GOLF CHAM.

DEFEATED ROBERT T. JONES OF ATLANTA BY FIVE AND FOUR AT PITTSBURG.

JONES FELL IN AFTERNOON PLAY

VICTOR CARRIED IN TRIUMPH ON SHOULDERS OF MEMBERS OF OAKMOUNT CLUB.

Pittsburg, Aug. 23.—Davidson Herron led Bobby Jones by two holes when they had completed the first nine in the final round for the national amateur golf championship today.

They halved the fifteenth in fives, and Herron lost the sixteenth when he missed a very short putt for a four.

Herron was one under par going out. He played a wonderful game and his lead of two holes at the ninth was well earned. The Oakmont golfer broke a number of times coming in, and while Jones was not in the thirties he held closer to the pars than did Herron.

Herron increased his lead to three holes at the 11th, but Jones squared the match at the 16th. He won the 13th, 14th and 16th.

At the 13th Herron's iron was in a trap and Jones won with a par three. Herron hooked to a trap at the 14th and broke his mashie off clean near the head of his club in an effort to get out. The ball stayed in the pit, and after he had played five he conceded the hole to Jones, who was dead in three.

Jones squared the match coming in and they were all even at the 18th hole. Cards, morning, in:

Jones ....456345454—40—38—78
Herron ....545465554—43—36—79

Wins Championship.

Herron wins gold championship, six and five.

S. Davidson Herron of the home club won the national amateur golf championship of the United States by defeating Robert T. Jones of Atlanta by five and four.

Herron shot a brand of golf and it was impossible for the Georgia youth to follow and he finally cracked.

The break came at the 29th and 30th holes. Herron was leading three up as they came to the 29th and Jones trapped his second and nervously overplayed his third and lost the hole. They were both safely off the 30th tee. Jones was forced to play the odd and he topped his shot into a bunker. After playing three shots he was still in the bunker and conceded the hole.

They walked to the 31st tee with Herron leading by four holes. Herron struck his iron to the green, 164 yards away and Jones was in a trap. Bobby played his second over the green to another trap, got on in three and was down in four, but he lost the hole when Herron's approach putt was dead and he was out of sight in three.

The match was then dormie and the players halved the next hole in perfectly played fours. This gave Herron the championship by a five and four score.

This tournament is the first in which Herron has ever figured prominently. He is the second member of the Oakmount Club and the third Pittsburg golfer to win the title. When he sank his last putt the Oakmount Club members swarmed around him and lifted him upon their shoulders.

THREE HUNDRED MILE HORSE RACE

ENDURANCE SADDLE EVENT IS PLANNED BY ARABIAN HORSE CLUB.

HELD DURING MONTH OF OCT.

WILL CONTINUE FIVE DAYS—STIMULATE INTEREST IN BREEDING HORSES.

New York, Aug. 25.—A 300-mile endurance race for saddle horses is being planned by the Arabian Horse Club of America and will be held during the month of October. The race, which will be one of the most remarkable ever held in this section of the country, will start at Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., and finish at Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass.

Details regarding the novel event became known a few days ago at Camp Devens. Major-Gen. H. P. McCain has acceded to the request of President W. R. Brown of the Arabian Club, to have the race finish at the camp. Three cash prizes totalling $1,750 will be offered to the winners. Some of the best horse flesh in the country will compete and the winner will receive a cash prize of $1,000 and a silver cup on which will be engraved the name of the winning horse and that of the owner. The second prize is $500 and show money will amount to $250.

According to the plans of the race, it will start on October 14 and will continue for five days. It is for the purpose of stimulating interest in the breeding of cavalry horses throughout the country and also to determine the perfrmances of various types of horses under the severe conditions of a forced march. One of the horses that have been entered in the event is the famous Kingfisher, owned by Col. Frank Thompkins.

The race is open to all who will comply with the conditions, which, subject to modification by the judges, are in brief, as follows:

The distance approximately 300 miles, is to be covered at the rate of sixty miles a day for sixe consecutive days, rain or shine, each horse carying 200 pounds, inclusive of rider and equipment. Equipment will be optional.

WEIGHT FOR TEN ROUNDS CHANGED

BOXING BOUTS AT TORONTO ARENA TO-MORROW NIGHT.

Toronto, Aug. 25.—The weight for the ten-round battle between "Bobo" Ebor and Dick Atkins at the Arena on Tuesday night has been changed. "Hank" Moos, Ebor's manager, insisting on 122 pounds ringside instead of the 118 pounds at three o'clock in the afternoon as Atkins asked. At that, the latter weight is the more reasonable inasmuch as it is [illegible] as the bantam limit in Great Britain. One hundred and twenty-two pounds ringside is the Yankee featherweight limit. At that, Atkins would be well advised to make no attempt to come down to weight but to go in at catch weights. He would only forfeit $50, which amount "Hank" Moos wants Atkins to put up that he will make the weight. [illegible] against Ebor because of weakness occasioned by reducing, and the fans are wondering whether Atkins will not share the same fate for the same reason.

Jack "Twin" Sullivan wires from Buffalo that he is all set for his bout with Jones and expects to repeat. Soldier Jones is saying very little, but he is thinking a whole lot—thinking of the raw deal he has handed to him in his bout with Sullivan in Buffalo. It should be a ding-dong battle. Ketchell has shown that he is Irish Kennedy's equal, if not superior, and he should make the Irish one step lively in their six-round tilt. McCracken and Lisner can be depended upon to furnish their usual stirring battle, while a lively bout should be that between Joyce and Hermn.

The bill looks a very promising one and there should be plenty slugging and clever stuff.

HUGHES TO COACH MONTREAL A.A.A.

FORMER INSIDE WING OF McGILL'S RUGBY CLUB TRANSFERS HIS ALLEGIANCE ...

ROSS LAING MAY FOLLOW SUIT

PLANS FOR SEASON TO BE DECIDED AT EXECUTIVE MEETING IN SEPTEMBER

Montreal, Aug. 25.—That Billy Hughes, former inside wing for the champion McGill Rugby Club, will coach the Montreal Amateur Athletic Association team this season is now practically assured. Negotiations have been carried on between Hughes and Billy Ewing, president of the Montreal Rugby Club, for some time, and the position will likely be accepted by Billy Hughes.

He is confident that with the available material in Montreal, the winged wheel club will send out a stronger team than for many seasons. There are several McGill graduates ready to play with M. A. A. A., and Hughes has already invited them to turn out.

Ross Laing, who played outside wing for McGill in 1913 and 1914, is now a graduate and available for the Montreal team. Charlie Langlois, the former Ottawa College player, is another who has expressed a desire to play, while Dick Dooner, who played goal with the McGill hockey team last winter, will not be back at the university this season and may turn out with M.A.A.A.

These, with several members who have returned from overseas, form the nucleus of a good line-up, while others who played with the club during the autumn of 1914 and 1915 are also available. Art Brophy, who played on the half line, has been keeping in condition all summer by playing tennis and will likely turn out.

Billy Hughes is of the opinion that practices by electric light are of little use, and has advised the executive of the club to hold afternoon workouts and serve a dinner to the players each night after practice.

Plans for the season will be decided on at a meeting of the executive of the club early next month, and the first workout will be held about the middle of September, the same dates as that chosen by McGill Club.

The Calendar.

The month of January always begins on the same day of the week as October and the same is true of April and July, September and December. February, March and November also begin on the same day of the week. This, however, is only true in normal years of 365 days. A century can never begin on Wednesday, Friday or Saturday. Furthermore, the ordinary year ends on the same day of the week as that on which it begins.

Speedy.

"Yes, in teaching stenography, we are strong on accuracy," said the business college professor. "How are you on speed?" "Well, the last girl we graduated married her employer in three weeks."

A Warning.

The bride-elect had been showing her presents to a party of admiring friends. "And I've got such a good idea," she gushed. "I'm so afraid people will discover we are newly-married that I've made Jack promise that when—when we go away tomorrow he'll treat me in public just as if he had no thought for anyone except himself." A middle-aged friend shook her head. "Don't," she said in tones of sad wisdom. "I tried that plan — and my husband never got over it!"

His Motive.

"How modestly she dresses, and how sensibly!" "Yes; that woman will do anything to attract attention."

A GREAT DETECTIVE.

The Man Who Broke Up the Mollie Maguires.

Like a voice from an age long gone came the word only recently that James McParlan was dead—dead in Denver, Col., at the age of seventy-five. In his lifetime he was acclaimed the greatest of detectives and his fame will rest upon two wonderful exploits, more than thirty years apart, that stamped out crime in two widely separated sections of the country — Pennsylvania and Idaho.

He was the central figure in many a story of fiction, and the novel of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, "In the Valley of Fear," is supposed to have been based upon incidents in this plucky detective's life. Every reader of detective stories will recall how the fictional sleuth concealed his papers in the heel of his shoe. As a matter of fact, it was a trick first employed by McParlan and eagerly approriated by the writers.

When he did it forms the central feature of one of the most romantic narratives in picturesque history—McParlan's heroism in running down the Molly Maguires in Pennsylvania and bringing eleven of them to the scaffold. This was in the years 1873 and 1876 and McParlan was a Pinkerton man.

The Molly Maguires were the Bolshevists of their day. Unlike that breed of the present, however, they were more closely and compactly knit together and their organization was secret. Passwords, grips and all the paraphernalia of a fraternal society they had. How the organization began has never been satisfactorily determined.

Franklin B. Gowen, president of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal & Iron Co., a Philadelphian, made up his mind that this terrorism in the anthracite regions should be stopped. He called upon the famous Pinkertons, then in the heydey of their achievements, and McParlan was assigned. He was then a young man, in his twenties, and he had been a detective only a year. In 1871 he had lost all his belongings in the Chicago fire and while he was casting about for something to do his opportunity came. This was in 1873 and the young man hurried to the disaffected district.

Assuming the name of James McKenna, McParlan stepped off the train at Port Clinton, Pa., and looked about him for lodging. Nearby in a tavern he heard sounds of drunken revelry. He had come across a chapter of the Mollies. Like a brother they took him in and his ready wit made him popular.

From that time on he was a member of the organization, learned its secrets and so won the confidence of these desperate men that they made him their secretary. He took notes of all he discovered, jotting them down sometimes with washing bluing or soot and water because he did not dare to buy a bottle of ink. He kept his employers informed of all that went on, and it was said that only three men knew McParlan's mission.

For three years the detective made his investigations, working as a miner a part of the time and always sharing all the secrets of the Mollies. Then one day the net was spread and seventy persons were arrested. McParlan's work, however, was not ended, for he still had to testify against his late companions.

In the period awaiting the court proceedings the detective's life was threatened many times, but McParlan had the satisfaction of sending eleven to their executions; six in Pottsville, four in Maunch Chunk and one in Luzerne county. This was in 1877 and Molly Maguireism was wiped out.

McParlan moved to Denver, and thirty years passed.

Then came tales in the newspapers of new outrages by a new gang resembling Mollie Maguires in Idaho. Dynamiting and murder went on unchecked in the Cœur d'Alene district. A cageful of miners was dropped 1,400 feet down the shaft in the Independence mine, fourteen miners were blown to pieces by high explosives at Cripple Creek and in December, 1905, former Governor Frank Steunenberg was murdered as he was entering his home in Caldwell, Idaho.

McParlan went to investigate. It was the story of the old days in Pennsylvania all over again. The detective obtained his evidence and numerous arrests and convictions were made, the arrests including Harry Orchard, Haywood, Moyer, Steve Adams, Pettibone, Vincent St. John and a long line of men who had cast disrepute upon honest workers.

The Terrible Topper.

The case against the topper hat was summed up many years ago by Mark Lemon, the first editor of Punch. "It is hot in summer," he said; "it is not warm in winter; it does not shade from the sun; it does not shelter from the rain; it is ugly and expensive; you cannot wear it in a railway carriage; it is always in your way in a drawing room; if you sit on it you crush it, yet it will not save your skull in a fall; it will not go into a portmanteau; it is too hard to roll up, too soft to sit upon; it rusts with the sea air; it spots with the rain; if it is good, you are sure to have it taken by mistake at a soiree; if it is bad, you are set down as a swindler."

Referendum.

The referendum has been defined as "the referring of legislation to the people for final rejection or acceptance," and the initiative as "the giving to the people the right of proposing legislation to be acted upon."

Traditions of Islam.

The Bedouin tribes of North Africa are perhaps as impervious to the influence of modern civilization as any people in the world. Since the French took control of North Africa these wild tribes have been, supposedly, under military discipline and guardianship, but they have maintained their own tribal organizations and almost complete independence, so far as their actual lives are concerned.

They follow the traditions of Islam and their dwellings, their furnishings (which are few and far between) and their clothing date back to the days of the Bible.

GEORGE V. WORTHY KING OF EMPIRE

SETS COMMENDABLE EXAMPLE TO HIS PEOPLE AND THE WORLD AT LARGE

80,000 ORANGEMEN FOUGHT

UPHELD GRAND OLD UNION JACK AND FOUGHT AND DIED FOR WORLD LIBERTY.

Capt. (Rev.) W. C. Riddiford, lately returned from the war front in France and Flanders, conducted both services at Park Street Baptist Church yesterday. The reverend gentleman held the pastorate of this church some years ago, and consequently had the pleasure of addressing many who had enjoyed his earnest ministrations when located in Peterborough. For near four years he has served as chaplain in the great war, and last evening he punctured his discourse on "Wounded Stripes, Their Mission, Meaning and Message" with references to personal experiences as comforter of Canadian wounded. Incidentally, he also referred to his having been privileged to peach in Spurgeon's great tabernacle, London, England in June 21st, this year.

Orangemen's Part.

Capt. (Rev.) Riddiford handled his subject in an exceedingly forceful manner, and drove home to his hearers a touching visualization of the wounding of Canadian soldiers in the Empire's great fight to suppress that principle of German oppression, which had rocked the cradle of Protestantism the past 40 years.

Briefly touching on the loyalty of the Orange organization, the reverent gentleman declared his pride in belonging to an association which had contributed 80,000 men from its ranks to uphold the grand old Union Jack and to fight and die for that liberty and freedom which Jesus Christ came to give to the world.

King George, he said, who had prohibited wines and liquor at banquets given in his honor at home and at the front, and who read a chapter of the Bible every day of his life, sets a commendable example to the world, and is indeed a king worth being loyal to. A better king never ruled this mighty British Empire than he. In eulogizing the Prince of Wales as a worthy heir apparent to the throne of a great and glorious race, he expressed unqualified pleasure in reading that His Royal Highness, on landing on Canadian soil, had declared he came as a Canadian.

Worthy of Homage.

The visiting divine had unbounded admiration for the sacrifices made Canada's womanhood. From March 17 to 26, in 1918, he said, when the British were looking for the German's to break through in Flanders any day, when they stood practically in danger of being driven back into the English Channel, those heroic nursing sisters one and all declared for facing the danger with the men and they deserve the Empire's undying homage.

Continuing, he said, words could not fittingly express the heroism and pluck of British wounded whose wound stripes remind us of the sacrifice they were willing to make for the liberties of the world, and in maintenance of Christianity so dear to all Britishers. One cannot imagine the terrible choking suffering from ordinary war gas, nor the horrible flesh-tearing torture resulting from mustard gas—that kind of kulture Germans resorted to in the hope of world domination.

The Message.

In conclusion, Capt. (Rev.) Widdifield urged that the wound stripes worn by returned men should impel retrospection of the sacrifec made by those glorious dead who sleep beneath the poppies of Flanders, conveys a message of hope that appreciation of their great sacrifice for humanity, will not be found wanting, and surely, he concluded, that message will not go unheeded.

LABOR DAY TO HEALEY FALLS.

CONSIDERABLE DAMAGE IS CAUSED BY FIRE AT SAW MILL

Blaze Started by Motor Damaged Engine and Destroyed Shed.

A very dangerous fire broke out about 1 o'clock this afternoon at E. H. Mann's sawmill on Aylmer street near the G.T.R. station. The fire was caused by a motor, and before it was discovered the blaze had gained considerable headway. The engine was damaged and the shed protecting it ruined. The fire was extinguished before it reached a quantity of lumber piled in the yard. The damage has not yet been reckoned, but is supposed to be considerable.

MR. TILLOTSON LEAVES CITY

Popular Supervisor Of Playgrounds Starts For Home In Pittsburg.

Mr. Roy E. and Mrs. Tillotson have left the city and will spend a week in Oberlin, Ohio, where Mr. Tillotson spent his college days, before returning to their home in Pittsburg. Mr. Tillotson, who has acted as the general supervisor for the public playgrounds, just closed for the season, leaves behind him a host of friends in the city. Peterborough was certainly fortunate in securing his services in that capacity. He was here two years ago, and spent last year in the American navy, the experience being of inestimable value to him in his vocation. The best recommendation that he can carry away with him from this city is the standing invitation from the Playgrounds Association to return next year.

FOUR-YEAR-OLD CLAIRVOYANT

Has Gift of Second Sight And Is Not Popular With Playmates.

The four-year-old son of Mrs. James of Exeter, is credited with clairvoyant power. The mother states tht he can describe scenery when he has his back turned to it, can tell the contents of a locked diary, and can quote from the pages of a closed book. He is not popular among other children, she states, because if one of them has stolen anything he can identify the child. Mrs. James believes in astrology and the theory of reincarnation.

OBITUARY

JOSEPH TOUGAS

The death took place at an early hour this morning, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. J. Murray, of Mr. Joseph Tougas. He was born in Quebec Province, 62 years ago, coming here about 38 years ago, where he has resided ever since.

Deceased leaves to mourn his loss two sons, William of Toronto, and Frank of Peterborough who recently returned from overseas. Also three daughters, Mrs. George Start, Mrs. J. Murray of this city and Mrs. Martin Lamb of Windsor.

Deceased was a member of Court Little John, C. O. F.

The funeral will take place on Wednesday afternoon, at 3 p.m., service at 2 p.m. from the residence of his daughter, Mrs. John Murray.

The many friends and acquaintances and respectfully invited to attend.

JAMES A. STOREY.

The death occurred yesterday morning of James A. Storey at his home, 561 Aylmer street, after an illness of several months' duration. The deceased, who was 61 years old, was born in Omemee. He lived for some time in Smith township, and came to Peterborough about seventeen years ago, where he had acted as agent for the Farmers' Mutual Life Insurance Co. and dealt in real estate.

He is survived by one son, Merton, of Keene, two daughters, Mrs. W. C. Dawson, of Bailieboro, and Margaret, at home; one brother, Evan Stewart, of Omemee, three sisters, Mrs. John T. Switzer, Omemee, Mrs. W. C. Switzer, city, and Mrs. Alex. Laing, Omemee, and his mother, Mrs. David Storey, of Omemee. His wife predeceased him two years.

Mr. Storey was also an active member of the Peterborough Exhibition Board.

The funeral will be held from his late residence to Little Lake Cemetery at 3 p.m. Tuesday.

MRS. HELEN DELAFOSSE.

The funeral took place this morning at 9 o'clock of Clara Helen DelaFosse, wife of F. C. DelaFosse, of Montreal, from St. Peter's Cathedral to St. Peter's cemetery.

She is survived by her husband, two children, Mary and John, her mother and three sisters, Maude, of Toronto, and Maisie and Anne, city, and three brothers, George, Detroit, Harry, Toronto, and Grover city. Deceased was a daughter-in-law of Mr. F. M. DelaFosse chairman of the local Library Board.

Papers found on the body of the man found dead on the railroad track at Thorold indicated that he was C. Romano, Toronto.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

RICH—HENRY

A very pretty but quiet wedding took place at George Street Methodist parsonage at 1 o'clock today, when Edward Rich, lately returned from overseas, was united in the holy bond of matrimony to Miss Fannie Henry, daughter of W. W. Henry, of Bethune street, Peterborough, formerly of Clark Township. The bride looked very charming in a pearl grey silk dress with hat to match. After a dainty luncheon, served at the home of the bride's mother, the young couple left by the G.T.R. train for a short honeymoon to Kingston and Ottawa. On return home they will reside at the corner of Park and Boliver streets.

Miss Edith Bolwell, of Toronto, spent the week-end the guest of her brother, A. J. Bolwell, Ashburnham.

Masters Hewson and Bruce Bolwell left this afternoon with Miss Edith Bolwell to spend a few days in Toronto.

POSTIES TO PARADE IN UNIFORM

Have Received Permission to Wear Working Dress in Parade on Labor Day.

Some time ago the posties sent a request to the Government that they be allowed to wear their uniforms in the labor parade on Labor day. A letter has been received at the local post office from the Postmaster General, granting their request.

The local posties are now prepared to take their place in the parade next Monday dressed in their official uniforms.
